State Police say they also want to question him about the slaying of Daniel Porter of Concord, Mass., and Porter's missing companion, Susan Petz of Skokie, Ill. But Garrow has refused to answer questions since he was captured Aug. 9 near the home of a sister.

Garrow was brought down by shotgun fire when cornered in a field in Witherbee. While doctors said he is fit for release, they said four pellets have not been removed and the wounds have been allowed to heal-over.

"Take it easy, come on, just get in the car," a trooper said in Plattsburgh when Garrow awkwardly tried to cover his face while entering one of three cars that escorted him to Lake Pleasant.

About 20 whispering spectators were on hand when Garrow arrived in this sunlit Adirondack hamlet, within 20 miles of the place near Speculator where Domblewski was slain. The Domblewski slaying was the first murder in the county in 45 years, authorities said.

Sheriff Arthur Parker said he was doubling the jail guard for Garrow, who eluded a search party of 200 for 11 days after Domblewski's murder.

The 37-year-old bakery mechanic from Syracuse was one of two prisoners in the two-story, brick building.

Garrow, paroled from a 10-20 year prison sentence in 1968, had been arrested in 1961 and charged with assaulting a high school football player and raping his 16-year-old girlfriend.

The cost of Garrow's 40-day hospitalization was $3,500, according to Howard Read, executive director of the Champlain Valley Physicians Medical Center.

Education:

Confusing Myth And Reality

BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP)- Education "confidently confused myth and reality" during the late 1950's and early 60's, the president of Bowdoin College said Wednesday.

Speaking at a convocation which officially opened the 172nd academic year of Maine's oldest institution of higher learning, Dr. Roger Howell Jr. said education "offered to the public a vision of the educational structure as society's problem solver.

"Set against all the brazen and confident rhetoric, the actual achievements look very hollow," he said. "By promising too much, or rather by promising the wrong things, the educational establishment created a climate of great expectations and reaped a harvest of cynicism and disillusion."

Howell said educators must restate their purposes, "more modestly and accurately than we did in the boom years," and reaffirm the validity of their faith in rational processes of thought.

"We might well begin by abandoning the assumption that education by itself solves problem," the Bowdoin president said. "It does not.

"But, properly conceived, it can do something equally important; it can equip people with the mental agility to be problem solvers."

A "mood of cynical disillusion" with education has swept the nation, he said, and the educational establishment itself must bear a large share of the blame.

Park Plaza Renewal Must Meet Environmental Standards

BOSTON (AP)- An environmental impact study may be the major stumbling block to the future of the Park Plaza Urban renewal project in Boston's Park Square area.

Lewis S. W. Crampton, commissioner of the Department of Community Affairs, said he expects to grant "conditional approval" to the $266 million project by Sept. 28 after the Boston Redevelopment Authority agrees to a list of 12 conditions.

The conditions set down by Crampton include checks on the amount of money to be paid for land acquired for the project; a new project development scheduled which will provide the BRA with the option of selecting a new developer should Boston Urban Associates fail to comply with the schedule; and a provision that payments made in lieu of taxes be no less than actual real estate taxes on the same property.

Crampton said both the BRA and the developer have indicated no serious opposition to those conditions.

He added, however, that he does expect opposition to the requirement that the developer submit a full environmental impact report:

"A detailed statement which will describe the nature and extent to which Park Plaza will affect Boston's environment.

"We will insist in our finding that all feasible measures have been taken to avoid or minimize the impact of this development upon the natural environment and quality of life in Boston," Crampton said.

He added that the state will pay $75,000 to $100,000 for that required study.

Cable TV Course Topic

Cable television will be discussed at an eight-session course sponsored by the Institute for Governmental Services of the University of Massachusetts.

The course, which will begin Monday, Oct. 1, is offered to local government representatives and to appointees to citizen CATV advisory committees. Whitewood Stamps, a Newton consulting firm for cable television, is organizing the course for the UMass Institute.

Course instruction will center on the basics of cable communications: regulations, economics, and social uses; and the course is designed to prepare local officials and citizens for franchising processes in their communities.

The eight three-hour sessions will be taught by personnel from the financial community, the Massachusetts Cable Commission, the cable industry, universities, and consulting groups. Sessions will be: Mondays and Wednesdays, Oct. 1, 3, 10, 15, 17, 24, 29, and 31; and all will be from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the Education Development Center, 55 Chapel St., Newton.

West Point Grad Still Shunned

By LYNNE OLSON
Associated Press Writer

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)- Lt. James J. Pelosi, graduated from West Point in June after enduring 19 months of a now-outlawed punishment called silence, says he is still shunned by some of his comrades-in-arms.

"I thought I would leave the nonsense that went on at West Point. But other people apparently didn't feel that way," said the second lieutenant who is undergoing basic officer training here with 150 U.S. Military Academy classmates.

In a rambling, often guarded interview during a break in training this week, the boyish-looking 22-year-old said the silence treatment is being used only by West Point graduates, and not by nonacademy officers.

"The flak is not on a frequent basis. There's no concerted effort on the part of everybody here to enforce silence," he said. "A small number of West Point classmates just totally ignored me."

At another point in the interview, the slim, bespectacled, officer said, "My car was vandalized a little. The tires were slashed, and there was glass under them." As soon as he made the statement, he turned to another subject.

Pelosi, a West Hempstead, N.Y., native, made national headlines this summer when he revealed that he had been a victim of silence, a rarely used punishment exacted by cadets who believe a classmate has escaped ajust punishment on a legal technicality.

In 1971, Pelosi was convicted of cheating under the academy's honor code, but the charge was dismissed by the West Point superintendent on grounds that a staff officer had prejudiced the case. Unsatisfied, his classmates voted to invoke silence.

Pelosi became a nonentity to his classmates. They did not talk to him or associate with him. He was forced to live and dine alone. He could not take part in class activities.

For 19 months, Pelosi lived alone with his punishment, refusing even to tell his parents the full story. When his ordeal became public, Pelosi said he intended to remain in the military, despite West Point tradition that silence lasts forever. He was hopeful it would disappear once he began regular Army work.

Last week West Point's cadet honor committee, a target of criticism over the Pelosi incident, abolished the tradition of silence. At the time, one cadet was enduring the punishment. Pelosi regards the action as vindication, but he doesn't think it will change his life.

"I'd be foolish if I thought the silence was over," he said. "You can't legislate social conduct. You can't compel someone to associate with someone else. You can't tell someone to talk when they don't want to."

From the beginning, Pelosi has had two lawyers. One of them, Edwin Cooperman, said a lawsuit will be considered if the silence does not cease.

Pelosi was extremely hesitant to be interviewed before agreeing to meet at a motel off the base. He said his reluctance mainly stemmed from fear that more publicity would further anger West Point graduates.

"The cadets who imposed the silence were upset with me because of the publicity. They thought I was out for attention," he said in a steady, unemotional tone that charterized the interview.

Wheaton's Only Male Not Worried

NORTON, Mass. (AP)- There are 1,176 students enrolled at Wheaton College this year, of whom 1,175 are women.

That leaves Thomas Sullivan, a sophomore from Bowdoin College in Maine who is attending the almost all girl's school for one year as part of the Twelve College Exchange Program started in 1969. Contrary to the expectations of some of Tom's Bowdoin contemporaries, life at a female college is not all ogling the braless and fending off the femmes.

Tom didn't want it to be. He applied to the exchange program because it offers courses in early childhood education not available to Bowdoin. Wheaton also has an on-campus nursery school where Tom plans to teach part-time next semester.

He had expected about eight males on campus at Wheaton this year, but as things turned out, "There were just hundreds of girls and me."

"A lot of guys at Bowdoin talked about coming, but I guess I was the only one with a real reason to come," he said.

"I mean, they'd only be coming because it is an all-girls school. I needed the courses."

Despite his minority status, underscored by the fact that, as he points out, "They couldn't give me a roommate," Tom claims he's happy at Wheaton and doesn't worry about "lasting the year."

House Upholds Minimum Wage Bill

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)- The House has upheld President Nixon's vote of a bill increasing the minimum wage to $2.20 an hour and extending coverage to 7 million new workers, including household maids.

The 259-164 vote Wednesday was 23 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed to override the vote. It gave Nixon a perfect six-for-six batting average in vetoes sustained this year.

Nixon vetoed the bill on grounds it would increase unemployment and add to inflationary pressures.

After the vote, AFL-CIO President George Meany said the defeat of the bill "is in reality a victory for exploitation and greed."

"The will of the majority has been thwarted and the worst paid workers in America will continue to subsidize their greedy employers," Meany said.

The bill would have hiked the minimum wage from $1.60 an hour to $2 this year and $2.20 next year.

A determined lobbying effort by organized labor was unable to cut deeply enough into the conservative opposition to produce a two-thirds majority.

Fifty-one Republicans deserted the administration and voted to override. But 29 Democrats offset the less, joining with 135 Republicans to give Nixon a comfortable margin.

The vote, which wiped out a three-year effort in Congress to increase the minimum wage-last raised in 1966-left the future of the legislation in doubt.

Nixon and most Republicans who took part in the debate said they would support a more moderate bill and urged the Democrats on the Education and Labor Committee to bring one out promptly.

But Rep. John H. Dent, D-Pa., chairman of the subcommittee handling the bill, said he would leave Congress before he would bring out a bill containing Nixon's recommendation for a lower wage scale for teenage workers.

The lack of such a differential was one of the major factors influencing Nixon's decision to veto the bill.

New England States Ask 200-mile Fishing Limit

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — Representatives from four New England states appealed to Congress Wednesday to preserve the region's fishing industry by establishing a 200-mile offshore fishing limit.

The legislators and state officials from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Maine agreed that immediate action is needed to check uncontrolled fishing by foreign fleets.

Although each of the four states has claimed jurisdiction up to 200 miles off its coast, representatives acknowledged that none has the resources needed for enforcement.

"The cost to each state to equip boats and man them would be prohibitive," said Capt. Robert H. Lowry, chief fishing law enforcement officer for the Rhode Island Department of Natural Resources.

Frank Grice, director of the Massachusetts Department of Marine Fisheries, said the states' action was primarily intended to bring the problems of the fishing industry before the general public.

"It was never the intention of the legislature, or Gov. Francis Sargent when he signed the bill, to take on the Federal Government," Grice said.

Massachusetts Rep. Richard Silva, R-Gloucester, said the bill was designed to "embarrass the Federal Government into realizing the states were going to act if it didn't." Ten state legislators and officials attending the conference spent nearly three hours discussing the plight of the New England fisheries.

Massachusetts Rep. Hank Walker, R-Newburyport, said foreign domination of fishing off the continental shelf has reached the point where the United States' share of the catch has dwindled to 14 per cent.

"The type of fishing the foreign fleets do is pulse fishing, where they follow a school of fish until they've depleted it," he said.

The conference was organized by Maine Rep. Elmont S. Tyndale, R-Kennebunkport, who said its purpose was to try to stop the Federal Government from "dragging its heels" on the question of extended fishing jurisdiction.

Participants urged support of the Magnuson-Studds bill that would set a 200-mile offshore limit, but none appeared overly optimistic about its chances of passage.

Conferees also adopted a resolution calling on the International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries to insist that limits be set on fishing grounds off New England.

The 18-member international group, which meets next month in Ottawa, Canada, has been unsuccessful in the past in setting conservation measures, the New Englanders said.

Some speakers suggested the reasons for Washington's refusal to extend its fishing jurisdiction beyond the present 12-mile limit may be a reluctance to offend other nations.

"We have to think of the New England fisherman first and the foreign nations second," said Charles G. Douglas III, legal counsel to New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson.

Grice said tuna interests on the West Coast and shrimpers on the Gulf Coast have long been opposed to extended fishing limits.

He said these positions may be changing as tuna and shrimp fishermen begin to realize that their best interests may lie in licensing programs in fishing jurisdictions claimed by other nations.

Commissioner Spencer Apollonio of the Maine Sea and Shore Fisheries Department cited the Navy's opposition to extended limits because of its longstanding commitment to free navigation.

Nixon: No Compromise On Watergate Tapes

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon filed a hard-line response in the Watergate tapes Wednesday case that hinted broadly that he will not accept a compromise proposed by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

The court of appeals, in a unique memorandum issued last week, had suggested that the President, his attorneys and special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox listen to the White House tapes and determine among themselves what portions were evidence required by the grand jury probing the Watergate cover-up.

The court said that because Cox is an official of the executive branch, the suggested compromise could avoid the constitutional issue of separation of powers that has emerged in the legal dispute over the tapes. The court gave Cox and the President until Thursday to respond.

A spokesman for Cox said Wednesday afternoon that lawyers from the prosecutor's office had met with White House attorneys to discuss the appeals court proposal. He declined to say what was said or what conclusions were reached.

In its final written argument to the court of appeals Wednesday, White House lawyers said the President, recognizing the unique character of Watergate, appointed the special prosecutor and gave him broad powers.

"But he has not delegated to the special prosecutor, and will not abrogate, his constitutional duties and prerogatives," the brief said. "That would move beyond accommodation to irresponsibility."

The determined wording indicated strongly that Nixon would turn down the appeals court's compromise proposal.

Shortly after the court advanced the compromise last week, Cox expressed willingness to follow its suggestion. TheWhite House has yet to make any formal response.

The brief filed Wednesday is part of the White House appeal of an order from U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica directing the President to permit him to listen to the tapes in private to determine what portions of the tapes the grand jury can hear.

Cox wanted to let the grand jury hear nine White House tape recordings of Nixon's conversations that pertain to the Watergate scandal.

So besides the White House, Cox also differed with Sirica's ruling. He asked the appeals court to order the tapes turned over to the grand jury or to permit the prosecutor to hear them along with Sirica.

Negotiations Breakdown Over Newspaper Strike

POVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Attempts by a Superior Court judge to move toward a temporary settlement in the Providence newspaper strike broke down Wednesday when the two sides in the dispute disagreed on limitations of pickets. Superior Court Judge Christopher Del Sesto proposed that striking members of The Newspaper Guild, Local 41, return to work and the Journal Co., publisher of the Journal-Bulletin newspapers, allow the court to decide the issue of retroactive pay for employes covered by the guild.

Retroactive pay was cited by the Guild as the issue behind the strike which began last Thursday. The company had followed through on a threat not to give employes retroactive pay increases for the period of Jan. 1 to March 31 since the Guild did not accept the company's contract offer by a May 23 deadline.

Del Sesto's steps to act as a mediator came in the third day of a hearing on a request by the company for an injunction against mass picketing by the Guild.

The Guild immediately accepted his proposal, but the company rejected it. Instead, it proposed that Del Sesto grant an injunction and the company would begin daily negotiations with the Guild.

The Guild, in turn, refused the company proposal that included the injunction provision. A Guild attorney said, however, he would urge the union to limit its pickets voluntarily.

The issue remained at a stalemate, and testimony resumed on the injunction request. Del Sesto, saying that resumption of normal publication would be in the public interest, scheduled longer court sessions for the case, shortened the court's lunch recess and said a hearing would be held on Saturday, if necessary.

The Journal Co. has published its two newspapers in a combined edition which has fewer pages than pre-strike papers.

In testimony on the injunction request, Stephen Hamblett, assistant vice president for administration, said the company suffered gross revenue losses of about $200,000 by Monday as a result of the strike.

Meanwhile, the company said in a front-page statement published Wednesday that acts committed by strikers "have reached the point where they not only endanger people immediately involved at the Journal Co., but are actually endangering property and even the lives of others in the community."

Nixon Proposes Housing Payments

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon, arguing that present programs have made Uncle Sam "the biggest slumlord in history," proposed to Congress Wednesday experimental payments of cash housing allowances to the needy.

At the same time, Nixon announced administrative actions aimed at providing up to $5.5 billion of additional mortgage funds during the current tight-money pinch.

In a special message, Nixon said payment of housing allowances - with first priority going to the needy elderly - eventually would get the federal government out of the housing business and offer the best promise of providing "decent housing for all of our families at an acceptable cost."

Rather than ask Congress now for a major new housing subsidy program, Nixon in effect called for a new study of cash allowances so final decisions on their wisdom can be made late next year or early in 1975.

James T. Lynn, secretary of Housing and Urban Development, said that if the allowance program were adopted as an alternative to present public housing programs, the annual cost could reach $8 billion to $11 billion.

Mental Health Commissioner Sworn In Sept. 3

Goldman OK'd Contract Before Sworn In

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - The state's new mental health commissioner, Dr. William Goldman, was awarded a $150 per day state consulting contract after he was selected to head the department but before he was sworn into office.

The services were to be performed between Aug. 1 and Aug. 23, but formal approval of the contract by the executive Office of Administration and Finance didn't come until Aug. 31, three days before Goldman was sworn in as the $42,256 per year commissioner.

Secretary of Administration and Finance William I. Cowin said in a memo dated Sept. 4 attached to the contract that:

"An approval in substance was granted on July 23 for this contract, but the additional materials necessary to process the form where still being prepared by the Department of Mental Health."

Administrative regulations require prior approval on consulting contracts by administration and finance. There was no definition of "approval in substance."

The purpose stated in the contract was to have Goldman "review the department's policy and program plan for the setting up of local mental health clinics and centers and to make recommendations on what course the department should pursue in accomplishing these goals." Goldman, who went from commissioner-designate to commissioner two week's after the contract's termination date, said: "I think the contract was for me to be able to make the transition as fast as possible."

Meanwhile a spokesman for Goldman's previous employer, the Westside Community Health Center of San Francisco, said Goldman wasn't removed from that payroll until Aug. 31.

Goldman said he was phasing out as director of the center at the time of the Massachusetts contract.

"It seemed that I was working full time for three things," he said.

Goldman's selection as the new mental health commissioner was announced by Gov. Francis W. Sargent June 19. He was sworn in Sept. 4.

Despite the job description written into the $2,250 consulting contract, a spokesman for administration and finance said it really was intended to have Goldman familiarize himself with the department.

The spokesman, Raymond McNulty, said "Goldman had a commitment to his previous assignment in California to serve out the summer. That precluded his taking office as commissioner until Sept. 1.

"However, it was strongly felt that it would be mutually beneficial both to Goldman and to the Department of Mental Health if he familiarized himself with the department's overall operation, particularly its plans for community based treatment centers."

Lopresti Sworn In As State Senator

LoPresti, a Democrat, fills a vacancy created when former Sen. Marie Umana was appointed to a judgeship.

Meanwhile, an unusual twist to the certification of a winner in the special election was revealed at a meeting of the Executive Council.

Councillor Herbert L. Connolly, D-Newton, said at Wednesday's meeting, where the votes in the election were officially counted, that Boston sent up returns Sept. 14 which showed LoPresti the winner, 4,568 to 1,700.

The next day, he said, an amended return was filed showing the Republican nominee, Mrs. Anne B. R. Witherby, the winner with 4,572 votes to 1,731 for LoPresti.

Connolly did not specify in open session how the matter was straightened out. However, he said, another document reversing the votes for the two candidates eventually was sent up.

The final tabulation, including the Cambridge part of the district and Winthrop, showed LoPresti with 6,161 and Mrs. Witherby with 2,647, Connolly said.

Liberal When It's Convenient

One of the most interesting things that comes along with being Editor of this newspaper is the people you meet in the course of doing your job. Unfortunately, the vast majority of the people one meets come in to complain, it being human nature to speak mostly when you're unhappy. But I'm not going to cry on your collective shoulders about that here. It's the nature of many of the complaints I've received since becoming Editor-in-Chief last February that concerns me, and the complaints center around the editorial pages which you are reading right now.

It seems that many people think that the commentary pages of this newspaper have gone fascist in recent months. They see columns by Matt Tackeff and Bob Estelle, two people whose views aren't popular on this campus by any means, and they see an occasional reaction by other columnists, including myself, that they discern to be right wing, and the reaction flows.

The by far most often heard reaction is the "When are you going to get Estelle off the page?" syndrome. The same thing is heard in reference to others, but that's a moot point to my topic today. It's the fact of the reactions themselves that frightens me.

The people who presently are regulars on the editorial pages of the Collegian are there because they came in and patiently they ca they came in and patiently worked into a position (on a usually overcrowded staff) where they had a regular spot. In many cases this meant waiting for someone else to leave. The fact of their political persuasions, regardless of what people think of them, is irrelevant. Political persuasion is not a prerequisite for the right to use these pages. If it were, fascism would be here for real.

One of the more interesting cases of the "Get rid of Estelle" syndrome occured last spring, when a student came in trying to get something on the editorial page. When told she'd have to wait a bit (due to the usual overcrowding) she complained about being excluded while Bob Estelle's columns continued to run. Her condescending argument was based on what she considered to the universal truth that Bob Estelle is evil, or "dangerous" to use her exact terminology.

She finally got to the point of saying to me that as Editor-in-Chief of the paper I should be making moral decisions as to what runs in the paper. It is this attitude, by now starting to sound like a broken record, which scares me. Here's why:

I'm a believer in everyone's right to say what he or she feels, regardless of what I think of it. What would happen to the liberal input into this paper if a conservative Editor-in-Chief were elected and began to make moral judgements on what does or doesn't go in? The very people who are screaming for Bob Estelle's head would be in an uproar over "censorship" in the Collegian, and they would be right. Yet they can't see the censorship in their own heads when they become indignant over opposing views. Think on it a bit. Maybe now you can better understand what produces a Richard Nixon and a Watergate, and why the only real "moral" judgement is to let everyone speak.

For those of you who think this column is a defense of those with whom I'm politically aligned, think again. Both Matt Tackeff and Bob Estelle will attest to my running political battles with them.

But EVERYONE MUST BE HEARD, goddam it, and I'll stick by that until the day I leave my position next February. And if you think that stand is the wishy-washy, middle of the road cop out route, I invite you to stand here every day with me and defend it.

Steve Tripoli is Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian.

Kissinger's Appointment

By BOB RILEY

With the appointment (and certain confirmation) of Henry Kissinger as Secretary of State, America has the potential to enter into a new era of international relations-an era characterized by coexistence and cooperation amongst the world powers secured through detente. Kissinger's past accomplishments have laid the groundwork for these new relations, and it is now the task to actualize potential. Unfortunately these goals are in serious jeopardy due to the unrealistic attitudes of many Americans attitudes that are especially prevalent in Massachusetts.

The diplomacy of Kissinger is one of pragmatism. It rejects the fantasies of the Left and Right as being at best unworkable (if not downright suicidal). It acknowledges the existance of systems other than our own. It recognizes the need for the systems to exist in relative harmony. However the necessity of some form of military leverage as a means of promoting negotiations and insuring stability is realized. It is the latter fact which many seem to ignore.

Accords amongst powers rarely come about due to international benevolence. They are the result of the sanctions and incentives of international life. Once the two (or more) powers realize that more can be gained by abandoning the present course then (and only then) can some form of cooperation come about. A strong defensive presence can act as the necessary incentive-deterent which can result in increased cooperation and even demilitarization.

The same reasoning holds true for a nations security after new agreements have been implemented. The maintenance of adequate forces (both in quality and quantity) to insure that any perspective enemies attack will result in no gain can provide for the defense of a people as well as insuring a policy which fosters world peace. The implemented agreements between powers can best be insured by the balancing forces of each side keeping the other honest. In other words, a committment has to be made.

The noble ideals of the left are well worth striving for, but the real world must not be forgotten. A stable world requires an investment-an investment consisting of adequate conventional and nuclear forces and some form of globlal presence. This is not to advocate the ignoring of the many problems at home. Nor is it to advocate a "world policeman's" role. We have learned our lesson in regard to these the hard way. Rather, we must not abdicate our obligations in the world. We must have some means of creating and preserving a realistic international policy. We now have the means to do so. The nation's (and the world's) fate rests upon the attitudes of the American people in the coming years.

Kentucky Fried Democrats

Remember the Democrats? The Party of the Common Man? Despite all the thick and thin of Watergate, the Democrats are struggling to be remembered. Instead, they are falling back into obscurity.

Some people would have you believe that Watergate is responsible for Nixon's drop in the popularity polls. But really Nixon was never a very inspiring or beloved politician, and he owes a substantial amount of credit to his opponents for helping him to bolster his popularity. Had the Democrats been smart, they would have had little trouble in ousting Nixon in 1972. But they weren't. The Democratic standard bearer for 1972, Senator Whatshisname,sent millions of otherwise loyal Democrats (reluctantly) into Nixon's arms. By not being provided with a viable alternative to Nixon, many Democrats turned their back on "their" party and tried to forget the good old days, way back before the Party was taken over by the herds of the Great Unwashed. The spectacle of the '72 Democratic Convention on television scared more people than Khrushchev did during the Cuban Missle Crisis ten years earlier. Since '72, the Party has been having a rough time picking up the pieces.

Picking up the pieces was the main agenda last Saturday night, when the Colonel Sanders Kentucky Fried Chicken Corporation sponsored a Jerry Lewis style telethon to raise money for crippled Democrats. In the eight hour extravaganza, the Democrats sought to raise enough money to clear up the $4 million debt left by the '72 disaster, and hopefully go beyond that and look toward the next election. The next election will probably be left with very little from the event, for the pledges, which totaled $5 million, will most likely not be completely realized in terms of cash, as is the case with most fund drives which operate on a pledge now, pay (?) later policy. And the Democrats are probably aware of the fact that $5 million is barely enough to fill a couple of G. Gordon Liddy's briefcases.

But the telethon was entertaining, if you go for the Sonny and Cher or Dean Martin type of variety shows. Steve Allen was the Encee, along with Robert Strauss, the current Democratic National Chairman. The Big Stars included Archie Bunker, Robert Goulet, Henry Fahnda, Jack Lemmon, Colonel Klink, Leslie Uggams and many others. There were even prominent Democratic politicians, such as Hubert Humphrey and Kevin White, who participated in impromptu panels. The panels were conducted by actor Jackie Cooper, currently of "made for TV" movie fame, formerly of the Little Rascals (are we to assume that Alfalfa, Buckwheat, Spanky, Farina, and Stymy are all Republican?).

The amazing thing about the telethon was that it was all geared to the grass roots, Middle American voter, the type who voted for Nixon or stayed home in last year's election. Bella Abzug and Thomas Eagleton were ordered to man (or woman) the telephones while those Democrats with Southern Drawls were placed in front of the cameras. The Moderates and Conservatives of the party, who were sent packing during last year's convention, were given their place in the sun. Sam Ervin and George Wallace provided taped interviews for the show, and while the cameras were being adjusted, excerpts from old World War II movies were blurbed in, and Americans once again were entertained by James Cagney singing George M. Cohan's Yankee Doodle Dandy. A far cry from last year, when the spokespeople for the campaign were largely starry-eyed liberal suburbanites or glassy-eyed students.

As a means of raising money to finance campaigns, the telethon methods will soon fall into disfavor, since it would be very easy for the Watergate Plumbers to buy up time on another network in order to show Love Story or Patton opposite the Democrat's fundraiser.

Allende's Overthrow

The overthrow of the Allende government in Chile has helped prove Fidel Castro's assumption that significant social change cannot be achieved peacefully, Allende tried to change the priorities of his country and funnel some power towards the lower classes, in a democratic and legal way. His hopes were crushed by a combination of foreign and domestic forces.

There can be no question that Salvador Allende was a democrat and hope to achieve his goals through democratic means. He assumed power after winning the 1970 election after two defeats. Although, he received only a small plurality of the vote, his election was confirmed by the Congress, which was dominated by opposition parties. It is a tradition that Congress confirm the candidate who received the largest number of votes. This has developed in part because only one president this century has secured a majority vote. Every election was held as scheduled even though Allende's coalition often received a trouncing at the polls. There were threats made against the Congress, but virtually every executive makes threats against their legislature, (Richard Nixon and Francis Sargent, for example). In the past, relations with the legislature had been strained so severely that Edwardo Frei, the president from 1964 to 1970, was not allowed to leave the country by Congress at one point.

The economy was in very poor condition but his can be in part attributed to the failure of the economic elites to cooperate with the government. But does the condition of the economy justify an overthrow of the elected leaders? The rate of inflation was close to 300 percent and there were shortages of basic necessities. The inflation rate should not be compared with the United States but instead with previous Chilean rates, because inflation has always been a problem in this and other Latin American nations. Between 1950 and 1958 prices increased 1,500%, an average annual increase of close to 200%. Frederico Gil reported in 1966 that inflation and anti-inflationary programs were forcing the working classes into a "social and economic regression and they resent it bitterly." The middle classes were also being adversely effected at that time. It is evident that inflation was not a creation of the most recent government. Gil also noted that in 1966 food production was not keeping pace with the growing population. This caused the food shortages as much as the land distribution programs.

The forces working against the Marxist regime were both national and foreign. First, there was the United States and its multinational cooperations, principally the copper companies and ITT. The nationalization of the copper mines had begun under the previous administration but even their humble efforts met with serious objections from the USA. ITT did not become one of the administrations best friends, either. Our beloved government did not offer any major aid to this freely elected leader, contrary to Nixon's 1959 proposal for a warm embrace for Latin American democrats and a distant handshake for dictators. Foreign aid has often been used to punish anti-US leaders and reward pro-US governments. In the early sixties we gave aid directly to friendly state governors in Brazil but refused it to the national government because it was leftest. The same pattern emerged in Chile; no aid was available for the further development of one of the most stable, democratic nations in the hemisphere because the government was Marxist. We were not asked to rebuild the nation; we were just asked for some basic economic aid.

Nationalists who opposed the President could be found in the upper and upper-middle classes although this group expanded as the economic situation worsened. Allende proposed such drastic changes that he would have been opposed by the elite in any nation. These elites used their considerable economic and political power to help destroy the Allende regime. To even briefly mention the social reforms that were proposed in the last three years would take a whole column. Basically, attempts were made to solve the housing shortage, accelerate the existing land reform programs, give the workers a better standard of living and put the major industries and essential services in the hands of Chileans. The importance of the mines being controlled by nationals preferably the government itself cannot be overstressed. How would Americans feel if GM were owned by a Japanese firm?

Whatever can be said about Salvador Allende, his opponents should remember that democracy cannot be saved or preserved by the military, especially when they govern.

Solidarity With Chile

By PEDRO HERNANDEZ

Imperialism has unleashed all its fury in Chile. Employing its most effective took, native fascism, international reaction just took the extreme measure of overthrowing, POPULAR UNITY government headed by President Salvador Allende.

Nobody should be surprised by this. The process that was taking place in Chile. Where condition for the complete taking of power by the people and the construction of socialism were being created, was to menacing for the interest of imperialism in Latin America. It would have been illusory that would wait with its arms crossed. But revolutionaries cannot keep their arms crossed before imperialism's assault.

The news that we are receiving from Chile at present is scant, confusing, contradictory and obviously filtered by imperialism's propaganda machinery. The poor news report we receive from Chile indicate that the military men are facing the valiant resistance of which the Chilean People are capable. All revolutionaries throughout the World must stand beside the Chilean People offering whatever help is necessary in this moment so crucial to the history of Latin America and the World.

The World Socialist Party stated their commitment to send volunteers to Chile. Should a civil war be unleashed in that sister Republic two months ago, when the first attempt of a coup d'etat seemed imminent.

This offer, which we reiterate now, does not come from thin air. It is just that when a people confront imperialism it is not isolated peoples who participate in that conflict that in fact, would be reason enough to offer them solidarity. When a people face imperialism it is not just its future that is being debated, it is the future of humanity. If Chile falls, the entire revolutionary process of Latin America will be affected. It is not that the doors to Revolution will close, but the defeat would undoubtedly mean a setback for the progress of revolutionary forces of the continent to recover from this setback would require serious efforts. We trust fully that the Chilean People will be able to organize its resistance to this severe blow that we all suffer.

More than that, we trust that from the confrontation there will emerge a victorious Chile, living a qualitative coup that will take the people to power, with all the machinery of the bourgeois state, including its armed forces, totally destroyed. At this moment, all revolutionaries in this country as well as the World..Should put aside their mentari sectarisms and stand beside Chile, offering her complete solidarity.

Faculty Unionization

By PAUL WALLACE

There are many issues that are dominant on college campuses, but few affect students, faculty, and the whole concept of education. All of us are living in an age where we think it proper to be represented, and have articulated voices "speaking for us". This being the case, the UMass faculty will be put to the test of having articulated voices "speaking for them". This November a vote will be held as to the idea of unionization or non-unionization among the faculty.

How all of this affects the students is very interesting, at least from a historical perspective. During the late 60's, we saw students coming together trying to put a more significant input into our government's decisions. During the late 60's, we also saw students coming together in an attempt to make education a little more meaningful. Looking back, we saw killings on college campuses, and students were told to be students. Now the 70's are here-and the teachers are uniting.

What will the students do in November if the faculty should come together to make their education a little more meaningful? What will the students do in November if the faculty should come together to put a little more input into their decision process?

What happens if the faculty demonstrates, if they march on the administration building-or even demand to be heard!?! Looking back on history we know what could happen. Here lies the paradox: history has moved on, and the only thing that appears to have changed, is that we see different players.

The concept of unionization is an extremely important one. The faculty is trying to formalize their togetherness and the students are trying to make attempts to come together. One can only hope that this university does not bust all this cohesion.

The UN Is Useless

By MARCUS EIBEL

Kurt Waldheim stool pigeon extraordinaire has dismissed criticism of the United Nations as "unjust and unfair." And why shouldn't he? If you were making his salary so would you.

The United Nations as an instrument for the maintenance of world peace is completely useless. Its only function seems to be to give the great propagandists of the world a forum for sounding off, especially those of the Third World and the communist bloc. Unpopular nations, notably Israel, have never received a fair hearing from the world body. When Israel is the victim of terrorist atrocities the Security Council does nothing, whereas every Arab call for a Security Council Emergency Session brings a condemnation of Israel.

With the United States paying almost one-third of the UN bill it is clear that they are getting "ripped off." The United States does nothing beneficial for itself or others by listening to a continuous barrage of irrational attacks by its enemies.

The United Nations as a so-called "peacekeeping" body is a total failure. When Gamel Abdel Nasser said UN get out they got out. Their efforts in Vietnam thanks to the Poles and Hungarians were another tragic joke.

In today's world countries cannot afford to have their enemies tell them what to do, all in the guise of peace. Yet that is what the United Nations' does all the time. As long as there exist some free people in the world, until there is such a thing as world government, organizations such as the UN are needless, and I hope that such will always be the case.

Cutting Bus Service To Belchertown

To The Editor:

Again, the students of the University are blessed with one of the fine decisions of the Administration-that of cutting the bus service to the people in Belchertown. As usual, in an overwhelmingly student minded move, our Administrators have chosen to screw us again. After all where do their priorities exist but in their pockets? They have a car to get to campus and they own their own parking space; doesn't everyone? Besides there's going to be no parking problem on campus, so why should there be any worries about a few more cars.

I was overjoyed this summer to receive a letter stating that the bus service was conviently curtailed for lack of patronage. It's fine feeling to know that our Administration has found the answer to one of the foremost philosophical questions of all time-existance. So now I know that myself and the ten other University affiliated people in my house do not exist. This is quite a relief to say the least.

It was fortunate that the decision was made in the summer and I hope no one suffered for the heat, but I forgot, Whitmore is air-conditioned. That lapse of time really gave people plenty of time in order to decide either how they were going to get in or what time to get up so they could hitch in. I'm sure it was deeply appreciated by all concerned. How does the philosophy go; cut the bus routes from Belchertown to force people to take their cars and then increase the parking rates to squeeze more money out of them? I hope everyone is warm and dry in Whitmore while I'm hitching in through the rain and snow.

Finally, I reach the golden age, 21 or a senior, and can cut the umbilicus of Whitmore's fostering guidance. So in May of 1973 six of us sign a contract to rent a house in Belchertown because its on the bus route and what do the illustrious gods at Whitmore do, but cut the service. But why am I so critical, because I can always reap the new benefits of my University fees in other ways. Now, instead of busses going to Rolling Green every fifteen minutes, they go every five minutes. What a glorious piece of trivia, maybe I should sleep in the parking lot of Rolling Green instead of my house, that way I won't have to hitch in. Since the 11 people in my house alone do not exist in the eyes of the Administration, the daily service was dropped from five inbound and five outbound trips to zero.

Why can't some of the five-minute trips to Rolling Green be reduced in number and some implemented version of the Belchertown route revived? Possibly two inbound and two outbound trips could be arranged or even the sending of a bus on which people could pay some reasonable fee. But like always the Administration's decisions are made with a fatal consistency, having their eyes closed and, according to the old proverb, with their heads (if they exist) up their pompous, and most obvious means of excretion.

Exacerbating Racism

To The Editor:

A decision was made by the Human Relations Department of the School of Education which was virtually antagonistic to the foundations of the Affirmative Action Program. A section of B'nai Brith, the Anti-Defamation League made a racist attack upon the admission status of the national minorities and women. Claiming that the Affirmative Action program was discriminating against majorities the Anti-Defamation League pressured the University into activating six graduate admissions previously not accepted. This not only clouds the issue of anti-semitism by which jews are considered to be part of the nationally oppressed peoples but further misleads majority students into believing that Affirmative Action is not in their own interests. The Anti-Defamation League's tactics of fighting anti-semitism are antithetical to the goals. One would expect that anti-semitism would not be combatted by racism.

The University is federally funded to enforce the Affirmative Action program and under Ziena Tolona it did not do so in an acceptable manner. The methodology which Affirmative Action goals were implemented by Ms. Tolona appear only as a way by which to avoid the program goals. Departments were given leeway to project their own methods of applying Affirmative Action, thus leaving loopholes by which they could virtually ignore the goals of the program. The Affirmative Action program by not protesting CCEBs cutbacks has revealed the pansy role it attends to play in ending racism and male supremacy. Furthermore, Affirmative Action by allowing the relinquishment of the six admissions has exacerbated racism on campus.

Let us hope that the Affirmative Action Program will fulfill its goals.

Explaining The Price Differences

To The Editor:

I'd like to reply to the letter written by Michael Schwartz in Monday's edition of the Collegian entitled "Textbook Prices: Where Will It End?"

In his letter Mr. Schwartz complains of two textbooks being priced higher at the Annex than in two other bookstores and with this knowledge assumes the Annex is "ripping off" the students and students therefore should "return to the late sixties."

Since I have been unable to reach Mr. Schwartz and therefore identify the texts to which he is referring, I can only reply to his letter by explaining what probably caused the price difference and also by explaining our situation in relation to other bookstores.

First, the book which sold for $.65 cheaper at Worcester was probably a case where that particular store already had the texts on hand before the publisher increased his list price. We, in turn, may have bought them after than increase and been forced to sell accordingly.

Second, the book which his friend bought at Holyoke Community College was either the same situation as described above, or simply a mistake in pricing.

In both cases, I wish Mr. Schwartz had brought this matter to our attention before accusing us of purposely ripping anyone off. Had he done so, we would have investigated the matter and explained it to him.

Also, I'd like to point out that textbooks sold at the Annex carry a 5 per cent discount from the retail price of the book-a practice very few bookstores in the country offer, and our pre-priced paperbacks are sold at the same price as all other bookstores.

With this in mind, I hope such accusations as "blatant exploitation" can be avoided in the future.

Test Your Charm

To The Editor:

Come and test your charm at Northampton State Hospital.

Northampton Volunteers is a group of people who get involved with the mentally ill of Northampton State Hospital. Mostly these people are desperately lonely. We try and brighten things up a little by visiting with the patients. And believe me your personality will get a work out, if not in the hospital, certainly on the bus. You may also learn how to improve your card and pool game. You, will also satisfy that searching soul of yours, knowing that you have reached out and touched someone.

Well the gist of my letter is that we need you. Northampton Volunteers will be conducting a tour of the hospital and a general orientation tonight. You need bring nothing but your spirit.

If you would like more information, we will have a table in the Campus Center this week, or else just come Thurs. The bus will leave from in front of Hasbrouck at 6:30 and in front [illegible] Patterson (in Southwest) at 6:35. We return to UMass at 9:30.

In this life you have got to give a little sooner or later. Northampton Volunteers ask you to give now. C'mon shake the world a little.

Who's Joshing Who?

To The Editor:

It has recently come to my attention that a hoax is being perpetrated upon the greater student body at the University. It has become obvious that a small group of commercial racketeers is behind this barrage of JOSH propaganda. Who is JOSH? What is JOSH? It is time the facts were known.

Some say he is a Jesus Christ reincarnate-now who's joshing who? Who would have the audacity to believe he was Christ and what mindless morons would believe him? Karl Marx once said that religion is the opiate of the people. To believe that JOSH is the Son of God is like believing that Richard Nixon is a great prophet.

It is my conclusion from the evidence I have gathered that JOSH is a new species of seedless grape. When JOSH comes knocking on our campus front door we must realize that we are not dealing with an ordinary fruit. We must pulverize these rumors and with that drink the wines of our success. for, as someone once said, "through knowledge comes advancement, but through superstition comes ignorance.

"Judge not and Ye shall not be judged."

Beaver Hunting

To The Editor:

For those of us who were away for the summer, aside from campus having the Twilight Zone ambiance of a deserted amusement park, nothing happened. Oh yes, something did happen. A herd of zany beavers invaded Cranberry Pond. Needless to say a worried UMass decider decided to ban beavers from the pond. Reacting to this the beavers had a be-in, attended not only by the furry dearlings but by numerous nature-loving voyeurs. The deciders put up signs, but the beavers were adamant. And if you go to the right places at Cranberry Pond on a warm afternoon, you may get a peek at a cracked beaver,. . .er, I mean a crack of a piqued beaver. Good hunting.

Court Order Forces End Of Gas Strike

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A court order opened many Massachusetts gasoline pumps Wednesday that had been closed to protest Phase IV price controls, but some dealers, especially in the western part of the state, continued their shutdown.

The shutdown, which began Tuesday and was planned to last three days, was only partly successful from the start, but did lead to lines of waiting motorists at some stations and reported threats to owners of some stations that stayed open.

A temporary restraining order prohibiting service station owners from banning together to close was issued late Tuesday by Judge Vincent R. Brogna in Norfolk Superior Court.

The order was issued at the request of Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn. It did not pertain to individual dealers but to dealers "acting in concert." It prohibits retailers from harassing or picketing owners of stations that stayed open.

A hearing was scheduled for Friday, the day after the planned protest was to end, on Quinn's request for a permanent injunction.

The Automobile Legal Association said Wednesday that based on its statewide survey of 125-150 stations, approximately 30 per cent of the state's stations were closed.

But, the ALA said that in the metropolitan Boston area, about half of the stations that had been closed Tuesday were open Wednesday.

It said that south of Boston, most stations in the Brockton area were open and that threatened closures on Cape Cod largely failed to materialize. To the north, most stations in the Merrimack Valley area were open, the ALA said.

The association said in suburbs west of Boston near Massachusetts 9 that had been hard hit by closures Tuesday, approximately 70 per cent of the stations were open.

The ALA found about 20 per cent of stations in Worcester County in the central part of the state were open.

But, in western areas of Springfield and the Berkshire Hills, the ALA said 45 per cent of stations surveyed were closed, only a slight change from Tuesday.

It said many dealers in western sections said they were waiting for individual notification before opening.

Harold P. Murphy Jr. of Springfield, president of the Springfield Gas Dealers Association and a spokesman for the shutdown, said Wednesday he had not received legal papers pertaining to the closings and that he would not instruct owners to sell gas until he had papers.

In Lowell, north of Boston, approximately 50 service station owners met Wednesday and voted to open in compliance with the court order.

In Leominster, the owners of 16 stations said they closed after some owners or relatives were threatened either by phone or in person.

Police said they were seeking three men who allegedly threatened some owners. One of the three men alleged to have a pistol.

Quinn, in asking for the court injuntion, said a mass shutdown of stations could be dangerous "especially to users of ambulance, police, fire and safety vehicles."

Murphy said, "That really isn't so. We have made provisions for emergencies.

Sextuplets Fight For Survival

By JUDY STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

DENVER, Colo. (AP) - A cadre of doctors and nurses worked Wednesday to combat a lung disease in three of the remaining five Stanek sextuplets. The smallest of the six babies died Tuesday night of the same illness.

Doctors said Catherine, the only surviving girl, Nathan and Steven Stanek showed symptoms of the hyaline membrane disease that claimed the life of Julia after 44 hours of blood and breathing difficulties.

Catherine and Nathan were given blood transfusions overnight in an attempt to alleviate the disease which is common in premature infants.

Doctors at Colorado General Hospital said Catherine was in poor but improving condition after a complete blood exchange transfusion. Nathan also was in poor condition. He was given a transfusion, but not a complete blood exchange.

Steven was reported in fair condition, but improving.

Jeffrey's condition dropped slightly from good to fair Wednesday and his brother, John, was still in good condition. Both were reported in good condition Tuesday and were fed their mother's milk for the first time.

The sextuplets were born Sunday night to Edna Stanek, 34, and Eugene J. Stanek, 31 of Lakewood, Colo. Until Julia's death they were believed to be the only living set of sextuplets, said Dr. Tibor Engel, an obstetrician who said he had made a compurterized search of medical records on multiple births.

The sextuplets weighed from just under two pounds to just under three pounds. Mrs. Stanek had been taking a fertility drug, Pergonal, before becoming pregnant.

Hyaline membrane disease was described by Ted Wrenn, a hospital spokesman, as a film formed on the inside of the lung when air and blood come in contact. That film prevents the escape of carbon dioxide, the gas exhaled when oxygen is taken from the air by the lungs.

Indian College Approved

BOSTON (AP)- Plans for a college of American Indian affairs and a cultural center have received preliminary approval of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the Boston Indian Council says.

The college and center are proposed for the former Naval Ammunition Depot in Hingham. The property is listed as surplus government land, and the council said the HEW would seek title to the land from the General Services Administration and turn it over to the council.

The council obtained a federal court injunction last June prohibiting public sale of the land by the GSA. The council has reduced its request from 250 to 86 acres. A hearing is scheduled in federal court Friday in connection with sale of the property.

Cape Ann Rep. Plans Sail-In

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP)- A state representative from one of the nation's oldest fishing ports wants to sail a dragger up the Potomac to focus attention on the plight of the New England fisherman.

Rep. Richard Silva, R-Glouchester, offered Wednesday to transport 12 to 15 regional officials and fishermen to Washington where they would meet with congressmen.

Silva said the idea was designed to enlist support of a proposed 200-mile offshore fishing limit that would protect the nation's fisheries against uncontrolled foreign competition.

Commissioner Spencer Apolonie of the Maine Department of Sea and Shore Fisheries suggested that the idea could be expanded to include a boat from some of the other New England states.

Udall Attacks Price Control

LOWELL, Mass. (AP)- Stewart Udall, former U.S. secretary of the interior, said Wednesday that the Nixon Administration's price control program is a failure and should be "junked" for a "free market system."

Udall spoke at a news conference during a day-long visit here sponsored by the Kennedy Library and the Lowell League of Women Voters.

The former interior secretary said he sympathized with retail gasoline dealers, many of whom have closed down their service stations this week to protest Phase IV policies.

Udall said fuel prices will eventually rise, and consumers "must be prepared to pay the cost."

"The automobile is the most wasteful means of transportation ever invented," he said. "Our job in this country today is to get good, cheap public transportation.

N.E.S.

Northern Educational Service, a student run tutoring program will be starting October 1st, with a slightly different format. The N.E.S. program involves UMass students tutoring Springfield school-children at three centers in the city. In the past, there were various N.E.S. store-front centers in Springfield used for tutoring. Last year, N.E.S. was operating only one tutoring center, but with cutbacks in federal funds, the center was unable to re-open. This year tutoring will be going on at three different locations in Springfield: the North End Community Center, the South End Community Center and the Hill Recreational Program in the DeBerry School. Tutoring at these places will be somewhat more flexible than it has been in the past since volunteers will be allowed to choose the center which suits them the best and select the type of activities they are most interested in.

Along with tutoring, other aspects of learning can be arranged such as trips to museums, concerts, plays and of course, parties. Last year, 80 Springfield children attended the annual Spring Picnic at UMass.

N.E.S. will provide transportation to and from the Springfield tutoring centers, in the afternoons and the evenings. For tutoring one or more times a week this semester a UMass student can possibly earn 1 or 2 academic credits.

If you are interested in this type of activity or would like more information please call 545-0575 or come to the N.E.S. office in 426 A Student Union.

Mike Johnson In Concert

Today at noon on Metawampe Lawn behind the UMass Student Union, and also on Friday, September twenty-eight, at seven-thirty PM in the Student Union Ballroom, a concert will be presented by recording artist Mike Johnson. Mr. Johnson, originally from Chicago, has been playing guitar for eleven years and was a member of the first all white blues group the country where he played with such famous artists as Mike Bloomfield and Charlie Musclewhite. He has jammed with Harvey Mandel, Paul Butterfield and Alvin Bishop.

For the past two years, Mr. Johnson has been touring the east coast presenting his original material in the folk, rock, jazz style. His humorous and truthful raps and outstanding guitar playing have enthralled audiences from Maine to Florida.

Hancock Building; A Major Hazard

BOSTON (AP) - The city's economy has been harmed and its residents inconvenienced by delays in building the John Hancock Co. tower, Richard R. Thuma, city building commissioner, said.

The 60-story office building in Copley Square is the tallest in New England. It was to be opened in 1971. Company officials now say the building is scheduled to be occupied in September, 1974.

The company said the delay was caused by problems with the glass that covers the building. Panes fell off during high winds, and many have been replaced with plywood while test and studies are made.

Streets around the building usually are closed to traffic during high winds, and Thuma said, "When they close off the streets, it is an inconvenience to the citizens and the people who own property nearby.

"A Scary Thing Happened To Me Last Spring"

BOSTON (AP) -A letter from an irate citizen who found nearly all of his family listed in the FBI's crime file data bank has spurred Gov. Francis W. Sargent to protest the computerized system.

Sargent said Wednesday he is writing to all of the nation's governors urging them to join with him in petitioning the Justice Department and Congress to provide safeguards on the data systems which, he added, contains the names of thousands of innocent citizens.

The governor also released the letter written to him which began, "a scary thing happened to me last spring.

"A relative of mine got a job as a deputy sheriff. One bored night on dispatcher duty, he ran his family through the National Crime Information Center. Ten out of eleven of us were listed."

While none had criminal records the man found his mother listed because when she was 18 neighbors complained of a noisy sorority party.

Today almost everybody is getting into photography. And it's not the snapshot variety. People are doing sports stories, nature stories, portraits—you may even have a friend who's doing photographs through a microscope. Or a telescope.

You also know that everybody has his own idea about which camera is best. That's why it's important for you to know about the Canon F-1. Because it's the system camera that's fast becoming the favorite of professionals. And the new status symbol among photography enthusiasts.

The whole F-1 system includes over 40 lenses and 200 accessories. It's capable of doing virtually everything in photography. So whatever idea you have for a picture, the F-1 has the equipment to make sure you get it.

Because it was conceived from the beginning as a system, it works as a system. All the elements are quickly and easily interchangeable. No matter which lens or accessory you use with the F-1 body you won't have the feeling that something has been "tacked on."

What's more the F-1 is comfortable to handle. Years of research went into the design of the F-1 body and placement of controls so your fingers fall naturally into place. You'll appreciate this comfort when you're on assignment. It's also an important thing to keep in mind if you're investing in a camera you plan to keep a long time.

Canon has been in the optics industry over 37 years. We make microscope equipment, amateur and professional movie cameras and TV lenses. It's this experience that helps make our still cameras the best selling cameras in Japan. In America, it's just a matter of time.

See your dealer for more information. He'll also show you Canon's other SLR cameras, like the FTb and TLb. Both of which offer accurate metering, easy film loading, a wide range of lenses and the same standard of engineering that goes into the F-1.

Attorney For Students:

Cars: They Gotta Be Insured

By RICHARD HOWLAND
Attorney For Students

The problem of getting a car on the road in Massachusetts is worth very careful attention by the uninitiated (mostly, lawyers and insurance agents may be considered "initiated"). Two systems of exquisite complexity confront "no fault" insurance and the "title" system. They exist along side registration and licensing (of drivers) and for all of us at the University and many other places, parking registration. Out of staters can sidestep a scintilla of the foregoing but must add special registration as an out of state student which, incredibly, costs nothing! (register at UMass Police Station).

Before bathing in the pretentious "wisdom" that follows, please emphatically remember to consult an insurance agent, a lawyer, the registry, the police or a licensed car dealer before operating, buying or selling any motor vehicle about which you have the slightest doubt of any particular. Fines for errors are high!

No fault insurance

Every motor vehicle registered in Massachusetts must carry compulsory insurance (old style protection for the other guy), which has become much less expensive, and one of three forms of so-called "no fault" insurance.

Option One

This costs the most and virtually guarantees the repair or replacement of your car within fifteen days of proof of loss to your insurance company. There may be a deductible (which will probably be eliminated this year) but for the high cost of solid protection you can insure your car against all loss or damage regardless of fault for its damage or destruction. I believe it is the best insurance available, but it most assuredly is not for everyone. The economic fact is that with high premiums you may find yourself paying the price of your car every few years if the car is several years old or otherwise reduced in value. Remember insurance will only restore the car to the condition it was in before damage, not improve it.

Option Two

This feature purports to cover your car in the event you are involved in an accident and are not at fault. Practically speaking this means if you are struck from behind or while legally parked or if the other party is convicted of a motor vehicle crime, you will collect but almost never otherwise! It is really old style collision insurance with the proviso that you be guiltless. The premiums are not as high as for Option One but in my personal opinion no one should ever buy this coverage. There are too many factors involved and insurance companies have little trouble in side-stepping liability. At least ten students this year have been victimized by this type of insurance. In my opinion, if your car is vital to you and is worth more than five or more times the Option One premium, you should carry that coverage and never Option Two.

Option Three

This "coverage" is actually your option not to be covered at all. It means that you will be totally responsible for any damage or loss to your car. Under "no fault" YOU ARE PROHIBITED FROM BRINGING SUIT SUCCESSFULLY AGAINST THE OTHER DRIVER, except in catastrophic circumstances if you are both Massachusetts cars. You are therefore also prohibited from seeking any reimbursement from the other driver and if attempted you may be committing a crime such as extortion or malicious prosecution.

What it boils down to is: if you need the car and it makes economic sense, buy option one; if the cost is prohibitive, elect option three and be prepared to assume the complete economic burden of loss or damage to your vehicle.

Title and Registration

Massachusetts, like most other states, has implemented very close records of car ownership. The details are pretty complicated and are not the province of laymen. By that I mean don't bother with the hassle and seek appropriate help (it doesn't cost extra).

Selling (and therefore buying) any car not now covered by a title requires a bill of sale notarized by the seller (the buyer can't get it notarized). If the car is covered by a title, signing the back of the title is all that's required of the seller.

The buyer should then take the notarized bill of sale or the signed certificate of title to an insurance agent and obtain the appropriate insurance. The insurance agent will simultaneously prepare all the other documents for registration and title which the buyer or the agent can then take to the Registry.

If you buy from a dealer in new or used cars there should be no problem.

Above all remember that the plates must be attached to the car they are registered to at all times and only after the registry has changed papers should plates be transferred. What is even more important is to be certain that any car you operate is insured. The fine for not being insured is a minimum of $100.00.

If you are ever in doubt ask for help or call a cab, it will be cheaper in the short run.

Inspection Stickers

All Massachusetts cars must be inspected twice annually against certain obvious defects like brakes, lights, tires etc. The semiannual inspection period is now going on and ends the end of October. Failure to have a sticker may cost a $10 fine but more to the point, will result in your car being towed in many cases. The alert owner will get his or her car inspected early and in the event of any defect that needs repair it can be done before the end of the Inspection period. A "Rejection" sticker is not valid after the end of the inspection period at all. You can operate on such a sticker only while the inspection period is not ended. When you go to have the car inspected be sure to bring your registration and title as it is one of the checks made.

WMUA

"Film quotes and comments," a production of the WMUA public affairs department, premiers tonight at 7:30 p.m. The show is hosted by professor Thomas Bohn of the communications studies department.

Hiking Anyone?

The UMass Outing Club was organized several decades ago in 1927. Over the years the Club's activities have included: caving, mountain climbing, hiking, flat and white water canoeing, rock climbing, ice climbing, snowshoeing, Xcountry skiing, and a host of other outdoor activities. If you like to do something in the outdoors, no matter what it is, you are sure to find someone in the Club with a similar interest to do it with you.

Club trips have gone far and near, from short day hikes on the Holyoke Range or even closer a caving trip through the maze of the UMass drain system, to the Grand Canyon in Arizona, the Tetons in Wyoming, Mt. Hood in Oregon, Disneyland in Florida, Guatemala, Peru, and Canada. We have trips to suit any level of expertise.

Club meetings are held weekly on Monday nights at 6:30 in the Campus Center, rooms to be announced in the NOTICES column of the Daily Collegian the day of the meeting. Meetings will alternate between business meetings to which all members are encouraged to attend, and general interest meetings consisting of lectures, films, slide shows, technical workshops, and discussions of upcoming trips.

The Club also has a large bulletin board located just to the left of the entrance to the Student Union Ballroom on which is posted lists of upcoming trips and events of interest.

MBTA To Get Financial Aid?

BOSTON (AP) - House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, unveiled a $379.5 million bill Wednesday which he said would aid all modes of transportation in Massachusetts.

The speaker said new taxes would not be required to finance the state contribution which, under the plan, would amount to $133.5 million. The rest of the money, he said, would come from the federal government.

Under the bill, $35 million would be applied to the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority MBTA deficit. Another $35 million would be allocated for highway related use for communities outside the MBTA district.

Additionally, $75 million would be available for rail commuter improvements; $125 million for MBTA expansion; $4 million for airport aid, and $105 million for communities outside the MBTA district to set up and operate regional transportation.

Bartley said the proposal is a one year plan. But he said the infusion of state and federal money could mean reductions ranging from $8 to $12 in property tax rates around the state.

Bartley said he expected that the bill would be up for debate in the House Monday.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What you thought could be delayed now commands attention. Emphasis is on completion, especially where legal-property matters are concerned. Gemini, Virgo persons may be in picture. Settle basic issues. Get to heart of matters.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Older relative may be in transit. You could receive message requesting personal service. Keep peace in the family. By giving, you also will receive. Know it and respond accordingly. Don't neglect medical, dental care.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be discriminating. Choose quality over quantity. Pisces, Virgo persons could be in picture. Accent is on money arrangements. One you care for has tendency to be extravagant. Know when to draw line. You will understand.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may have some freedoms curtailed--but this will be voluntary. You assume added responsibility. You direct and organize. You build for greater future security. Don't promise more than can be delivered. Capricorn could figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are able to complete project. Agreement is reached with one behind the scenes. Aries, Libra persons could play key roles. Be a self-starter. Stop dwelling on "what might have been." Control your own destiny.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friend may give you facts of life. Be appreciative instead of resentful. Some of your desires are subject to revision, mainly due to cost factors. Young person does care but has no idea about money and how it gets that way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Follow through on plan which enlists aid of one who taught you in past. Aquarian might play key role. Accent is on career, special project, standing in community. Co-operate in civic project. State views to person in authority.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Before embarking on long-range project, check what has occurred behind scenes. There may be factors which make proposal quite different from surface appearances. Gemini, Sagittarius persons may be in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Specifics are highlighted. You get facts minus sugarcoating. This is to your advantage. Respond accordingly. Involves mate, partner and question of money. Surprise is due. It is of unusual nature and one romantically concerned is behind "plot."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Refuse to lose by expecting something for nothing. Be aware of legal implications. Spotlight is on co-operation, public relations, joint efforts--and marriage. Take time to analyze. Reject the superficial.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Home and domesticity dominate. Make fair concession to family member. Strive for harmony. Taurus, Libra are likely to be involved. Person close to you confides secret. Don't cast first stone. Listen and comprehend.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with understanding of basic emotions. Friend could make demands. Do what you can short of lending money. Romance is in picture. Your ego swells. You feel good and meaningful compliment is received.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are likely to be musical, moody and somewhat of a psychologist. In November, domestic adjustment is made which could change your lifestyle. You generally are frank, direct and capable of handling intricate details. You attract to you persons born under Capricorn and Cancer. You are loyal to family. You must stop brooding about the past. Your future is promising and some exciting events, upcoming, will make you realize this is true.

The ISDT's

The ISDT's — Unless you're a motorcycle buff, you probably don't realize that the biggest motorcycle tournament in the world is taking place forty miles west of here in the Berkshire town of Dalton, Mass. The International Six Days Trials, a competition involving of 18 countries, has been going on since Monday morning.

The ISDT's is a test of skill and endurance (not speed) over rough mountainous dirt roads, up and down rocky power lines, and right through rolling streams.

A rider must ride for a grinding six hours, covering 215 miles of trails each day. Most of the competitors will be lucky if their bikes and their nervous systems are still operating when the tournament ends on Saturday afternoon.

Wilt ABA-Bound

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Wilt Chamberlain of the Los Angeles Lakers will jump this week to the American Basketball Association and become player-coach of the San Diego Conquistadors, it was reported Tuesday.

The San Francisco Examiner, which reported July 25 that the star center was negotiating with the San Diego team, said it learned from informed Southern California sources that Chamberlain would soon be leaving the National Basketball Association Lakers to sign a $600,000-a-year contract with San Diego.

Chamberlain did not report to the Lakers last week for the start of preseason practice.

Neither Chamberlain nor his attorney was available for comment.

Aaron: Ignored At Home

By ED SHEARER
Associated Press Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Henry Aaron's dramatic chase of Babe Ruth's career home run record continues in virtual obscurity at home, despite a massive program initiated by local businesses to honor the 39-year-old superstar.

Aaron, now needing only three homers to tie Ruth's lifetime mark of 714, played before more than 135,000 fans during a three-day trip to Cincinnati last weekend.

He returned home Monday night to a crowd of only 1,362 lowest ever for a Braves game in Atlanta-and smashed No. 711.

Despite massive coverage of the home run in local newspapers and the fact that the Braves were facing another road trip, only 4,236 watched Tuesday night's battle with San Diego, in which Aaron had a single in four trips.

The Braves were to face the Dodgers in Los Angeles Wednesday night.

"It's disappointing to see only 1,300, but being a professional ball player I feel like the 1,300 who came are entitled to see you play as hard as you can," Aaron had said following his home run.

"We've got to have a contender," said Manager Eddie Mathews. "I think that's the answer. Gimmicks won't do it. We need a winner."

Atlanta has drawn only 726,520 in 64 playing dates at home this year, while 1,457,016 watched Aaron and the Braves on the road in 73 playing dates. The club has been out of contention most of the year and was mired in fifth place before Wednesday's action, 21 games behind Cincinnati in the National League West.

The Chamber of Commerce announced a massive "Atlanta Salutes Hank Aaron" program the day before he hit his 710th home run against San Francisco, before only 2,872 fans on Sept. 10.

Highlight of the campaign is a four-year college scholarship in Aaron's name, to be given to a person otherwise unable to attend college. The Braves had previously announced that the team was establishing a similar scholarship program.

Sparky Not Yet Satisfied

By SPARKY ANDERSON

CINCINNATI (AP) - Some people say the Cincinnati Reds are one of baseball's great teams. I think we have to prove that yet.

I think we have to win a World Series and continue to win three years after that before we can be considered one of the best clubs in baseball.

Truthfully, this is the best ball club I've ever been associated with. It's been more of a team effort than past years. We should have been hurting when we lost Gary Nolan, Roger Nelson and Dave Concepcion. But there was never any crying.

We had to come out of the clouds when most people had written us off.

I'm not going to say I thought we would catch Los Angeles. But I did think it would be close. I felt we would make a rush at them at some point.

You always think of Pete Rose, Johnny Bench and the others, but we've got other guys too.

We've come from behind in 40 games, our starting pitchers are staying in there longer, our young players have come through and our pinch hitting has been excellent. It's the best bench I've every had.

We're going back to a developing club, with guys like Dan Driessen, Ken Griffey and Ed Armbrister. And we have two outstanding minor league pitchers who are a year away. Larry Payne, our No. 1 draft pick of 1972, has major league stuff. And Tom Carroll can throw bullets. But both will spend at least two months in the minors next year before we bring them up.

Our people have worked hard to produce these good kids. It's not an accident. We've had our backs to the wall in the drafts for the past four years.

As far as the playoffs are concerned, I feel the New York Mets are the team to watch. They've got their pitching down now, and with Tom Seaver going twice-and maybe three times-in a short series, anything could happen.

In the American League, I like Baltimore. As far as I'm concerned, Earl Weaver is one of the great managers in the game. Dick Williams at Oakland is the same dynamic type. They knew how to win and handle personnel.

I have a goal: to last as long as Alston.

The greatest enjoyment in this game is to see someone come to you as a baby and become a ballplayer - and a man.

Some guys let dollars and cents get ahead of all the other things. That's not for me.

Brewers, 7-4

CLEVELAND (AP) - George Scott drove in four runs, three with his 21st homer of the season, and rookie Tim Johnson knocked in two runs, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 7-4 victory over the Cleveland Indians Wednesday.

Scott blasted his homer in the seventh inning, knocking out loser Dick Tidrow, 13-15.

Winner Jim Slaton, 13-13, allowed nine hits before being relieved by Ed Sprague in the ninth.

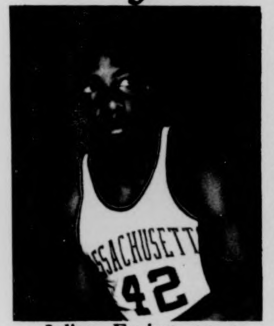
Pass The Word, Dr. J. Is Back



Julius Erving as a UMass Freshman in 1968

By MDC STAFF

If you've never witnessed the magic of one Julius Erving on a basketball court, set this Saturday night aside for the trip of an athletic lifetime. "Dr. J", as so deemed by his tar court disciples will be at the Springfield Civic Center with his newest mates, the New York Nets for an exhibition game with his former team, the Virginia Squires.

Erving, who catalyzed this campus into a basketball paradise and stimulated a basketball program to national proportions is the ABA. His move back to his home base of Long Island and an estimated $3 million contract were, in essence, the last link between merger with the NBA and total exhaustion.

As a folk hero to the new breed of basketball freaks, stories of Erving's "double-pumps-and-tomahawk-jams" and "blocking attempted stuff shots with his armpit over the rim" have become legend. His 37 points led an all-star team to a 145-103 pasting of a UCLA alumnus team that featured Kareem Abdul Jabbar, Sydney Wicks, Curtis Rowe, etc. at Los Angeles during the summer. And the stories go on and on.

Besides Erving, the Nets feature some of the best young talent in basketball, period, with Bill Paultz, Larry Kenon, Brian Taylor, John Roche, and Bill Shaeffer. The Squires are still a pretty good team without Dr. J. Their biggest aquisition from the college draft was Bill Walton's backup, Swen Nater of U.S.-Russian fame, which made him the second best college center in the country last year.

The game starts at 8 p.m. But, if you can't make it, WUMV-TV will present in its entirety, a replay of this game to be filmed live at the Civic Center at the Bluewall Sunday night at 9:30 p.m. as part of a doubleheader with UMass-Maine football at 7.

Marty Kelley and Earle Barroll will call all the action.

Ryan Sets AL Strikeout Mark

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP) - Nolan Ryan broke the American League one-season strike-out record and pitched a five hitter to lead the California Angels to a 6-2 victory over the Texas Rangers Wednesday night in the first game of a twinight doubleheader.

Ryan struck out Texas shortstop Jim Mason in the first inning to tie the record of 349 set by Rube Waddell of the Philadelphia Athletics in 1904.

Two innings later, Ryan fanned designated hitter Bill Sudakis to set the new mark.

Riggs vs. King: No Love Match

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

HOUSTON (AP) - Bobby Riggs and Billie Jean King get into an eyeball-to-eyeball, name-calling joust Wednesday on the eve of their $100,000 winner-take-all tennis battle of the sexes, which broke into a squabble over whether Bobby "is a creep."

"I don't mind you calling me a hustler, chauvinist pig or egomaniac," the 55-year-old Riggs told his 29-year-old woman adversary. "But you shouldn't call me a creep. It is not a nice word."

Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Billie Jean didn't budge an inch.

"It is not such a bad word in Beverly Hills," she replied. That was as far as she woud go.

"I think she should have apologized, but she didn't," Riggs said. He said that Billie Jean used the term in a national magazine article.

Riggs and Billie appeared for a 30-minute press conference in the bubble outside the Astrodome where their match will take place.

It was their first confrontation since reaching Houston.

Asked how she felt about Riggs, who triggered this highly publicized match with his derisive comments about women in general and women's tennis in particular, Billie Jean said: "I like him and I hate him. He is so ridiculous. Sometimes I laugh, but mostly I get furious."

Making a prediction about the match, Billie Jean said she expected the best of five match to go only three sets. She left no doubt who she thought would win it.

Riggs said, "She expects to scrape me off the Astrodome floor. I will scrape her up. She is a woman and is subject to women's emotional frailities. She will crack up during the match."

Earlier, Billie Jean had been no worse than an 8-5 underdog against Riggs, who shamed Margaret Court in their Mother's Day battle in San Diego May 13.

The best-of-five set duel with optic yellow tennis balls, which has excited and divided a nation, is scheduled at 7 p.m. CDT over a synthetic green carpet.

The match will be shown nationally by ABC-TV and to some 40 countries overseas via satellite. Europeans will have to stay up until after midnight to view it.

Television sponsors reportedly paid $90,000 a minute for commercial TV time.

Billie Jean became ill and defaulted in a third-round match in the recent U.S. Open at Forest Hills, but the five-time Wimbledon women's champion showed up on the scene early this week and announced in a loud voice: "I am fine, physically and mentally. I am ready. All I can say is Bobby had better be ready, too."

While Mrs. King has remained in virtual seclusion, avoiding all the fanfare and gimmickry associated with the unique promotion, Bobby has been swinging wildly on a merry-go-round of parties, public appearances and late night sessions, gabbing with the press in his seventh floor suite.

Mets, 7-3

NEW YORK (AP) - Pitcher George Stone contributed to two rallies and Cleon Jones walloped a pair of homers to New York Mets to a 7-3 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates that tightened the tense National League East division race Wednesday night.

Stone pitched six innings and scattered eight hits, but his biggest contributions came in the third and fifth innings, when he figured in the scoring of two runs.

After Jones hit a two-fun shot in the second inning, Stone then scored as Felix Millan singled up the middle for a 3-2 New York lead.

In the fifth, Stone knocked in what proved to be the winning run. Jerry Grote opened with a double off the left field wall, moved to third on Bud Harrelson's base-hit bunt and came home on Stone's groundout.

Cubs, 8-6

CHICAGO (AP) - Two-run homers by Rick Monday, Ron Santo and Billy Williams enabled the Chicago Cubs to overcome Montreal's early five-run lead and defeat the Expos 8-6 Wednesday.

The Cubs scored five runs in the fifth inning to hand Montreal relief ace Mike Marshall the defeat. Marshall, 12-11 with 29 saves, came on with the Expos leading 5-2 after Randy Hundley doubled and Adrian Garrett singled for one run, Monday hit his 25th homer of the baseball season and Williams walked to chase starter Mike Torrez.

Phils, 3-2

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Steve Carlton raced home on a wild pitch by Tom Murphy in the fifth inning to break a 1-1 tie and the Philadelphia Phillies went on to a 3-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday night.

Carlton started the fifth with a single. Denny Doyle doubled Carlton to third and he scored on the wild pitch. Del Unser singled home Doyle with an insurance run.

St. Louis took a 1-0 lead in the first when Lou Brock singled, reached second when Carlton threw wild on a pickoff attempt, took third on an infield out and came home on a high chop to the pitcher.

Philadelphia tied it 1-1 in the fourth as Willie Montanez tripled and scored on Mike Schmidt's single.

St. Louis added another run in the ninth on a single by Joe Torre, a wild pitch and a double by Terry Hughes.

(Ms.) King Is Dead

By BILL BALLOU

Bobby Riggs is a huckster, super salesman, con man, and at times, thoroughly repulsive egotist. And I hope he skunks Ms. King tonight.

For me, this one is man vs. woman, and nothing else. I can't deny my sex, and because of it I'll root for a male stooge like Riggs over a genuinely classy woman like Billie Jean King.

Absurd, you say.

Maybe, but I can't help getting it out of my mind that Billie Jean is trying to prove the woman athlete is as good as the man.

She isn't.

It is a cruel biological trick that women can't hit a golf ball as far as a man, etc. but that isn't to say that women's sports aren't as enjoyable to watch as men's.

Women's golf, in particular, is much more enjoyable than men's. The women have to play the game with their smarts, and all the clubs in their bags. They have to rely on finesse, and shotmaking, and it takes them three to reach most par fives, and par fours aren't a driver and a wedge.

The men overpower a course and while their scores are lower, the variety of golf shots seen and situations excaped from or succumbed to is much smaller.

I find tennis dull to watch, because the action isn't continuous enough. And women's tennis, unless it's between two top flight players, is pure sominex.

However, certain events, like this one, don't have to be well played to be entertaining. And it's strange that in this case the male is the one who's going to have to rely on finesse to pull off a win.

The whole Riggs style makes it a tough question as to who really is the better raw tennis player. Much of what Riggs does is aimed at the psyche. Maybe he isn't a better physical player, but rather puts his opponent into such a state that she (or he) can't perform to the best of her abilities. Certainly Margaret Court isn't as bad as she looked against him.

Sadly, Riggs' victory, for it is a sure thing, won't prove too much. It should prove that men are better tennis players than women, but there never was much question of that anyway. But it won't prove a think about volleyball, gymnastics, water polo, or any other sport that some folks may think can be played on equal terms.

Women really have no business competing with or against men. But this is something special, the ultimate and most basic matchup. Man against woman. In front of most of the nation and for lots of spending change. It may be the purest form of competition, because, for the fans at least, the amount of money makes no difference. It's just Ozzie vs. Harriet, or Ward vs. June.

So, what's going to happen is this. Bobby Riggs, a 55-year-old P.T. Barnum, is going to beat Billie Jean King, a symbol. He'll do it by outsmarting her, outfinessing her, outpyshing her. But he won't overpower her. He'll beat her at a game she can play, and what can be more convincing a victory.

Chalk another one up for Adam.

King Wins And Southwest Goes Wild

By REID FISHMAN

The Billie Jean King-Bobby Riggs tennis match last night was billed by many people as a fight between male and female, and when Southwest learned Ms. King won, it was time for toilet paper, firecrackers, and the "Male Masked Marvel."

Both male and females leaned out of windows to shout praise for Ms. King, damnation for Mr. Riggs, or vice versa. At least 300 people crowded into the courtyards as toilet paper plummeted from dorm windows, and obsceneties were shouted back and forth between dorms.

"The pig is dead, the pig is dead," shouted some females from a southwest dorm. "Billie Jean King, Billie Jean King," shouted some others.

A Collegian reporter said most of the persons in the courtyard were men, and that one gentlemen wearing an American flag on his back and a mask on his face calling himself "The Male Masked Marvel" was "running around outside of Kennedy."

Several women standing outside of John Quincy Adams in Southwest said "Men can't accept inferiority," when asked about the activities.

"Long live Bobby Riggs," yelled a group of men.

Both women and men in the area yelled obscentities back and forth between dormitories.

In the past, many events -- the first snowfall of winter, a win in a football game, or just a too-quiet Saturday night--can be the spark that sets off Southwest. Last night, it was the Billie Jean King-Bobby Riggs tennis match.

"It's typical of Southwest," said one disgusted onlooker.

OUTREACH An Alternative For Those Campus Blues

By BARBARA VOORHEES

School can be a real drag sometimes. Sitting in boring classes, taking boring books.

Ever wish you could get out and get some real training in the vocation you have chosen for your future career? Or just find out if the field you have chosen for your future career? Or just find out if the field you have chosen is really the one for you?

Through the Student Internship Program (SIP) of Outreach you can get out of that classroom and into a job in your field for the semester while still earning fifteen credits, six toward your major.

Any student, regardless of cum, is eligible for the program.

If the people at SIP don't know of a job in the area yyou choose, they claim they'll find one.

Most jobs are 40-hour-a-week volunteer positions, although there is a possibility of being paid.

Positions are now available in cities throughout Massachusetts, and in New York City and Washington D.C. SIP is also affiliated with programs in Appalachia and Central America.

During the 1974 spring semester students working in Washington D.C. will be able to live in a residential hall there which has been rented by the University.

Outreach is funded through the Provost's office.

Students interested in working for the spring semester should contact the SIP office in 318 Arnold, 545-2021, or attend the mass meeting of all interested persons Oct. 1, and 2nd in 106 Thompson from 7:30 to 10 p.m.

The following is a list of jobs where SIP students are working now:

The Valley Advocate, Amherst-Pelham IPC, Boston City Hospital, Cambridge-Somerville Mental Health, Center for the Study of Institutional Alternatives, Child and Family Service of Springfield Inc. and Community Council for Girls Center.

Also, Hampshire Day House, Home for Little Wanderers, Inter-American Rural Youth Program, Lynn Model Cities, Mass. Defender's Commission, National League of Cities, City of Newton, and New england Congressional Caucus.

Also, Northern Worcester Country Legal Services Inc., OSAGE Appalachian Program, Perkins School for the Bline, State Department, Smithsonian Institute, State House, WMPIRG and WBZ FM Radio.

Also, WGBY, Springfield, Western Mass. Legal Services, Willie Ross School for the Deaf, WNAC-TV, Channel 7 Boston, Wood's Hole Oceanographic Institute, Worcester Memorial Hospital, Worcester Youth Guidance Clinic and WRKO Radio and TV.

Also, The Phoenix, Valley Women's Center, Valley Farms, Department of Immigration and Naturalization, New York City, and in the offices of a number of Mass. Congresspersons.

This is not a complete list.

With the current gasoline shortage, it's hard enough. A VW is light on gas but this one is the best we've seen around— no miles to the gallon with the help of a trailer truck.

CCEBS Largest Program Of Its Type In NE Area

In 1967 the black faculty and staff at UMass formed the "Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students". Since that time the program has expanded into the largest program of its type in the New England area. One of the main objectives is to provide support services for the minority students' in support of his acquisition of academic skills. Another major objective is to provide an opportunity for a college education to students who under other circumstances may never attend or aspire for college because of financial needs.

CCEBS students are Black, Spanish American, American Indian, Oriental and White students. The CCEBS students usually come from low-income families and bring both academic and financial disabilities. CCEBS provided financial aid for these students depending on the parent and students financial status. In order to determine the amount of financial assistance needed, the students must submit a Parent's Confidential Statement and Internal Revenue Statement from the previous year.

CCEBS is supported by Federal, State, and University grants. CCEBS does not have a faculty but has a staff. The staff is composed mainly of graduate students. They are on an academic year appointment. Other members of the staff include University professionals who devote part of their responsibilities to CCEBS components.

The latest figures indicate that there are approximately the following number of students in each of the following disciplines:

School of Education, 80; Business, 4; Business Administration, 30; Arts and Sciences, 100; Afro-Am, 2; Psychology, 17; Sociology, 42; Animal Science, 2; Anthropology, 4; Art, 5; Agriculture and Food Economics, 4; Electrical and Computer Engineering, 3; English, 11; Food Science, 2; Geography, 1; History, 8; Honors, 2; Home Economics, 20; Hotel Administration, 4; Human Development, 10; BDIC, 6; Industrial Engineering, 2; Journalism,3; Math, 2; Mechanical Engineering, 2; Medical Technology, 7; Music, 1; Nursing, 29; Physical Education, 28; Pre Dental, 5; Plant and Soil Science, 3; Political Science, 17; Public Health, 12; Recreation, 1; Speech, 16; Undeclared, 32; Zoology, 2.

The main fields chosen are education, business and liberal arts.

Distinguished Teachers Receive Awards

Outstanding performance in the classroom at UMass was recognized this week with the presentation of the annual Distinguished Teacher Awards to three faculty and three graduate teaching assistants.

The faculty awards went to Associate Professor George Armelagos of anthropology, Professor Joseph Hartshorn, head of geology and geography, and Assistant Professor Clair W. Naylor of mathematics and statistics. The TA awards went to Toni Farrenkopf of psychology, Helene Mensh of classics and George H. Troughton of general business and finance.

All six carry a $1000 stipend. Selection was by a student-faculty committee that considered nominations from all parts of the University community. The awards were presented by Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, provost and vice-chancellor for academic affairs at Tuesday's assembly of campus governance units.

Professor Armelagos is a native of Michigan and received his bachelor's degree from the University of Michigan in 1958. He took his master's degree at the University of Colorado in 1963 and his Ph. D. in 1967. Professor Armelagos has participated in the Honors Program and has been a faculty member sponsoring the Colloquium at Southwest Residential College. He is known as a steady and conscientious researcher as well as an excellent teacher.

Professor Hartshorn received his bachelor of science from Harvard University in 1947, his M.A. from Harvard in 1950 and his Ph.D. from Harvard in geomorphology in 1955. Dr. Hartshorn is known as an efficient and steady researcher as well as an excellent teacher. Prior to coming to UMass, Dr. Hartshorn was an assistant to the branch chief of the Regional Branch of Geology in New England as part of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Student Government Explained

By DENNY MATTEAU

"Students are especially forbidden to combine together for the purpose of absenting themselves from any required exercise, or violating any known regulation of the College." -- This is Rule Number One in the 1873 Massachusetts State College regulations.

In 1973, students' rights are such that, "No student shall be held accountable by any judiciary for violation of any rule or regulation the subject of which is unrelated to the preservation of the equal right, safety, or property of others.", as stated in Article IV, Sec. 5 of the Constitution of the Student Government Association.

The Student Government Association, which is defined, in its constitution as "all University undergraduates and Stockbridge students," is described in the 1973-'74 General Information Catalog" as working for "fundamental academic and social reform on campus while providing a variety of services to students.

These services include draft counseling, a lecture note program, book loans, a bus service, a course description guide, the attorney for students, and funding for a wide variety of student groups and services. The S.G.A. is working towards full student self-determination in social and academic life."

The Student Senate is the legislative arm of the S.G.A., and receives its powers, which are listed below, from the S.G.A. constitution. Included in the constitution is a statement by the Board of Trustees which says, in part, "...the Board, while retaining its ultimate legal authority in governing the University, recognizes that the faculty, the students, and other groups, within the University, have the right, the responsibility, and the privilege of advising on policies affecting the University. The board will ensure these rights. . .through the various government bodies. . .Students will have the primary responsibility for services and activities which are designed primarily to serve students, or those which are financed by students, managing student political affairs and organizational matters, and setting standards for student behavior, conduct, and discipline."

These regulations and statements illustrate the legalistic aspects of University government. In an interview yesterday, Nick Apostola spoke about the political aspects. "In the 30 or so years that the Student Senate's been around," he said, "only once has the Senate's decision been contested by the Administration. That was the summer after the 1970 strike, and Chancellor Tippo became concerned over off-campus spending. I don't remember the details, but the Senate held fast."

However, a former Senator, Gary Gomes, asserted, "The reason the Senate has so seldom been contested is that it never does anything. That's why I never ran after '72."

Nick Apostola said, "We're getting more and more say where other student fees are spent, (the Senate has mainly dealt with the Student Activities Tax), and we're really different from other schools, as far as effectiveness is concerned, in stopping student fuckovers."

Bus Driver's Route Not Easy

By MIKE KNEELAND

Driving a campus bus can be a hassle. So says senior Peter Sullivan who spends 12 hours each week driving a bus between Belchertown Road and Sunderland.

"The vast majority of students are extremely courteous," he says. "But there are some students who give us a hard time.

"I had a guy on the bus the other day who wanted to get off at a stop

He admits, however, that he can't often stop for students because the bus is full. He said this frequently happens at Puffton Village.

but didn't ring the buzzer. So when I drove by the stop, he started giving me a hard time."

Many students have criticized the bus system, but Sullivan things it runs especially well when one considers it is only in its second semester of operation.

"I think the new communications system will solve that problem," he says. "The driver could call the dispatcher who would then re-route another bus to the area."

Another problem, Sullivan noted, are students who try to waive a bus down between stops. "I try to stop for them, but it's not always safe."

Busdrivers are paid $2.25 per hour. The money is not taxed since it's technically classified as tuition assistance.

Humphry Predicts Food Shortage

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States could find itself running short of food if Midwestern farmers run out of fuel this winter, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey predicted yesterday.

"If we can't get the fuel we need in the Midwest, you ain't seen nothing yet," Humphrey told the Food Industry Energy Conference.

"If there is a 10 to 15 per cent drop in feed grains production because of the failure to get fuel to dry our crops, there will be an economic catastrophe," he said.

Humphrey said "next year will be worse than this one and the year after that will be even worse" because the nation's rate of energy consumption is outstripping increases in energy production.

He said the nation must take immediate steps to slow energy consumption and to increase production.

Beef Is Available But Price Still High

By MARSHA VENUTI

It looks as though the great beef shortage of 1973 is coming to an end.

Several restaurants and grocery store operators in the Amherst area said this week they are having no trouble getting beef. In a Collegian survey, it was found that the prices are high but the beef is available.

In fact, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's latest feedlot inventory, more beef is available for consumers all over the country.

One of the reasons, said an article in the Christian Science Monitor this week, is that in order to cut costs and make more money, many dairymen are turning their marginal milk producing cows into meat. The report said dairymen must pay such high prices for grain to feed their cows that they can't resist selling the animals for beef rather than their milk because beef brings in more money.

Friendly's Ice Cream Shops, about temporarily discontinued its "big beef" sandwich, now has it available again. Restaurants featuring beef meals are not complaining of a shortage. By planning and ordering ahead, they can keep the situation well under control, operators say.

The manager of the Steak-Out restaurant in Amherst said that he is having no problem at all getting beef, one of the reasons being that he planned so far ahead. Steak-Cut is part of a chain, concentrated mainly in Connecticut. The manager said Steak-Out has surveys that show "people are trying to gorge themselves with beef before they lose it". He said

The Ponderosa Steak House Manager on King Street in Northampton is also optimistic. He said that the firm imports beef from Australia, so that it has had no problems.

Lee Turner, Manager of Mr. Steak, also on King Street in Northampton, said the firm adjusted the inventory long ago to absorb the discrepancy between supply and demand. Turner said that he is paying the same price for meat now as he did before the freeze.

Nor are grocery stores complaining of a shortage of beef.

Richard Sepiol, Assistant meat manager of the new Finast store in Hadley, said that the only problem area in getting meat, in short demand and in high price such as veal. He said he gets his meat from the Finast warehouse in East Hartford and is guaranteed enough so that it is unusual to run out. Sepiol said that because the store is so new and mainly young people shop there, his store is meeting a different kind of meat demand than most other Finast stores.

The proprietor of Louis' Foods, Inc., Joseph Vincent, said that he can see a definite increase in the availability of meat this week. He explained that the amount of kills is being kept down-only two-thirds the number of cattle that should be is slaughtered. He said that prices this week are steady with last week's although they are down from a month ago. The price of pork is down and the price of lamb is steady. People are not buying less, but they are buying cheaper cuts, he believes.

But, Vincent said, there is more involved in determining price than simply the number of kills in a slaughterhouse. "Certain cuts cost less in the winter anyway," he said, "because there is more of a demand for them." He said that the reason for this is because people do not make as many large hot meals in the summer as in the winter.

Vincent said, "I don't think we'll ever see cheap meat again." He said one thing to blame for high prices is strikes, "employes wanting to make more money, so that somebody has to pay for it and that's you and me."

Joel Stoneham of the University Food Services said he has difficulties purchasing meat because of the large quantities and because the orders must be made so far in advance. "You can buy meat products," he said, "The only questions are prices and what the prices will be in the future."

According to another article in the Christian Science Monitor this week, if dairymen continue selling their milch cows for slaughter, "milk may replace meat as the 'scarcity' item on your grocery list." The article also said that milk production in Vermont, accounting for 49.2 percent of the Boston Regional milk market, has dropped 6.5 per cent since last year and is continuing to drop. The number of dairy cows in Wisconsin, "America's Dairyland", has dropped by 20,000 since January, the Monitor reported.

UMass Senior Tries Race For Mayor

By BRIAN COOK

UMass senior Stephen J. Erickson, 21 has announced his candidacy for mayor in the coming October 9 election in Gardner, Massachusetts.

A major in biochemistry, Erickson's entrance into town government can be attributed to a life-long interest in politics (he worked for McCloskey's campaign in New Hampshire). Before transferring to UMass, Erickson spent two years at Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster, Pennsylvania where he pursued primarly political science courses.

Erickson's platform includes a program of preventive maintenance, senior citizens' facilities through pending state and local funds, and attraction of new businesses to a recently constructed industrial park in order to create "more and better jobs in a town saddled with high unemployment and low paying factory jobs."

This weekend marks Gardner's 50th anniversary, Erickson has planned some heavy campaigning at the many events scheduled to take place in celebration of the event. Erickson stated, "I expect to make it through the upcoming primary due to the efforts of a devoted campaign staff and a firm voting block behind me."

Erickson is competing against City Councillors Edward Chitow and Earnest Kirouac, Council President Alvin Rousseau, and the incumbent Mayor Clarke Stedman.

Inmates Eligible For College Credit

By SHELLEY LAUZON

Inmates at the Hampshire County House of Correction are now able to receive college credit through University offered courses. The program, begun last fall through the efforts of Ed Barney of the Comparative Literature Department and Mason Lowance of the English Department, offers 3-credit and mini-courses in such areas as English, Comparative Literature, and Psychology. Two courses are being offered this semester, a Comp. Lit. course entitled "The Function of Literature" and English 151, "Introduction to Fiction."

Richard Spindle, a graduate student teaching the comparative literature course this semester at the House of Correction, explained the reasoning behind the mini-course format in terms of the inmates' "lack of systematization" in attending classes. The three 1 credit sections allow inmates to enroll in any one or all three of the sections, depending upon personal interest. Each section meets twice weekly, two hours at a time, for approximately a month. For example, one section of Spindle's course deals with Greek tragedies, a second with Eastern literature, and the third with novels like Melville's Billy Budd and Foretopman.

Enrollment varies in each section of the mini-course. "It's asking people a lot to do something that is not totally known to them. They aren't used to going to classes or the school environment," said Spindle.

At the outset, enrollment in the courses offered was high, according to Spindle, but gradually dropped off to a "handful" at the semester or course's end. He noted that last spring's enrollment was 61 in the two courses offered, but only 8 finished. The most successful of the courses, in Spindle's opinion, was the creative writing course offered this summer. Eleven enrolled at the start, 6 joined later, and the final number was 10.

"We are achieving a more realistic level, I think, in this semester's enrollent. We have a low enrollment now, probably because the program isn't new anymore and there is no huge wave of action for more courses," he said.

"Joint-inspiration" on the part of Ed Barney and Mason Lowance is attributed to the founding of the program, according to Spindle. He stressed the fact that Connie Cronin of County Correctional Services has been instrumental in working with the jail administration.

"The County Correctional Services is a mediational point between the jail administration and society. Lawyers and nearly 100 persons are doing things like taking inmates to the doctor, getting them jobs, enrolling them in courses, and just talking to them. Connie has worked extremely hard to achieve what we have," he said.

The House of Correction also offers inmates programs such as Project Model, an auto mechanics course, the GED for high school equivalency, and drug rehabilitation and therapy. Two inmates have completed sophomore level in college and three are taking courses here at the University. One prisoner, Spindle said, transferred from Walpole to take advantage of the educational opportunities available at Hampshire County.

"Merton Burt has a very liberal jail administration. He believes in getting people contact outside to relieve tension and frustration. These programs are one means of accomplishing that," Spindle said.

When asked about possible expansion of the program, Spindle said he feels there is no demand on the part of the inmates to expand.

Stage Is Set For Watergate Showdown

Appeals Court To Intervene

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House and the special Watergate prosecutor told a federal appeals court Thursday that they had failed to reach a compromise settlement on access to presidential tapes recordings.

The U.S. Court of Appeals had suggested the compromise and failure between the two parties to agree set the stage for an expected showdown on the courts' right to compel President Nixon to surrender the tapes.

In nearly identical letters to the clerk of the seven-member appeals court, both parties said they had met on three occasions this week and regretted to advise the court "that these sincere efforts were not fruitful."

They said they had agreed to say nothing about their discussions beyond the notification to the court which had set Thrrsday as a deadline for respons to its suggested compromise.

The court had proposed that both sides explore the possibility of permitting special prosecutor Archibald Cox to listen to the tapes and determine what portions were essential evidence for the Watergate grand ju.

The letters disclosed that Cox and J. Fred Buzhardt, special White House counsel, had met Monday and Tuesday and that a final meeting was held Thursday.

Participants in the final meeting, which lasted several hours, included Cox, Buzhardt, Prof. Charles Alan Wright, special legal consultant to the President for the tapes case, and Leonard Garment, White House counsel.

The failure to reach an out-of-court settlement left it to the appeals court to decide the case on the constitutional issues raised.

When it suggested the parties try for a compromise, the court had cautioned that its suggestion should not be taken as an indication of how it ultimately might rule.

Whatever decision is forthcoming is considered certain to be appealed to the Supreme Court. Nixon has said he would abide by a definitive decision from the highest court but he has refused to discuss what he would consider a definitive judgment.

The long battle over the tapes entered the courts last July when Cox subpoenaed the recordings of nine presidential conversations about Watergate. After considering written and oral arguments from both aides, U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica ordered the President on Aug. 29 to give him the tapes to hear in private so he could determine if the President's claim that they should be kept secret was valid.

Both the White House and Cox disputed Sirica's ruling and asked the court of appeals to change it.

Cox wanted the court to order the tapes given to the grand jury or to allow him to listen to them along with Sirica.

The White House maintained its position that under the Constitution the three branches of government are equal and therefore the courts have no power to force the President to obey a judicial order.

The Senate Watergate committee also has filed suit seeking White House tapes and documents. Sirica on Thursday scheduled oral arguments on that suit for Oct. 1. The White House is scheduled to file written arguments Monday.

In another Watergate development Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy pleaded innocent Thursday in Los Angeles to state charges of conspiracy and burglary in connection with the 1971 break-in at the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

"Compromise Hope Was Slim"

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - It would have required too great a turnabout on President Nixon's part to have accepted an appeals court suggestion that he let the special Watergate prosecutor listen to the White House Watergate tapes.

Thus the hope of compromise generated by talks between special prosecutor Archibald Cox and White House lawyers was never more than faint.

And it was no surprise when both sides notified the U. S. Court of Appeals after a final session on Thursday "that these sincere efforts were not fruitful."

Every statement by the President, including his latest legal argument filed with the appeals court on Wednesday, has taken a firm position against releasing the tapes.

The appeals court suggestion, issued last week, appeared to stem from the historic reluctance of the judicial branch to decide cases on grounds that could upset the delicate balance of powers established by the Constitution.

The court had noted that Cox is in the executive branch and therefore the President could permit him to hear the tapes without violating the separation of powers.

But the President had dealt with that suggestion last July when he rejected Cox's request that he voluntarily give the prosecutor the tapes.

At that time, the President noted that Cox wanted the tapes for the use of the Watergate grand jury, which is a part of the judicial branch of government.

The appeals court also seemed to be keeping in mind the President's letter to Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., chairman of the Senate Watergate committee.

In rejecting Ervin's request for the tapes, the President said he had listened to them and had determined that they supported his version of events and also would not clearly resolve any of the questions about Watergate.

The tapes include recorded conversations between Nixon and former White House counsel John W. Dean III who claims the President knew of the Watergate cover-up.

The court had appeared to be suggesting that if Cox could hear the tapes, he might discover that they would not provide the decisive evidence he had sought.

So it now is up to the appeals court to decide the case on the legal arguments before it. And then it will be the Supreme Court's turn.

Nixon has promised to abide by a definitive decision of the highest court, but won't say what he considers definitive to be.

By WILLIAM L. CHAZE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Elliott Roosevelt, who claims a crazy man slandered his name, will appear before a Senate subcommittee to answer allegations that he helped contract for the assassination of Bahamiam Prime Minister Lyndon O. Pindling.

Roosevelt, a son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, could testify before the Senate subcommittee on investigations as early as next week, sucommittee chairman Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said Thursday.

Louis P. Mastriana, a convicted stock swindler, has said Roosevelt and an associate of gambling kingpin Meyer-Lansky offered him $100,000 to kill the Bahamian prime minister.

Both Roosevelt and the Lansky associate, Michael McLaney, have denied the allegation. Roosevelt has described Mastriana as a mental incompetent who is "absolutely crazy."

Roosevelt, who is currently at his ranch outside Lisbon, Portugal, is being sent a transcript of Mastriana's testimony, Jackson said.

McLaney wanted Pindling killed because the prime minister refused to grant him a gambling license, Mastriana testified. Roosevelt acted as the middle man in the transaction, the convicted stock swindler said.

Mastriana said he never attempted to assassinate the prime minister.

Mastriana's testimony was a byproduct of the subcommittee's investigation into the use of stolen and counterfeit securities in fraudulent business transactions.

Agnew Investigation Gains Momentum

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-There were increasing signs yesterday that the stalled federal investigation of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew is about to start again, either before a grand jury or in a court fight.

As the federal grand jury which is investigating allegations of political corruption in Maryland met again under strict secrecy restrictions in Baltimore, sources reported that U.S. Atty. George Beall was in Washington.

Beall, who is directing the grand jury probe, had been reported here on several occasions during the week, a departure from his routine of work in Baltimore. Newsmen also could not recall a time when he was absent during a grand jury session.

A Justice Department spokesman declined to say if Beall was meeting with Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson, who has assumed over-all responsibility for the investigation. Agnew's lawyers declined to accept or return telephone calls from newsmen.

Richardson decided last week to permit evidence related to Agnew to go before the grand jury but postponed deciding the difficult constitutional question of whether a vice president can be indicted before he is impeached. It has been reported that Richardson wants to hear what witnesses against Agnew testify under oath before tackling that decision.

It also has been reported that Agnew's attorneys plan some court action to prevent evidence relating to the vice president from going before the grand jury.

Sources said Beall probably was in Washington to brief Justice Department officials, to plan his grand jury action as it related to Agnew and also to discuss with Justice Department officials how to proceed if Agnew's attorneys try to stop the probe.

Duane Named Head Opthamologist

PHILADELPHIA (AP)-Dr. Thomas D. Duane, physician whose research led to the cause of blackouts among pilots, was named Thursday as ophthalmologist-in-chief at the Wills Eye Hospital and Research Institute.

Dr. Duane, whose appointment will remain chairman of the Department of Ophthalmology and chief-of-service at Thomas Jefferson University's Jefferson Medical College and hospital, where he has been since 1962.

Duane, 55, succeeds Dr. Arthur H. Keeney, who resigned to return as dean of his alma mater, the University of Louisville Medical School. Keeney was at Wills eight years.

While Duane was a flight surgeon during the Korean War, he discovered it was lack of circulation to the retina that caused blackouts among pilots. Up to that time, lack of circulation was blamed.

His findings, published in 1965 as "Opthalmological Research USA" demonstrated that lack of circulation to the brain occurred in blackouts, but only after a condition of precipitation in the retina.

Insergents Tighten Hold On Highway 5

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — While government forces counted successes on two major highways and in Compong Cham, the military command said yesterday insurgents had tightened their hold on the vital supply read to the rice paddies of northwestern Cambodia.

Col. Am Rong, chief spokesman for the command, said the Communist-led Khmer Rouge have expanded their zone of control on Highway 5 in an area 35 to 45 miles from the capital and that government units have pulled back. The road was cut by insurgents Sept. 6.

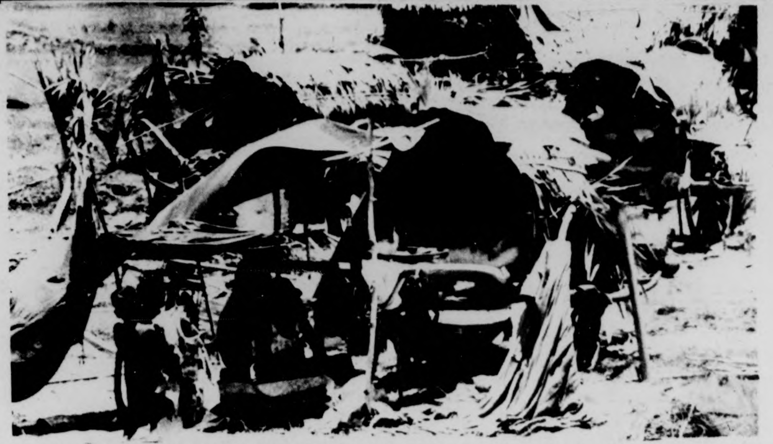
In Kompong Cham, government troops won back a military engineer compound on the northwestern edge of the city and killed seven insurgents, Am Rong said.

And in the Phnom Penh area, government forces cleared Highway 1, the road to South Vietnam, of Khmer Rouge troops at a point about nine miles from the heart of Phnom Penh.

Highway 4 remained open to traffic from the deepwater port of Kompong Som for the second consecutive day after having been cut for nearly a month.

By stopping the insurgents at Kompong Cham the government believed it had blocked a major Khmer Rouge objective. Documents captures at Kompong Cham showed the insurgents had planned to take the city during the first week in September to coincide with the conference of nonaligned nations in Algiers, Am Rong said.

The large-scale attack on Kompong Cham began Sept. 6. Some observers had speculated the Khmer Rouge wanted a victory there to gain greater recognition on the international scene.



HOME FOR REFUGEES-Cattle carts serve as mobile homes to these Cambodians, driven from their native villages by the continuing conflict in Indochina. Their wagon train, composed of wooden carts, paused on route 30, about six miles from Phnom Penh. Fighting continues in the Khmer Republic.

Chile's New Junta Probes Economy

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chile's new military junta, apparently in firm control, eased restrictions and turned its attention to the nation's economy Thursday.

Meanwhile, the widow of deposed President Salvador Allende fanned new controversy about the coup and her husband's death, which the ruling junta claims was suicide and others say was murder.

From exile in Mexico City, Hortensia Bussi de Allende asserted that her husband was killed by the military forces that overthrew him.

The junta has maintained that Allende shot himself in the mouth with a submachine gun given him by Fidel Castro, and when she arrived in Mexico Sunday Mrs. Allende had said she believed those reports.

In an interview with The New York Times, Mrs. Allende said that she has since learned from "eyewitnesses" - including her daughters, doctors and reporters - that Allende was shot in the stomach and chest as well as in the mouth.

Mrs. Allende flew to Mexico City last Sunday with two of her three daughters. There was no explanation of why she did not have information from the daughters at that time that Allende had not taken his own life.

Mrs. Allende said soon after arriving in Mexico City that she believed the junta's version that Allende had committed suicide.

One of Allende's daughters who flew to Mexico City, Maria Isabel Allende de Tambuti, was quoted in the newspaper Excelsior as saying that a bodyguard told her the deposed president was killed by "a machine-gun burst in the stomach and chest."

Two other men allegedly present at the end were quoted as giving the same version in the Mexican magazine Siempre.

In a report from Santiago, the magazine quoted Jorge Uribe, subdirector of the Office of Revolutionary Information under Allende, describing the last moments:

"We were shooting machine guns against tanks. There was no chance. They were going to take the palace. We were crying.

"Allende was still okay. He took me by the arm and said, "Try to get away. You are young and can continue the fight. All of you out. I will stay."

No Bread Shortage Foreseen

By HILMI TOROS
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — The world will have enough bread for the rest of the year, according to forecasts issued yesterday by four major wheat-exporting countries and the Common Market nations.

Agricultural experts from the 14 nations convened an emergency meeting yesterday and said they foresaw no immediate crisis. Some cautioned, however, that transport problems might deprive some areas of available wheat.

"Although supplies of wheat are tight there is certainly no crisis situation," said Richard E. Bell, deputy assistant U.S. secretary of Agriculture for international affairs and commodity programs.

Officials of the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, which called the meeting, said other delegates agreed with Bell.

But the U.N. organization said in a statement that delegates were told that the agency was "doubtful whether there was sufficient margin of supplies to meet any emergency requirements which might arise in the remainder of the season."

Industrialized wheat-importing nations were asked to reduce their buying to amounts "absolutely essential for current consumption."

The United States, Canada, Argentina, Australia and the Common Market countries were summoned to the meeting that was called three weeks ago by the food organization's secretary-general, Addeke Boerma. At that time, Boerma said it appeared that would wheat stocks, at their lowest levels in 20 years, would be depleted further this fall.

But figures released on the eve of the conference by the International Wheat Council in London calmed immediate worries about possible wheat shortages.

Boerma had feared an export-import deficit of nine million tons. The wheat council reduced the figure to between three million and six million tons.

The price of wheat is not expected to fall, however. Bell said demand for U.S. wheat would continue to be strong. He estimated that U.S. wheat stocks were likely to drop from 42 million to 36 million tons next July. But they should go up to 48 million tons the following year, Bell estimated.

U.S. sources said they did not expect either the Soviet Union or China to resort to massive wheat imports this year. A massive Soviet purchase last year, estimated at 15.5 million tons, was said to have been the chief source of the current tight wheat situation.

HEW Proposes Sterilization Regulations

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare proposed new regulations yesterday to protect the rights of the estimated 100,000 poor persons who are sterilized each year in clinics supported by federal funds.

The rules would require written informed consent of every patient, and establish a rigid system of safeguards including judicial review for cases involving minors under 21 and those ajudged mentally incapable of giving consent.

Federally financed sterilization of minors and the mentally incompetent has been blocked since July by order of HEW Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger.

The order came after allegations that two Montgomery County, Ala., girls were sterilized without their parents' understanding of the procedure and that some Aiken, S.C., welfare mothers were refused obstetrical care unless they accepted sterilization.

The parents of the Alabama sisters and a group of South Carolina women have filed a class-action lawsuit against the government in U.S. District Court here, seeking to halt all sterilization and use of experimental drugs in federally supported programs until adequate guidelines have been adopted, federal officials said.

Interested parties have 30 days to comment on the proposed regulations which apply to all programs overated by the Public Health Service and the Social and Rehabilitation Service.

Union Approves Pact

DETROIT, Mich. (AP) - The first United Auto Workers local union to vote on ratification of a proposed three-year contract with Chrysler Corp. approved the pact by a wide margin.

However, Local No. 444 President Charles Brooks in Windsor, Ont., said Thursday about half the workers failed to cast ballots.

Returns from the 10,000-member local showed about 82 per cent of those who voted approved the pact.

The vote opens the way for Windsor plants to resume operation over the weekend.

Only two others among the 69 Chrysler union locals scheduled votes Thursday and there was no immediate report on their actions.

Most of Chrysler's 127,500 workers represented by the United Auto Workers vote Friday and Saturday. Balloting is to be completed by neon Sunday.

If a majority of the workers approve the contract, Chrysler employes will go back to the plants Monday.

The UAW struck Chrysler at midnight last Friday, costing the nation's third largest automaker production of more than 7,000 cars and trucks daily. Chrysler said the strike is costing it more than $31 million daily and workers are losing $5 million in wages daily.

A contract offer was announced Monday by company and union bargainers just 63 hours after the strike began.

Major items in the offer include limits upon mandatory overtime, pension increases from $500 to $700 monthly over the next six years, full retirement benefits after 30 years, and wage boosts of three per cent annually plus an added 12 cents per hour in the first year.

Ford, which has nearly 170,000 UAW workers, is operating under an indefinite extension of a contract which expired last Friday. The same situation prevails at General Motors where there are 415,000 union members.

SST Takes Caution In Largest Airport

GRAPEVINE, Tex. (AP) - The British-French supersonic transport Concorde was forced Thursday to make a precautionary maneuver because a jetliner was in the area as the SST arrived for the dedication of the new Dallas-Fort Worth Airport.

The Concorde approached the airport of 1,000 feet prior to making its first landing in the United States, but the tower told the pilot to quickly ascend to 3,000 feet.

About 400 reporters from around the world were at the dedication ceremonies fo the world's largest airport and watched as the rapier-thin jetliner banked abruptly to the right and streaked upward.

Kendall K. Jones, a Federal Aviation Administration spokesman in Fort Worth, said the action was precautionary.

IMANI: Getting It On

"Imani", a small word meaning faith and hope is ready for action. We are a group getting into community involvement with low income students. We have a variety of things planned for the year 73-74 and wish for all those who want to become part of this action to come to our next meeting. this Monday at 7:30 in the Black Cultural Center. Kennedy 19th floor lounge.

At that time we will give a rational of all Imani's happenings. All are welcome to attend.

Somehow The Paper Gets Out

How Big Is This Headline Anyway?

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Lemon-creme pies fly through the air and connect with their intended victims.

"This one's for you, Ballou!!!"

"Woo woo woo woo woo," comes the response, "Back off!!" as the pie hits him squarely in the face, two more get him simultaneously in the back and stomach.

In the midst of the barrage of beer cans, pies, and flailing bodies, the more dedicated staff of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian (those with stories due), loyally pound out their stories for the last issue of last semester's newspaper.

Somehow, in spite of the annual end-of-the-year Collegian staff party, the paper magically appeared on campus the next day.

As at the party, mass confusion invariably reigns at the Collegian office. Above the incessant drumming of the AP machine, reporters beat out their copy from early morning until late at night, editors, reporters, layout staff, and other groupies drift in and out, bringing with them conversations, news tips, dogs, newspapers, questions, answers, gossip, noise, and more noise.

And so it goes on the second floor of the Student Union, where each day the harried staff rises above two-fingered typing, crank phone calls; bitter coffee; broken-down typewriters; and disappearing copy to deliver a daily newspaper to the students. Like the mail, or birth, or death, or sex, the Collegian always comes out.

It should be noted here that Bob plans to retire next week due to battle fatigue.

"R-r-r-ing!" Simultaneously, three of the intercom buttons light up on the phone. A reporter sitting near by remains totally oblivious to the phone's demands as he types up his article.

"Pick two," invites Tackeff to no one in particular as he strolls in with his latest editorial. "Mi mi mi mi mi."

Today the Collegian, tomorrow the New York Times

"Oh God, it seems like I was here only a few hours ago!"

"You were, dummy!"

Executive Editor Jerry Lazar runs screaming into the office, "Those Fucking assholes. They mis-spelled a word in the headline of my story, and rewrote the lead!!" In protest of such sacrilege, he rips up his Collegian.

"Shut up everybody--copy, copy, we need stories for tomorrow's issue, in case anyone's interested," yells our harried news editor, as she downs her upteenth cup of coffee.

"Where are our reporters???? We'll have to print all AP news, and I'll get fired and have to go on Welfare to support my dog!"

Despite the general overall atmosphere of disorder which envelopes the office, there does exist a method to the madness of putting out a daily newspaper. Herewith, is a behind-the-scenes look at a newspaper in the making.

The Editor-in-Chief's main function is to oversee the entire operation of the paper. He keeps track of what the editors are doing, and formulates long-range policy. The Editor-in-Chief also takes a lot of shit from a lot of people every day. It's a wonder that Editors-in-Chief last a month, let alone a year.

The Managing Editor is responsible for the day to day operation of the paper. It is his job to coordinate news, sports, and photo into the paper. Under him are five issue editors (one for each night) and their staffs who edit stories and AP copy, write headlines, count stories, and prepare a mock layout of the paper. A layout involves deciding where the pictures and stories will go on the pages in the paper.

The News Editor's job is perhaps the most time-consuming and nerve-wracking one in the office. Keeping up with the news is a chaotic business. Assignments are given as far in advance as possible. However, there is no telling when an unexpected story will arise, necessitating a frantic search for a reporter who doesn't have a 1:25. An 11:00 p.m. deadline for all news copy is set.

Photo is dependent on the news department to pin up their story list so that accompanying pictures the stories can be taken.

The Business Manager is in charge of selling ads and overseeing the business expenses of the paper. Under him are the Advertising Manager, who is in charge of the ad accounts, twelve ad representatives, and two secretaries. Ads are laid out every night, two nights ahead of the paper in which they are to appear, by an ad layout person. The ad layout--that is, how many pages of ads there are--generally determines the size of the paper.

"Copy runs", in which finished layout sheets of the paper are brought to the printer's are overseen by that night's issue editor. Copy runs take place about three times a night; at 8:30, 10:00, and midnight or later.

The issue editor accompanies the last copy run to the print shop, and oversees the production of the paper. He often does not return to Campus before the sun rises.

If you're ever hard up for something to do, take a trip some night to the printer's. The Collegian becomes a newspaper under the dilapidated roofs of two ramshackle buildings, inconspicuously located on a side street in Ware. The making of a newspaper is a fascinating process to watch.

Girls type the stories on "idiot tape", which transcribes the letters into a code. These tapes are fed into a menacing-looking machine called a compugraph, and come out on film. The film is developed in the film processor and the story comes out in newspaper columns called galleys.

In the next step, the galleys are waxed so that they will stick to the layout sheets. These layout sheets, which are exactly the same shape and size as the Collegian, are placed over "light tables"--special translucent table tops with lights shinning through--and the galleys are pasted on them exactly as the layout staff had decided earlier in the evening.

The negative is then put in a machine which presses an imprint of the page onto a large, thin, metal plate. In the final step, the plates are fitted onto the presses where the newspapers are run off.

As they are runoff the press the newspapers are folded, trundled down the conveyor belt, loaded onto the truck, and FINALLY delivered to various drop-off points on the campus.

NOW I'll tell you everything that really goes on at the printer's. You didn't think that things go as smoothly as that, did you??? Just ask the girls who type up the copy on those fancy typewriters. They'll tell you about lost pages, illegible

"I'll never figure that damm thing out," he mutters. "Every time I pick it up, there's some nut writing, and even illegible typing.

In all madness there is madness

Talk to Ellen, who does the paste-ups of the galleys onto the mock-up pages, and she'll tell you about paste going everywhere except on the page.

Wander down to the "Collegian Room" (really, that's what it's called--after all, we're their biggest account!), where the opaquing process is done. When the photo of a page is taken, oftentimes white spots appear in the negative, which have to be blotted out by a special pencil. Anyone stuck with this unglamorous job will tell you how aggravating it can be.

The next time you find yourself hanging aorund the Student Union waiting for the Collegian to arrive so you can read it during your 11:15 class, have a little patience if it's late AGAIN.

Mindszenty To Publish Memoirs Next Year

MONTREAL (AP)-Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty, who fled the Hungarian Communist regime in 1956, says he will publish his memoirs early next year despite the objection of Hungarian authorities.

Objections to the publication of his memoirs have been raised by the Hungarian ambassador to Italy, who says that they would be a violation of an agreement made when Cardinal Mindszenty was allowed to leave Hungary two years ago.

The Hungarian envoy said the agreement prohibits the cardinal from returning to Hungary and stops him from making statements considered detrimental to the Hungarian regime.

Cardinal Mindzenty said at a news conference Wednesday: "Human and individual rights are guaranteed by the United Nations and many other countries of the world. The cardinal, too, is entitled to those rights."

He did not indicate the contents of his memoirs.

The cardinal is in Canada to commemorate the millenium of Christianity in Hungary and the 1,000th anniversary of St. Stephen, Hungary's patron saint.

Child Bride Returned To Aborigines Village

By IAN McCAUSLAND
Associated Press Writer

SYDNEY, Australia (AP)-A 7-year-old aboriginal girl has been taken from the white family in which she grew up and returned to a tribal village and the middle-age man to whom she has been promised in marriage.

Mrs. Athol Brown, the white foster mother who took in Nola Ganamba as a sickly 8-month-old baby, said Nola left her home in tears, screaming that she wanted to stay with the Browns. An official from the government's Aboriginal Affairs Department took Nola anyway and the Browns are now trying to get her back.

"She became a sister to our own six children," said 45-year-old Ann Brown. "She called me Mum and Athol was Dad."

In the village there are bark huts where Nola was taken, to her parents and the middle-age tribesman to whom she had been promised at birth as a bride.

According to Mrs. Brown, and there has been no denial, the parents wanted the child back to reassure the husband-to-be-who was paying a bride price of food and tobacco-that she existed.

Psychosynthesis Group To Hold Sessions

A Psychosynthesis Group for personal and spiritual growth will be offered by Donald Mastriano in Southampton beginning October 10th. The Group will be limited in size and will meet every Wednesday from 7-10 P.M. through November 28th, including two full day sessions on October 14th and December 2nd.

Psychosynthesis is a psychological and educational approach to inner unfoldment, development, self actualization, and realization. It seeks to promote harmonious and balanced development of the personality and all psychological functions through a variety of techniques according to the situation. In addition, it assumes a higher self within each person which can direct this harmonious integration of one's being, and provides methods for contacting this self for realizing the creative, inspirational, and spiritual aspects of one's self. Psychosynthesis is a humanistic and transpersonal approach and offers a synthesis of Eastern and Western psychologies in systems of growth.

The Group will be led by Donald Mastriano, Doctoral Candidate from the UMass, School of Education, Human Relations Center, who has trained under the founder of Psychosynthesis, Roberto Assagioli, in Florence, Italy. For information about registration, call Don at 413-527-3842 or write him at Box 373, College Highway, Southampton, Mass.

Court Ruling Made On P. Bucks Will

RUTLAND, Vt. (AP)-The Rutland County Probate Court has ruled that a will of Pearl Buck's leaving all but jewelry to the Pearl S. Buck 1971 Trust is to be considered the last will and testament of the prize winning author.

Miss Buck, whose legal name was Pearl Walsh, died March 6 at her home in nearby Danby. She was 80, and was survived by a sister and nine children.

Judge Howard W. Douglas, in a ruling made public Thursday, said Miss Buck's will of April 7, 1971, and a codicle of Jan. 23, 1973, would be accepted for probate.

Those documents specifically state that she did not leave anything but an engagement ring to her children or the Pearl S. Buck Foundation, Inc. The children and the foundation, according to the will, had been taken care of by other means. The other means were not described.

The foundation was formed in 1964 and was dedicated to the education and general welfare of displaced children in the world. It has offices in six Asian countries, which work to solve problems for Amerasians, the children of American servicemen and Asian mothers.

One of Miss Buck's sons, Edgar, contested the will and codicle last April. He alleged the documents resulted from undue pressure by Theodore Harris, who Miss Buck described as an associate, and others who separated the author from her children during the latter part of her life.

Judge Douglas' order can be appealed through the next month.

No dollar value has been set for Miss Buck's worth at her death. That estimate was expected to be made public during the probate procedure.

Navy To Eliminate Admirals

NORFOLK, Va. (AP)-Over the next three years the Navy will eliminate over 10 per cent of its admirals, the Norfolk Ledger-Star said Thursday.

The newspaper, in a story by military writer Jack Kestner, said the Navy will cut 16 admiral billets during the current fiscal year followed by "similar" reductions over the next two fiscal years.

However, a spokesman in the office of Secretary of the Navy John W. Warner said the number of admirals cut during the next two fiscal years "will be something less than 16 for each of those years."

He said he assumed the cuts will be made through attrition, meaning that when an admiral retires or is transferred from a billet the billet will be eliminated.

News of the cut was contained in a recent letter from Vice Adm. David H. Bagley, chief of naval personnel, to Sen. Walter Mondale, D-Minn. The letter was in response to criticism by Mondale that the military "has become so top heavy with high-ranking officers that it's shaped not like a pyramid but like a balloon."

House To Consider Bargaining Bill

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts House is expected to begin consideration Monday of a watered down version of a collective bargaining bill for public employes which the Senate pushed through initial and final approval Wednesday night.

The bill, which had gone through three years of legislative study, three seperate drafts and more than 100 amendments, extends to state employes the rights which county and municipal employes now have to bargain collectively for wages and job benefits.

An earlier version of the bill was debated in the Senate for about five hours Wednesday afternoon, as a number of amendments were adopted chipping away at its original points.

"We started with a comprehensive collective bargaining statute and at least we ended up with something that is an improvement for state employes," said Sen. Alan D. Disitsky, D-Springfield who led the fight for the original bill.

He said that in addition to giving state employes collective bargaining rights, it provides for making agency fees negotiable and provides that certain local by-laws and statutes could be overidden by collective bargaining.

Tax Relief Bill Threatens State

BOSTON (AP) —The state could lose $45 million in the next six years under a bill for tax relief for state-based life insurance companies now pending before the House Ways and Means Committee.

According to Secretary of Administration William I. Cowin, who appeared before the committee Thursday in support of the bill, domestic life insurance companies have for a number of years been discriminated against in favor of foreign out-of-state life insurance companies.

The foreign companies now are paying a 2 per cent tax on company premiums earned in the state, while domestic companies have to pay that tax, as well as a 14 per cent surtax and another one per cent revenue tax.

Under the bill, the taxes for foreign companies would remain constant while those for domestic companies would be cut back to eight per cent over a five year period.

"We're trying to correct an inequity to protect taxable companies that the state is in danger of losing," Cowin said. Rep. Joseph Early, D-Worcester, asked why taxes should be cut for insurance companies when it would probably cause a tax increase for citizen taxpayers.

A number of insurance company executives were on hand at the hearing to testify in favor of the bill.

A Chosen Few

By HOWARD CLARK
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Morale dipped in the Albany Police Department a few years ago because only a few policemen were granted the opportunity to loot parking meters, a patrolman identified only as "Officer Y" told the State Investigation Commission Thursday.

"Some men were unhappy because they were not getting their share," he said. "So the sergeant decided that the money should be divided equally amongst all members of the squad, no matter who picked it up."

Did that solve the morale problem? "No," said Officer Y, "the men started to steal from each other."

The testimony drew chuckles from the 60 persons gathered in the small courtroom. It was given in the third day of public hearings by the SIC into alleged police corruption in New York's capital city.

Officer Y did not physically appear in the hearing room. He was closeted in an adjacent room with Joseph Fisch, the the SIC chief counsel. The answers by Officer Y to questions were heard by the audience through a loudspeaker in the hearing room.

The disembodied voice sketched a systemized pattern of parking meter thefts and store burglaries by the squad on which he served.

"I acted like I went along. I told them I took stuff I didn't take. My standing improved and I was accepted," he said. The policeman said the thefts and burglaries were encouraged by his squad leader, whom he identified as Sgt. Kenneth Kenndy, now a lieutenant.

Officer Y said he learned of the parking meter thefts shortly after he joined the department eight years ago.

An Easier Break For Your Car

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Motorists in Massachusetts found it easier to slake the thirst of their automobiles yesterday, the last day of a planned three-day federal price control protest and the day before a court hearing on an injunction to keep gasoline stations open.

Yesterday's break in the shutdown came at noon when stations were reopened in the Greater Springfield area, where the shutdown had met with about its greatest success.

A spokesman for dealers there said more than half the stations in the area had closed to protest Phase IV price controls.

The shutdown began Tuesday and was only partly successful from the beginning. Even that success was lessened after a judge late Tuesday issued a temporary injunction forbidding service station owners from banding together to close in protest of pricing.

It is a hearing on whether to make that injunction permanent that is scheduled for Friday.

The temporary injunction was issued at the request of Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn. It did not pertain to individual dealers but to those "acting in concert."

The Automobile Legal Association said Thursday, before the Springfield area stations reopened, that an unscientific check of stations indicated approximately the same number open as Wednesday when it estimated that 70 per cent of the state's stations were selling gas.

An ALA spokesman said that "pockets" of very heavy closures remained Thursday in Lexington, Wakefield and Bedford in the eastern part of the state.

In the western section, there were reports that owners of approximately 40 gasoline stations in Northern Berkshire County planned to close for the weekend of Sept. 28-30.

Gas Retailers May Hike Costs

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gasoline retailers will be allowed to raise prices soon, probably by Oct. 2, director John Dunlop of the Cost of Living Council said yesterday.

The Cost of Living Council announced last week that gasoline dealers would have until next Tuesday to submit information on their prices and profit margins and that the council would "act promptly to make appropriate upward adjustments in the ceiing prices."

Pressed by Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., Dunlop told a congressional subcommittee yesterday that "I would hope it would require no longer than a week" beyond next Tuesday for the council to act. That would be Oct. 2.

Dunlop said the action likely will result in hikes of one or two cents per gallon.

Dunlop told the subcommittee that the council also will consider permanent changes in Pase 4 profit-margin regulations applying to gasoline dealers. But he said that, although the council will consider changing the tight regulations on the petroleum industry, there are no plans to change them.

Allowing gasoline dealers an unlimited pass-through on costs would create "a situation considerably adverse to American consumers," Dunlop said.

He testified before the Joint Economic subcommitte on consumer economics.

The panel is studying the petroleum-products shortage expected this winter, and heard renewed calls Thursday for the Nixon administration to impose mandatory allocation of oil before winter weather begins. Protest service station closures continued in scattered parts of the nations yesterday but gasoline was available to motorists.

In Massachusetts, dealers in the Springfield area decided to end their shutdown yesterday morning.

The Automobile Legal Association said a check at one point indicated 30 per cent of Massachusetts stations were closed.

In the Washington, D.C., area, some station owners were planning a protest closure for Monday. Paul Longley, owner of a station in suburban Landover, Md., said: "About 60 per cent of the dealers will close Monday and we are hoping for 100 per cent." There are an estimated 2,000 stations in the Washington metropolitan area.

Loss Of Pilots Concerns Navy

SAN DIEGO (AP)- The growing number of experienced pilots leaving the Navy brought new expressions of concern yesterday as a top admiral toured California air bases, talking it over with the fliers.

Rear Adm. George E.R. Kinnear II, an assistant chief of the Bureau of Naval Personnel, blamed a congressional cut in flight pay for senior pilots.

"The number of what would be considered premature resignations has increased alarmingly," a Navy spokesman in San Diego said.

Since the salary changes last October, Kinnear said, it has cost the Navy up to $100 million "to train replacements for the aviation personnel who have left the service because of the pay cut" which he said Congress figured would save $14 million annually. He cited no figures on the number of resignations.

The resignation rate of lieutenants and lieutenant commanders especially has been critical, Kinnear said in an interview. He talked for two days with helicopter pilots, anti-submarine warfare pilots in San Diego area bases.

There was no indication any of the men plan to withdraw their resignations.

Amy Tells Cab Drivers How To Be Polite

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) - Amy Vanderbilt, who specializes in telling people how to be polite, began a class at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel this week for a group known for its lack of politeness - New York cab drivers.

Reminding the cabbies they have the reputation of being "the rudest and toughest in the world," the etiquette authority added:

"First, I would like to be called madam, not sugarplum. My husband would like to be called sir, not bud, or mister, or hey you."

Her pupils reminded her that all taxi passengers are not perfect ladies and gentlemen, either, and one driver asked her what he should do when a couple begins to make love in the back seat of a cab.

"Put yourself in the other person's place," she replied.

As the raucous laughter burst over her, Miss Vanderbilt blushed but quickly recovered her aplomb. "What I mean is, don't do anything."

NEW CITY, N.Y. (AP) - Marty Snyder of Nyack, N. Y., a 56-year-old former New York City restaurant manager, says he doesn't see anything odd about his being named to the new Clarkstown movie review board.

The nine-member board was set up after a furore over showings of "The Last Tango in Paris" in area theaters.

"They figured my ideas ought to be represented," said Snyder. "I'm no stuffed shirt, but some of the things I read and hear about are incredible."

Snyder has been blind for several years.

Be A Senator

The time is long overdue for students on this campus to assume their rightful places as people with a say in their own lives here and in the future of the University of which they comprise the major part. There are two reasons why this has not occurred yet that are in the control of students and can be changed right now. First is the process of thought leads to student awareness of where we belong in the community. That change hopefully, is coming. Second is the building of a strong organization, combining the resources that students control into a viable mechanism for the input that students deserve.

At present the student Senate is an ineffective body of people who spent all of last year ruining themselves and the voice of students (YOUR voice) with petty fighting. On October 2, 3, and 4, the Senate is holding its annual elections. Here's where you, the student, come in with the chance to help forge for all students their place at UMass.

Get your head together on where you think students should be at UMass and RUN FOR THE STUDENT SENATE. It's really easy to do. Just pick up your nomination papers at the Senate Office on the second floor of the Student Union and return them by September 26th. Any undergraduate is eligible. Not only will you be helping to clean up the mess that was last year's senate and helping the few good people who are there to create a legitimate student lobby, but you'll be helping to achieve all the goals for students that a united and working student body can achieve.

Ten Recommended Books

In my column of September 11, I stated that I ought to publish a list of recommended readings so one could get a clearer picture of the ways in which our government has helped the communist cause since the days of F.D.R. Well, a few individuals have made inquiries into this so I will present a small list of books, with a short review of each.

AGAIN, MAY GOD FORGIVE US by Robert Welch: This deals with the story of the Truman governments betrayal of China and Chiang Kai-shek. What it is is a small anthology of two of Mr. Welch's older writings. The first, May God Fovgive Us documents the story of how the Truman State Department betrayed Chiang Kai-shek and put the communists in power. It first came out in 1952 as a small book (103 pages) published by the Henry Regnery Co. The second is a biography of Chiang Kai-Shek which first appeared in the May 1957 edition of One Man's Opinion the magazine which went on to become American Opinion. The cost is two dollars.

2)THE POLITICIAN by Robert Welch: This book has been called one of the most controversial to appear in the sixties. It is an unauthorized biography of Dwight Eisenhower which was written in 1958 but not published until 1963. The Politician is a most disturbing book. Its facts are taken from the mass media (half the book is footnotes) but the author comes up with his own conclusions. The cost is $1.50.

3)THE ACTOR by Alan Stang: Another unauthorized biography, this time of John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State from 1953 to 1957. Author Stang gave the book its title because the book shows that Dulles masqueraded as a Republican anti-communist while he was really one of the strongest agents the Kremlin had in the United States. The cost is one dollar.

4)THE FEARFUL MASTER by G. Edward Griffin: This is the book that exposes the true nature of the United Nations. Published in 1964, it is a little outdated now and should be revised. But the nature of the U.N. and the meaning of the book have not changed. The cost is one dollar but the book is included in the U.N. Special Packet advertised on the "Get US out" billboard on Route 9 in Hadley.

5)THE GREAT PRISON BREAK by G. Edward Griffin: This deals with the ways in which the Earl Warren Supreme Court underminded law enforcement in this country. The author documents certain key cases such as the Mallory and Escobedo rulings and explains the errors the Warren Court made in interpreting the Constitution. The cost is one dollar.

6)THE NAKED CAPITALIST-a review of Dr. Carroll Quigley's Tragedy and Hope by W. Cleon Skousen. The reviewer takes key passages from Author Quigley's book and interprets them so they can be more easily understood. Quigley admits that not only is there a master conspiracy controlling the communist conspiracy but that he is a part of this conspiracy. The cost is two dollars.

7)FDR: MY EXPLOITED FATHER-IN-LAW by Curtis Dall: This book is the author's firsthand story of the Roosevelt administration. Personally, I don't think too much of the man; he runs Liberty Lobby, a neo-Nazi group based in Washington. But his book is an excellent primary source, one of the few decent books Liberty Lobby sells. The cost is one dollar.

8)NONE DARE CALL IT CONSPIRACY by Gary Allen: This book takes up where The Naked Capitalist left off. It goes into detail about the way international bankers have underminded this country for their own purpose and touches upon the ways the Nixon Administration is helping them. My only criticism of this million-seller is that the paperback edition has been prepared with footnotes and a large Appendix which is much better for documentation. The paperback sells for one dollar, the hardback for $5.95.

9)RICHARD NIXON: THE MAN BEHIND THE MASK by Gary Allen: the author of None Dare Call it Conspiracy presents a well documented book on the 38th President of the United States; a man who would be dictator of the world. Best book I've seen on Nixon. It sells for two dollars.

10)THE LAW by Frederic Bastiat: This 75-page book was written in 1848 by a French economist. It presents the case for a limited government with the emphasis on personal responsibility in a style that is relatively easy to understand. The cost is one dollar.

This list of books is a good starter set for anyone interested in conservative literature. Get these books and read them.

Pressure Needed

By JOANNE LEVENSON

On September 20, 1973 the United Farmworkers AFL-CIO gained a substantial victory for the Western Massachusetts area with the signing of new contract agreements between the Foodmart supermarket chains and the UFW's bargaining committee. The new agreement means that the chain will no longer buy any grapes that were picked by scabs and that within a period of eight weeks all non UFW lettuce will be completely off their shelves.

It is a misconception to think that this contract was reached because of the good faith of the store managers and owners because this is not so. It was reached because a boycott of the Foodmart chain has been in process the past month at the S. Hadley and Northampton stores. A boycott that included almost daily picketing at the stores as well as community and church groups vocally protesting the sale of the scab products.

The boycott employed the tactic of asking the customer to go to another chain rather than not buying the boycotted products, but continuing to patronize the market. This tactic has proved effective nationally but the fact that chains aren't creating a national policy of support points out the need to constantly put pressure on the corporate businesses, as profits at the expense of working people is the current national policy and not one of social responsibility.

The winning of the contract in Western Massachusetts shows that when people are educated on the issues they will act on them and refuse to hide behind the guise that they have a right to buy Teamster lettuce as well as UFW lettuce. What they now have is the right to demand the recognition of a union that is trying to eliminate a system that excuses having 80% of a work force suffer from pesticide poisoning as well as 50% of the children having health problems due to this area alone. Estimates indicate that almost 375,000 children between the ages of 10-13 perform farm labor, and 800,000 under 16 years of age.

Today at 3 p.m. a delegation from the UMass Boycott Committee and a member of the UFW AFL-CIO will ask Vice Chancellor Campion to officially discontinue the University's practice of buying scab products under a non-contractual low bid practice that services all dining commons and cafeterias. The very fact that UMass/Boston has agreed to drop this practice makes it very evident that the University has to be pressured in much the same way that stores have to be boycotted. But, the food tickets have already been bought so the struggle on campus is in many ways harder than in the community as the farmworkers don't have the time for us to wait until next semester.

An information table will be in the Campus Center all week, a teach-in is planned for the Orchard Hill Area and massive leafletting will be done on campus with petitions for supporters to sign. Approximately 2,000 signatures have been solicited within the last week and by October 1 the Student Senate will have probably reenacted their referendum from 1972 endorsing the policy of buying UFW products. We are an open committee with representatives from the United Christian Foundation, Hillel, YWLL, YSA and the UMass Poverty Committee, we need campus support now and at our meeting, Tuesday 7:30 p.m., Room 177 Campus Center.

Non-intervention In Chile

To The Editor:

The recent events in Chile have brought to mind rather suddenly questions which many North Americans have concerning the nature of the Popular Unity government of Dr. Salvidor Allende and its effects both within Chile and in the context of the world situation.

Ever since the election of the Popular Unity government, the United States, through such agents as ITT and Anaconda copper, has been involved in many attempts to undermine the democratically elected government. To what extent these forces were active in the recent coup which militarily overthrew the Popular Unity government is unknown to us as yet, but their publicized activities in the years since Allende was elected is enough to justify grave suspicion.

We know that our tax dollars are used in Latin America to but assasins and pay for the torture of political prisoners. The Big Monopolies based in the U.S. use their resources for the same purposes. How does this reflect the interests of the U.S. citizens - especially youth? Young people in this country are extremely concerned about rising unemployment and destruction of our environment. While the international monopolies are concerned with cheap sources of labor to be found outside of the U. S. and rich deposits of natural resources that can be wrenched from th earth in the most efficient, inexpensive ways (i.e. strip-mining). Corporate interests depend however on the compliance of well-paid rulers. The Popular Unity government of Chile under Allende was in direct contradiction with those interests. It was a challenge to the anti-popular rule of military dictators throughout much of Latin America. It was also a threat to the racist consciousness of the United States which assumes that the super-exploitation of third-world workers (in mines and factories) is alright, and a natural course of events.

The political situation in Chile will have an increasing affect on the lives of U.S. youth who are anxiously struggling for quality education and decent jobs. The run-away shops eager to get a foothold in Chile under the rule of the Junta will deprive more youth of jobs here in the U.S. And if we stand silent we will be acquiesing to the strategy of exploitation which the International Monopolies are determined to exercise over the working people and resources not just of Chile but of the whole world.

Youth has the right to Earn, Learn and Live!

Don't Eat D.C. Salad

To The Editor:

I am writing in reply to Joyce Kosofsky's column "How to Survive With A Meal Ticket" which appeared in the Sept. 19 issue of the Collegian. In this column, Ms. Kosofsky encourages students to "Eat salad. Even though it is only lettuce, get as much of it as you can to start."

Does Ms. Kosofsky recognize the results this advice could bring? Has she never heard of the United Farm Workers, Cesar Chavez or the lettuce boycott? Now, when the United Farm Workers A.F.L.-C.I.O. is making a big push to clean up western Massachusetts the Collegian should be urging students to boycott lettuce and table grapes in the dining commons. The university is the largest buyer of scab produce in the state. Students must refuse scab produce and ask for U.F.W. lettuce and grapes.

People in the Amherst area have formed the Juan de la Cruz Boycott Cmmittee to fight for the farmworkers. Picket lines have already been formed to pressure chain stores to clean up scab produce. An effort to force the University to clean up its buying policy is also starting. Students should decide what their dining commons money buys. To continue buying non-U.F.W. products will result in more deaths and violence directed toward striking farmworkers.

People interested in aiding the farmworker effort should contact the Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee.

Sell Your Brother

To The Editor:

Would sell your mothers or your sisters for an ad space? Well, you did. I refer to your MDC ad in Weds. (Sept. 19, 1973) Collegian-page 17. That was and is an example of cheap low advertising on the part of the paper.

Prostitution in any form is not a Ha-Ha matter. Even a play of words offends me as a woman. I have been bought and sold on the basis of sex for 20 years whether I wanted to be or not. I am fed up with the practice.

Retract the ad and apologize. I am not alone in my feeling.

Would you print a racist slurr such as: MDC Classifieds could sell your Black friend....Try it and find out what happens. It's the same kind of offense.

Every facet of the human population is entitled to and should DEMAND their dignity to at least be recognized to the degree that that dignity is not capitalized on at such a personal cost.

If you insist on being crude why don't you sell your brother as a stud along side your mother and your virgin sister. All the people would know where they stand in your eyes. At least you wouldn't be sexist. You pigs.

A Long Time Gone

Last Spring, our beloved exec. editor Jerry Lazar asked me, well-known misanthrope and purveyor and destroyer of styles of music that I am, what would be "The Next Big Thing" in music--presumably so he could cash in on it. However, in order to get a real feeling for what moves things, and what's going to move the masses, we have to look at....

I. "THE BUSINESS OF AMERICA IS BUSINESS"

Calvin Coolidge said that and it's about the only thing that Cal said that's worth remembering. Very interesting that the most stoic president the United States ever had came out with that gem of wisdom. Simple and direct, with no trimmings.

What has that to do with music? Everything Jim, everything...Because, more times than not, we are talking about THE MUSIC BUSINESS. Ever since the first piano roll was made, music became a business in the U.S. And, as such, when R.C.A. was running the communications business, they convinced the F.C.C. to have radio become a commercial medium. It made sense at the time, because, of course, everybody knew that Cal was correct. Certainly.

II. "Where Is It Going?"

...where it's always been--in the hands of slick, sharp promoters who never knew anything about music, but who were coming around as far back as New Orleans to press the piano rolls. They didn't care about the musicians--just the big bucks they could get out of it. Sometimes the music was too strong though, and it was Black, and consequently more than a little bit tabu. So they hired the White interpreters, who would keep the basic beat of Afro-American music, perhaps add strings, and "Classical" European elements to make the music more "respectable". Thus, we have the Paul Whiteman's, the Benny Goodman's, the Dave Brubeck's, and yes, all the way up to the Mick Jaggers.

IMAGES, ICONS, CELEBRITIES ALL. Including the Black innovators who MADE THE AMERICAN DREAM WORK. Of course, both Louis Armstrong and Thelonious Monk were looked upon as being charmingly "primitive", while the cats who were copying their styles knew better, but shut up about it--and raked in the dough. But the NAME, through promotion, became more important than the MUSIC, and what is heard on the rdio is considered to be the ULTIMATE good. I never heard of them, so they must be bad, right? Sure...Almost all Black musicians (the creators) have been stereotyped...or ignored.

You are being steered by people who have no interest in your well-being. All for the buck. And that's why Alice Cooper is the epitome of the American syndrome. All flash. A mirror.

Rock is a long time gone...a lonnng time gonne. Oh, yeah there's some good rock coming out, and it's being consumed, but most of the stuff that's coming out is lullabye stuff. Not exciting or stimulating as all music should be. If you want a tranquilizer, take a tranquilizer. Don't be hypnotized; and don't look at illusions, or images, or CELEBRITIES, because they tell lies.

III. "There Won't Be Any More Music"

I believe it was Joseph Jarman of the Art Ensemble of Chicago who said that. And I hope he's correct. I hope most record agencies fold, so the musician has control over his stuff again. Music is not just music any more; it's HUGE business, but people seem to be getting smarter about it. And if I were to say which music will be cooking in the next few years, I'd have to say it would be Afro-American--without the exploitation syndrome.

However, when I say (or Joseph Jarman says) there won't be any more music, remember that the only reason that the idea is frightening is that we've grown up with the businessman's security blankets. We'll have to feed ourselves, and not have everything handed to us on a gold disc.

"There'll be music all right, but it'll be musicians playing in their own homes for their families and friends. Money. That's what it's all about now-Joseph Jarman said. And it's really sad when something so spiritual gets tied down by that. WAKE UP and LISTEN!

Whitehead Asks For TV Expansion

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)- Clay T. Whitehead, the presidential adviser who rocked the broadcast industry last year by pushing for local control of network programs, now says television viewers should be given at least one additional channel to watch.

The director of President Nixon's Office of Telecommunications Policy said in an interview that policies should be loosened so new VHF TV stations - those broadcasting on channels 2 through 13-could be established in major markets.

He said this could lead to the formation of one or more new national networks and would be "one way to get more diversity" into the programs beamed into America's homes. Asked if Nixon shared his views, Whitehead replied: "Generally, yes."

He denied he was launching a new administration attack on the networks. But his comments are certain to fan the controversy he started last December when he spoke of "idealogical pluggola" and bias in news broadcasts. He called then for more local control of national programming, especially news broadcasts.

Whitehead coupled his December criticism with an announcement that legislation had been drafted to hold local stations accountable at license renewal time for the content of network programs.

The legislation is given little chance of passage. The Democratic Congress also is in the process of sharply cutting the budget for Whitehead's office.

At present, most major cities have three network affiliated stations and sometimes one or two independent or public television stations broadcasting the VHF channels.

The Federal Communications Commission has refused to license new VHF stations, and the television industry generally supports this policy. But Whitehead contends it is too restrictive.

He said he thinks 100 new stations should be added to give viewers that much more choice."

But Whitehead acknowledged there is little chance that the FCC would change its policy, adding "the industry has beaten it down before."

Possible Franc Devaluation Decreases Dollar

By LOUIS NEVIN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Rumors of a possible devaluation of the French franc set off a wave of speculation on world money markets Thursday, dragging down the dollar and putting pressure on the French money.

The state banks of France, West Germany and Belgium were forced to support the franc with massive purchases.

Drastic anti-inflation action by the French government steadied the Paris exchange, including dollar trading, late in the day. The actions by the French government included a boost in the basic lending rate to 11 per cent, a rise of 1½ points to a postwar record high.

Speculative attacks on the franc over the past few days finally rubbed off on the dollar and sent it plummeting on European exchanges Thursday.

Despite central bank buying, the dollar declined in Germany from an opening at 2.4150 marks to close at 2.3870.

In Paris the dollar closed at 4.1950 francs, down from Wednesday's 4.27 francs.

Pressure on the franc also rubbed off on the British pound, one of Europe's weakest currencies. The pound declined against all major currencies except the dollar, against which it edged up slightly.

France's new high lending rate was designed to attract speculative money back into France where it could earn more interest than elsewhere.

Almost immediately after it was announced, pressure on the dollar eased in Frankfurt and a measure of calm was restored.

The upsurge of speculation came as government ministers and bankers were heading for Nairobi, Kenya, in an attempt to write new world monetary rules to halt these kinds of flurries on foreign exchanges.

The financial experts were gathering for the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund next week.

IGS Courses Aimed For Efficiency

Amherst, Mass--The UMass Institute for Governmental Services is offering city, town, and county purchasing personnel an opportunity to learn a variety of buying techniques designed to produce substantial cost reductions for local government.

The 10-week course, offered at no cost to local government employees with purchasing responsibilities, is given through the Intergovernmental Personnel Act of 1970, a Civil Service Commission activity administered by the Massachusetts Bureau of Standardization and Personnel.

Buying techniques will be considered within the framework of a planned purchasing program. Topics will include development of purchasing strategy, analysis of contractual arrangements, and methods of solving the small order problem. A survey of intergovernmental cooperative purchasing arrangements among public agencies will also be made.

Dr. Robert H. Marsh of Framingham State College, who will conduct the course, has done extensive research in the field of purchasing, and has been an industrial and a public purchasing agent.

Beginning Sept. 26, the course will meet each Wednesday from 4 to 6:30 p.m. at the Marist Campus of Framingham State College, 518 Pleasant Street. (Route 30), Framingham Center.

Sakharou Delays Decision On Princeton Job

BOSTON (AP) - A renowned Soviet physicist who has been offered the chance to teach at Princeton University says he has "no hope" of obtaining permission to bring his family to the United States should he decide to accept the job, the Boston Globe reported in a copyrighted story yesterday.

Andrei Sakharov, known as the father of the Russian H-bomb, has been offered an appointment for one year as visiting professor at Princeton. Positions for his two step-children and a son-in-law have been offered by Princeton and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the Globe said.

An unidentified source was quoted by the Globe as saying Sakharov felt a Russian contemplating a departure from his country "rapidly becomes an outlaw, almost outside the law."

The Princeton offer "is very good, but I could not make the decision at this time," Sakharov told the Globe in a telephone interview from Moscow.

Noting that he applied for exit visas six months ago, the physicist told the Globe other factors were involved in whether he would accept the Princeton job offer, but he would not specify what they were.

He reportedly has requested help from American scientists in obtaining exit visas and has asked them to pressure Soviet representatives in the United States.

CLEVELAND -- FROM GO-GO to HEAVE-HO--Linda G. Blaylock, formerly a go-go girl in a Cleveland tavern, has a new job. She is the city's first female structural ironworker. Linda, 23, mother of two, said ironworkers who enjoyed her dancing at a West Side bar brought her an apprentice application.

Black Art Works On Display

Amherst, Mass.--Afri-Cobra III, the work of ten Black Artists from Chicago and Washington, is now on exhibit in the UMass Art Gallery in Herter Hall until Sept. 30.

The exhibition represents artists who, from their perspective as Afro-Americans, are attempting to identify style and rhythm qualities expressive of black people everywhere. They are striving in this era of "The Black Aesthetic" to move beyond rage and to direct their energies to articulate the needs, spiritually, direction and values that will liberate their own and the colonial mind.

The gallery is open to the public without charge Wednesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Saturday and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. and Friday from 7 to 9 -.m.

Globe Columnists To Hold Forums

Two Boston Globe political experts--both prominently featured on the White House "enemies list"--will speak here Monday night on "Politics and the Press after Watergate."

Appearing at 8 p.m. in the Thompson 106 will be Robert L. Healy, executive editor of The Globe, and Martin Nolan, the newspaper's Washington Bureau chief.

Nolan is also a syndicated columnist and has written articles for the Village Voice, The New Republic and Atlantic magazines.

Healy, who comments on the political scene in a three-times-a-week column in the Globe, has covered four presidential administrations.

Their appearance here is jointly sponsored by The Daily Collegian and the Journalistic Studies program. It is one of a series of Monday evening forums featuring Globe reporters that will be held here and on other Five College campuses.

In addition, Healy is conducting a seminar in the press and the presidency held each Monday on campus. The seminar was organized by Professor Howard M. Ziff, director of JOrnalistic Studies, assisted by Professor Jerome M. Mileur of the Political Science Department.

Como parte de nuestro afan por brindarles mejores servicios y una eficaz ayuda economica, hemos colocado en la oficina de Financial Aid en Whitmore, una persona encargada de los asuntos financieros para los estudiantes de CCEBS. Esta persona empezara a hacer entrevistas a cada estudiante con el objeto de asegurar que todos reciban el dinero correspondiente al presente ano y asentar las bases para futuras concesio nes economicas. Pedimos por lo tanto la cooperacion rapida y efectiva de todos los estudiantes para arreglar cualquier asunto financiero.

Los estudiantes que han recibido comunicaciones de su Consejero Aca demico (coordinador) deberan ponerse en contacto con ellos a la brevedad posible. La ayuda economica que ustedes puedan recibir dependera de los resultados de esta reunion con su consejero.

Skylab OK For Trip Home

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - The Apollo spaceship that will carry the men of Skylab II home next week was given its first checks in almost eight weeks yesterday and astronaut Alan L. Bean reported "everything looks excellent."

Bean, the Skylab II commander, spent more than three hours on major systems that have been idle since shortly after the astronauts moved into the space station July 28.

Bean said the spacecraft appeared ready to fly him and his crewmates, Owen K. Garriott and Jack R. Lousma, back to earth and a Pacific Ocean splashdown next Tuesday.

One of the steering rockets developed a leak shortly after the July 28 launch. Later, a second rocket failed. This prompted space officials to order preparation of a rescue mission could be launched within seven days if the Apollo craft experiences additional failures.

Tests on the ground indicate the astronauts should be able to guide the spaceship to earth using only two steering rockets.

In the 55th day of their 59-day mission Thursday, the astronauts also conducted the first ever telescope observation from space of a distant and puzzling blue star.

The star, estimated to be 500 to 5,000 light years away from earth, is a powerful source of X-rays and is little understood by scientists. Its radiation characteristics are different from other stars.

UMass Group To Attend N.U. Rally For Puerto Rico

A contingent of people from UMass will be attending a rally in New York Monday as the United Nations Committee on Decolonization discusses the present status of Puerto Rico.

The persons will be leaving from the Campus Center at 9 a.m. on a bus chartered by AHORA, the Spanish-speaking student organization at UMass.

Others interested in how United States policy affects Latin American countries are invited to a Latin-American film presentation tonight at 8, and to a Latin-American poetry recital Sunday at 2 p.m. Both events will be held in Herter 231. A discussion period will follow.

"For most Americans, Puerto Rico is a place somewhere in the Caribbean where many people go for their vacations. Apart from this and a vague recollection that Puerto Ricans are American citizens, very little else is known," said Edward Sotolongo, a graduate student at the UMass School of Education.

"In truth, United States policy critically affects Puerto Rico because PUERTO RICO is an American colony he said.

Eastern Problem Same As Delta Crash

PEABODY, Mass. (AP)-The copilot of an Eastern Airlines' jetliner testified yesterday that air controllers in Boston delayed giving him landing clearance, as they had done with the Delta plane that crashed minutes later killing 88 persons.

Airmen usually get landing clearance when they are approximately six miles from the end of the runway at Logan International Airport in Boston.

The copilot, Keith Chappell, testified at a national Transportation Safety Board hearing that late clearance means a plane has to make a steeper than usual descent.

The Delta DC9 crashed in fog July 31 when it struck a seawall short of the Boston Harbor end of the two-mile long runway.

Another pilot, given clearance to land about two minutes after the crash, said his approach instructions were normal, but he pulled back at the last minute because it was too foggy to see the runway.

Investigators are attempting to find the effect of air control, weather and flight instruments on the crash.

Chappell said he got permission to land after he had flown within six miles of the airport, but he said he could not remember his exact position.

Earlier in the hearings, an approach controller, Charles M. Taylor, testified that he delayed giving the Delta plane its clearance because he was preoccupied with separating two other planes that were mistakenly flying at the same altitude.

Chappell, who landed 1-1/2 minutes before the Delta crash said, "We had good visibility at the touchdown zone. We touched down at the proper position. It could see the end of the runway quite clearly."

Because of an apparent mixup between flght controllers at the Logan tower, another Eastern plane was given permission to land on the same runway where the Delta jet had crashed. At that point, the wreck had not been discovered.

But the pilot, Capt. Ralph H. Queener Jr., decided not to land because the runway was enclosed in fog.

When he had descended to within 216 feet of the landing strip, Queener said, "I saw nothing. Then I initiated a misapproach." He flew on to another airport.

If it were clear enough to land, he said, I'd expect to see the runway right in front of me."

Otherwise, the flight was routine, he said.

"The only thing about the approach that stands out in my mind is that it was very ordinary. It was sort of classic."

After the crash, the wreck went undetected by traffic controllers for seven minutes. It finally was spotted by a construction worker.

The plane crashed into a surface guidance lights that apparently sent out warnings to the control tower, a maintenance supervisor said.

But, he said the warnings went unreported to him until 2-1/2 hours after the crash.

The impact set off two warnings, according to the supervisor, Paul Lyle.

One indicated trouble with the approach lights which stay lighted constantly, and the other a problem with the sequential flasher, which blinks on and off in a pattern.

The air controller said the warnings in the tower were routine, because they frequently sound false alarms when water gets into the lines.

Duke Ellington Coming Oct. 4

Amherst, Mass. --Duke Ellington, recently awarded the Legion of Honor and one of the world's most honored musicians, will visit the UMass campus for two concerts on Oct. 4.

The concert sponsored by the Fine Arts Council as part of its Third World Cultural Series will be at Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 and 10:00 p.m.

Ellington has scored numerous motion pictures, including "Paris Blue" (for which he was nominated for an Oscar); "Anatomy of a Murder;" "Assault on a Queen;" and "Change of Mind," to name a few. His record albums win Grammies almost every year, and both of the television documentaries devoted to Ellington by National Education Television have been Emmy nominees.

Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council box office, 125 Herter Hall; students at UMass, $1.50, others, $3.

Concert Correction

The Collegian wishes to correct the date on Mike Johnson's concert as printed yesterday. Next Thursday, September twenty-seventh, at twelve o'clock noon, on the Metawampe Lawn behind the UMass Student Union, and also onFriday, September twenty-eighth, at seven-thirty PM in the Student Union Ballroom, a concert will be presented by recording artist Mike Johnson, Mr. Johnson, originally from Chicago, has been playing guitar for eleven years and was a member of the first all white blues group. The country where he played with such famous artists as Mike Bloomfield and Charlie Musclewhite. He has jammed with Harvey Mandle, Paul Butterfield and Alvin Bishop.

Romance Goes Past

SANTA MONICA (AP)-They were once among the most romantic spots in the world. A full moon reflecting on the water, the quiet surge of the ocean and the sound of the big bands floating out over the waves.

That was in the days when Hollywood's celebrities came to this Los Angeles suburb's piers to escape the studio backlots, to dine in relative privacy.

Two piers-Santa Monica and the Newcomb-are still there, but they might not be for long. The third, Pacific Ocean Park pier, is slated for demolition soon.

Certainly they are not what they were 30 years ago. Today POP pier, crumbling and deserted, looks something like a bombed-out village. Where once celebrities strolled. drunks now stagger. Silence reigns instead of the music of Tommy Dorsey's orchestra.

The Santa Monica pier, opened in 1917 and municipally owned, is still filled with people on the weekends, but it is showing its age. The merry-go-round creaks and groans and the former gay carnival seems to have disappeared.

Nothing can be done for the privately owned POP pier, which was gutted by fire in 1971 and is to be demolished in 18 months, but a group of interested citizens is seeking to either restore or at least preserve the public Santa Monica pier and its adjacent Newcomb Pier as cultural, historical and recreational landmarks.

The previous City Council ordered their destruction.

POP pier was the home of the Aragaon Ballroom, where the bands of the most prominent musicians in America-Glenn Miller, the Dorsey brothers. Russ Morgan, Harry James-once played.

Minority Grants Available

The Ford Foundation and the National Fellowships Funds have announced graduate fellowship program support for academic year 1974-75. Minority student applicants (Black Americans, Mexican Americans, Native Americans, Puerto Ricans) are expected to study full time and to complete the requirements for the doctorate as soon as possible. The deadline for submitting completed applications is January 5, 1974. Posters have been placed on the bulletin boards at the Graduate School, second floor, Graduate Research Center, giving more information and addresses to write for applications.

Campus Carousel

Mission Impossible?

By TONY GRANITE

MISSION IMPOSSIBLE is how a cartoonist in the Falcon Times of Miami-Dade Community College sees the parking problem on his campus.

DORM DRINKING ALLOWED is the headline in The Shorthorn of UTexas-Arlington that tells of the triumph of a two-year-old resolution passed by the Inter-Dorm Council there.

The page one story points out that when permission was granted to students of legal age to consume and possess alcoholic beverages, the rule had little effect because students then were not required to live in campus housing.

Now that the age of minority has been dropped to 18 by the State Legislature, students can legally booze it up on campus.

FOOD WASTE WORTH $3760 for one three-meal period was tallied in the cafeteria at Indiana University, according to a page one piece in the Indiana Daily Student.

Residents of McNutt Quad sent 876.4 lbs. of food back to the garbage pails, one recent day this Fall. And the Director of Food Services used the occasion to kick off a campaign against food waste. He estimated that all 11 food centers on campus wasted 8,764 lbs. of food on that one day. and since the McNutt diners comprise 10 per cent of the total eating population, he arrived at the $3,760 figure. He also estimated the average cost of food at 43 cents per pound.

Wonder what was on the menu, that day?

STUDENT ELECTIONS are hazardous at Dacca University in Bangladesh, according to an AP dispatch. Seems that masked gunmen stole all but one ballot box and fired indiscriminately as they left the polling places.

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK appears in the Central Michigan University Life. It tops a story that takes satirical note of "outrageous meat prices" and domestic animal overpopulation."

The head reads, "Cats, dogs are edible."

Time Correction

The collegian wishes to correct the date on Frank Jean's lecture as printed yesterday.

Frank Jean formerly of mainland China will speak next Thurs. Sept. 27, at 7:30 in the 163-complex of the UMass Campus Center. Mr. Jean left China just before the Communist take over. Since that time he has spoken to people of all ages, backgrounds, and nationalities. The public is invited and a special invitation is extended to all foreign students at the university.

5 College Bus Error

All student passengers please note that the widely distributed orange "Five College Directory" contains a bus schedule for the Five College Bus System which is incorrect. The Five-College Student Coordinating Board puts out its own hand booklet, which will soon be available at the Information desk on the Concourse Level of the Campus Center, and includes the correct schedule. Seperate bus schedule pamphlets are on display also. The Board also announces the Sept. 17 addition of a daily 10 p.m. run which was previously available on weekend service only.

Tomorrow Is Family Day

Among the many events scheduled for the family Sports Day is an open baseball practice session on the main baseball field from 10 a.m. to noon with Coach Dick Bergquist on hand to talk with visiting families. Soccer Coach Al Rufe will hold a practice scrimmage in front of the Boyden Building and the Gymnastics teams (men and women) will practice in the Auxiliary gym of Boyden Athletic Building, with coaches Tom Dunn and Virginia Evans in attendance.

Coach Homer Barr will be on hand with members of the wrestling team in Boyden gym practice wrestling room and Lacrosse coach Dick Garber has scheduled a varsity practice session for the morning. Hockey coach Jack Caniff will be on hand to talk hockey with the youngsters and Tennis coach Steve Kosakowski has scheduled a match for the day.

For the basketball fan, Coach Jack Leaman will have some game films to be shown in the Boyden Conference room and several other events will be ongoing both within Boyden and on the surrounding practice fields.

On the basement floor of Boyden, Dr. Ben Ricci will be available for questions and demonstrations from the exercise science class.

Tickets for the first UMass Family Sports Day may be picked up in the picnic area tomorrow morning.

In a unique move to encourage families of the State to enjoy a day long outing together, the UMass will open its athletic facilities in a special Family Sports Day tomorrow.

Starting at 9 a.m., families will have a chance to bring their children to the campus to watch open practice sessions, clinics and participation events. They will also be able to tour what have been described as the finest athletic facilities in the Northeast.

A tailgate picnic area will be available and those families not wishing to picnic, will be able to buy sandwiches and soft drinks at a special concession stand in the picnic area. Following lunch, families will move to reserved seats in Alumni Stadium to wat the UMass Minutemen compete with the University of Maine Bears. Tickets for the entire day's activities, including reserved seats for the UMass-Maine game, will be $1 per person.

Families attending the special day will be directed to a free parking area in the picnic site north of Alumni Stadium. There they will be able to pick up their tickets and schedules and will board special shuttle buses which will take them to the various indoor and outdoor sites which they wish to visit. The buses will return the visitors to the picnic site at noon, for lunch prior to the game.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

I have noted that persons born on the 6th, 15th, or 24th of any month have unusual speaking or singing voices. These people find their voices to be of special importance where career is concerned, such as teaching and drama. The voice angle is emphasized if the native is born under Taurus or Libra on the specified dates. Do some checking and let me know your findings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on creativity, change, romantic interests. Purchase of luxury item is indicated. Be selevtive. Consult family member. Make home life more harmonious. Diplomacy now is a valuable ally. Know it; act accordingly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The end of matter is indicated. Issues are settled. Older family member figures prominently. Build on solid base. Be aware of details. Take nothing for granted. Don't give up something of value for mere promise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on movement, ideas, contacts involving trips and concepts. Submit format. Deal with confidence. You have more backing than might be imagined. Capricorn, Cancer persons might figure prominently. Don't scatter forces.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You realize profit. Past effort now can pay dividends Aries, Libra persons could be in picture. Emphasis is on payment, collection. Protect interests. Add to possessions. Build hedge for inflation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lunar cycle is such that your judgement, intuition are on target. Personal magnetism soars. Take initiative. Make new starts in new directions. Hightight appearance. Be conspicuous. Come out of hiding. You win!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If naive, you pay the price. Means look beneath surface indications. Someone apparently is not telling entire story. Unusual proposal needs careful consideration. Unorthodox approach may be necessary.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct. 22): Emphasis is on friends, hopes and wishes. Romance and creativity are spotlighted. Pleasure principle is accentuated. Leave details for another time. You deserve to relax, Gemini. Sagittarius persons are involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight goals, civic projects. Standing in community is elevated. Professional superior could pay valid compliment. Do some remodeling. Streamline procedures. You make progress by maintiaining steady pace.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on philosophical concepts, the learning priocess and travel. Gain indicated through advertising, writing, reveal your style. Stimulate creativity. Special reading material can provide key answers.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Discuss needs with one who has your interests at heart. Taurus, Libra individuals could figure prominently. Budget is important. Be realistic about sales, purchases. You need not attempt to "buy" love. Frank talk resolves dilemma.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Lie low. Don't push or chide. Patience now is your ally. Curb tendency to speak or write while angry. See persons, situations in light of reality. Mate or partner has right to express definite view. Be receptive.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get to heart of matters. Co-workers, others who share your interests express confidence. Your position is vindicated. Promotion, advancement is indicated. Strive for balance. Going to extremes will defeat purpose.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have great sense of humor. You have tendency to scatter forces. Your intellectual curiosity is sharply honed. You are interesting and somewhat of a bundle of contradictions. You also are a natural entertainer and could use more self-discipline. December should be your most significant month of 1973.

Mays To Quit At End Of Season

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-Willie Mays announced his retirement from baseball Thurdsay the same way he's always played this game-gracefully.

Mays told a packed news conference that he's probably played his last major league game after a fabulous 22-season career. He did it with grace and style, the same way he might have gone back for one of his basket catches in center field.

"May be I'll cry tomorrow or the next day," the 42-year-old superstar said, "but not today. I've got too many friends in this room to feel sad."

"I have to face facts," said Mays, who has been limping along with a .211 batting average this season. "The body catches up with you in the long run. It's time to get out when the game stops being fun, and batting .211 is no fun. I've been in slumps before and I've always come out of them. But not at 42."

Mays hit six homers this season, pushing his career total to 660, third on the all-time list behind Babe Ruth and Hank Aaror.. Even with his struggling 1973 season, Mays still has a .302 career batting average. His 3,283 hits are seventh on the all-time list.

Willie made it clear that he intends to remain active in the game that carried him from the sandlots of Westfield, Ala., through Negro League baseball in Birmingham and eventually to major league stardom with the Giants, first in New York and then in San Francisco.

"There are a number of things I would like to do," he said. "Work with youngsters in the organization. Teaching them."

It's entirely likely that in the dwindling days of the 1973 season, Mays will play one or two more games as the Mets make a run for the National League's East Division title. It was the quest for the division championship that caused Mays to announce his retirement now.

"I didn't want to interfere with them," he said. "Look at the last two or three weeks, coming from 12 games behind to one. Somebody is doing something, and I don't want to interfere by telling them I want to play."

Cooperstown Awaits Uniform No. 24

By RICHARD SEVIERI

In a flash, with his back to the plate, number 24 pursued, performed his magic, and made the greatest catch in World Series history.

The Polo Grounds are gone. At the end of this season so will jersey number 24. It will be cleaned, pressed, and packed; ultimate destination, Cooperstown.

That jersey of course belonged to Willie Mays, probably the greatest centerfielder of all time who announced yesterday that he is retiring.

At the age of 42, Mays slowed down by injuries and Fathertime has decided to quit after a career spanning 23 brilliant years.

Mays broke in way back in '51, when Harry S. Truman was president, Durocher was engineering a miracle, and black was not yet beautiful.

The Giants white entrepreneur owners looked across town, saw Robinson's gate appeal, and realized that the black athlete was a viable economic commodity.

Mays became a legend in the 50's during the golden years of Baseball in New York. The Yankees methodically won pennant after pennant. While the Dodgers and Giants engaged in the bitterest rivalry in the annals of professional sport. "Sunway Series" were common.

The New York scribes, so quick to exalt knighthood on local heroes, helped in creating the legend of Willie, but the legend is verifiable by Mays' play on the field at this time. He created the electricity and excitement as Robinson did on the bases. He hit with power and for the average like DiMaggio. And no one played centerfield like Willie Mays.

The love affair between Willie and New York fans was curtailed when Horace Stoneham and Walter O'Malley smelled "gold" on the West Coast.

Mays' years in San Francisco were produtive but he longed to come back and play before his hometown fans. The fans were indifferent in San Francisco. They did not realize that was a legend making a "basket catch" in centerfield. The affair was renewed when Stoneham felt Mays' hefty salary was extra baggage. Mays was dealt to the Mets in '72 for a couple of non-descript minor leaguers.

So the kid who learned how to hit with a broom handle and half-ball on the streets of New York well enough to place third on the all-time home run list with 660, and ensure himself a first round ballot election to the Hall of Fame has called it quits.

Collegian Challenged

The Collegian staff will be taking on the Harvard Crimson on Saturday, September 29th. The Harvard Crimson sports editor Peter Landry made the challenge in a telephone conversation with sports editor Steve Crowe yesterday afternoon.

The game will be played on the field outside Harvard stadium at 9:30 a.m. All Collegian staff members are strongly urged to sign up at the Sports Desk as soon as possible. A rigorous training session is scheduled for next week.

"Beep Ball" For The Blind

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)-A softball field for the blind will be dedicated in Golden Gate Park Saturday with a "beep ball" double-header.

"Beep ball" is named for the softball used in the game. When thrown toward the batter, it omits a continuous beeping sound, giving the blind batter a sound to swing at.

The game was devised in 1971 by Ralph Rock, a Pacific Telephone Co. craftsman and member of a public service group called the Telephone Pioneers.

"We're not trying to create a new sport," he said. "This is therapy. We're trying to break through the frustrations and give the kids a sense of accomplishment."

Since 1971, the Pioneers have organized a beep ball league with 119 teams in 27 towns. There are two adult teams in the San Francisco area and 86 youngsters between the ages of 4 and 17 also play.

At present, there are four teams, each with seven blind players. Batters get five strikes and a team gets four outs each inning.

If a batter hits a pitch, he walks as fast as he can to one of eight bases, directed by a continuous tone from the base. Meanwhile, a fielder tries to retrieve the beeping ball.

If the fielder reaches the ball first, the batter's out. If the batter reaches base first, he scores a run. A fly ball caught by a fielder automatically retires the side.

The pitcher, who doubles as the pitching umpire, is sighted, as well as the catcher, two fielder assistants and the person controlling the sound in the bases.

The pitcher throws a "slow" softball and tries to put it where it can be hit, yelling "Ball!" so the batter knows it's coming.

Probation

KANSAS CITY (AP) - The NCAA announced penalties Friday against the football programs at Oklahoma and Colorado for recruiting violations.

Oklahoma was handed a two-year probation in football, prohibited from appearing on television for the 1974 and 1975 seasons, and banned from post-season bowl games in 1973 and 1974.

Colorado was put on probation for one year for football violations. There were no TV or postseason game bans applied to Colorado.

Bryant Wins 23rd, Giants Topple Reds 7-5

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Lefthander Ron Bryant struggled to his 23rd victory, Chris Speier's bases-loaded triple sparked a six-run, third-inning rally and the San Francisco Giants outlasted the Cincinnati Reds 7-5 Thursday.

Bryant, 23-11, was trailing 4-1 when the Giants erupted with six consecutive hits in the third. Successive singles by Bobby Bonds, Tito Fuentes and Garry Maddex started the rally and chased Reds starter Ross Grimsley.

Reliever Dick Baney, 1-1, yielded a single to Gary Matthews and Speier's triple for a 5-4 Giants lead. Run-scoring singles by Dave Kingman and Bryant capped the rally.

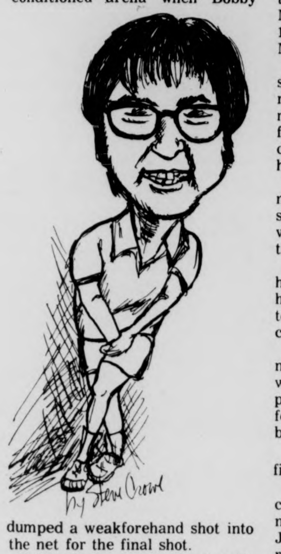
King Castrates Riggs

By WILL GRIMSLEY

HOUSTON (AP) - Audacious billie Jean King struck a blow at all male chauvinists by crushing Bobby Riggs 6-4, 6-3, 6-3 Thursday night in their circus-like, $100,000 winner-take-all tennis Battle of the Sexes at the Astrodome.

A wild roar went up from the 30,472 fans in the huge air-conditioned arena when Bobby dumped a weakforehand shot into the net for the final shot.



Billie Jean, leading 5-3 with Riggs serving, earlier blew two match points with weak shots into the net for errors.

At the end of the match, while skyrockets flared on the big Astrodome scoreboard and the University of Houston band played martial tune, the happy Mrs. King flung her racket high in the air and hurdled the net in traditional fashion.

The 55-year-old, bespectacled Riggs was a tired, rubbery-legged old man at the finish.

"Shewasjust too good for me," he acknowledged ungrudgingly, rubbing his chronicly sore right elbow. "She was much too quick and made better shots than I did."

The veteran Riggs, Wimbledon and world champion now turned sports hustler, was just a shell of the man who defeated Australia's Margaret Court in San Diego May 13 in what he rakishly termed the Mother's Day Massacre.

The duck-footed little preacher's son, who turned this victory into a million-dollar hustle, appeared now to be bankrupt as far as any future such hustles were concerned. "Where can Bobby go from here?" everybody asked.

"Maybe I will take on the winning golfers," the dejected Riggs said. "I could play them from the women's tees. I hit the ball about the way a woman does."

Riggs won reknown as a golf hustler-making bizarre bets which he rarely lost-before he came back to tennis to capitalize on the new court boom.

The puckish, garrulous little man, who had once said that all women should be kept barefoot and pregnant, was a tragic figure as he fell victim to Billie Jean's slam-bang, aggressive tactics.

He rarely got his first service in court. His second service was a marshmellow delivery which Billie Jean moved in on and put away for repeated winners. All of Bobby's shots lacked authority. He was helpless under Billie Jean's unceasing attack.

Bill Ballou, noted Collegian columnist, remarked "I think that Riggs deliberately threw the match to set up an even richer rematch in which he will wiper her all over the state of Texas. One woman called and said she hoped that Ballou would enjoy his Sugar Daddy's.

Fanaticism Be Damned

The sports fan, especially on this campus, is indeed a curious animal. He is the kind of person who will brave the elements on a cold, rainy Saturday afternoon to watch Dick MacPherson's gang annihilate Vermont or trudge a mile in the sleet and snow of a December night to watch Jack Leaman's charges massacre St. Anselm's but wouldn't budge an inch on a beautiful spring day to view tennis or women's softball.

Fan is a shortened form of the word fanatic which means, according to Webster, "marked or moved by excessive enthusiasm and intense uncritical devotion." The contracted form of the word in popular ue obscures much of the true meaning of the original.

"Excessive enthusiasm" can be found in almost every corner of this great institution of learning. From the frat brothers who migrate en masse to Alumni Stadium to guzzle a few while watching a massacre of New Hampshire to the scantilly clad cheerleaders who sell their souls for a few cheers from the basketball-hungry Cage crowd, we all have, or almost certainly will, indulge in it as some time during our undergraduate careers.

"Intense uncritical devotion" can only begin to describe the UMass athletic situation. When was the last time you remember Jack Leaman making a mistake? Dick MacPherson does goof on occasion, but only when he admits it first.

Fourtunately, this is only the case with football and basketball. The rise of these sports to "national" prominence has been epitomized by Minuteman appearances in the Boardwalk Bowl (a SMALL college playoff) and the National Invitational Tournament (a SECOND-RATE basketball tournament). This is not to discredit UMass' fine showing these sports but they must be placed in perspective. I have yet to hear cries of "let's go big time" at a wrestling match even though the grapplers are the bona fide New England University Division champs.

There are no "minor" sports. There is only the miniscule mentality that rejects, sight unseen, the merits of the lesser publicized athletic events.

Athletes are athletes. They differ only in skill and desire, with skill seeming to matter most in the heart of the fan. But skill is a relative quality, dependent on the sport, the competition, and, of course, desire.

Who is a better athlete-Peil Pennington or Al Skinner? The answer is a purely subjective one, with no clear-cut, logical answer based on statistics or facts.

There is also no objective way of telling whether Al Skinner is a better athlete than the camptain of the women's basketball team. But when was the last time you saw 4,000 — at a women's basketball game?

Why, then, have so many people never attended a tennis match, a track meet, or a women's softball game? Cries of "we aren't interested" rise from every dorm and frat on campus. But how, may I ask, can those who profess disinterest, yet have never seen, really know?

Minutemen Open Yan Con Defense

By BILL BALLOU

It is not true that the concessions at the football game Saturday will begin selling nitroglycerine pills at the beginning of the fourth quarter. You're going to have to bring your own.

Anyway, it's doubtful that this one will turn into another edition of the fourth quarter frolics, because Maine and UMass traditionally play lopsided games, which, in the last few years, lean in the UMass directions.

The Black Bears haven't beaten Redmen-Minutemen since 1965 and haven't scored a point in the last three games between them. Last year they lost 37-0.

But the two football programs just don't have comparable resources. Maine, up until this year, gave away no scholarships for athletics, and even now gives away only a couple and strictly on a need basis.

Coach Walt Abbott does a good job with his men, though, and one thing's for certain--there will be lots of hitting and plenty of pads popping from the tough Mainiacs.

And it would appear that UMass is going to have a tough time getting points against these guys. The Maine defense hasn't allowed a point in two games this season.

They shut out Vermont, 4-0 in the first game of the year, and while they lost to Boston University 16-13, the defense wasn't responsible for any of those points.

Offensively, the Black Bears rely mostly on a passing game. Their quarterback is Rich Prior, a lefty who played some last season and who you'd have to rate as adequate, if unspectacular. But if he gets hot, he could be tough. He's got a couple of good receivers in Sam Estey and Stephen Leathe. The running game revolves mostly around Jack Lamborghini.

The Minutemen come into the game with the same 1-1 record as Maine. They stand in pretty good physical shape, with only Jerry Mondalto slated to miss the game. He'll be out for the season with a knee injury. Peil Pennington is fine, and will start, and Gary Mika, out since early in the Holy Cross game, will see some spot action. Mika, coach Dick MacPherson says, is not 100 per cent, and won't be this year. MacPherson hopes to spot him with Bill Wolfe, saving him for important games and situations.

The passing game isn't what UMass has to worry about though; it's the infantry.

"It's got to get better," MacPherson says about the running game "and I think it will get better. In the last two games we've just been up against two sets of tackles that were too much for us."

With Mondalto out for the season, the starting backs tomorrow will be Bob Wolfe and Phil Roland. Wolfe, a sophomore, has done the bulk of the running so far, and has had little success.

"He's still feeling his way around out there," says MacPherson. "You know how many yards Paul Metallo had in his first ten carries? Eleven. I have great faith in Bobby Wolfe's ability as a football player and I'm sure he'll be an outstanding runner."

Until Wolfe and friends come around, though, the Minutemen are going to have to rely on the right arm of Peil Pennington and the hands and feet of Tim Berra, Gary Mika, Ed Hajdusek, etc.

Mick and Neal Rist, head of the M.A.R.Y. program

Mick Meets M.A.R.Y

(Editor's note: This is a true story; however, the names of the people involved, including the author's, have been changed for legal reasons.)

BY JERALD HOWARD

Mick Kensey is only fifteen years old, but he's been through more than you or me. He's been in and out of jails, correction centers, and halfway houses for the past three years, he's been to California and back (and has a stack of hitchhiking tickets from almost every state in between to prove it), and he's been through the whole drug scene.

Now Mick is enrolled in the Massachusetts Association for the Reintegration of Youth (M.A.R.Y.) program at UMass, getting the equivalent of a high school education, and discovering the resources and lifestyles available on a college campus.

I met Mick in July and he lived with me in Amherst for the remainder of the summer. This is the story of how we spent our summer vacation, and the events leading up to his placement in the M.A.R.Y. program which, I think he'll agree, is probably the best thing that's ever happened to him.

Mick served six hours of a six month sentence at Concord Reformatory for breaking and entering when he became tired of prison life and decided to break and exit. He went back to his hometown, a suburb of Boston, for a few days and then turned himself in. he was put in a detention center in Lancaster, but it wasn't long before he split from there.

This time, he headed for California, with only the clothes on his back, a sleeping bag, a pack of Kools, and a question mark in the distant horizon.

Mick's a skinny kid with long bushy hair, parted down the middle, and he could easily pass for a typical 18-year-old, middle class, college youth. During that month-long excursion to L.A., he got even skinnier, his hair got longer, and he undoubtedly became wiser in years. When you're only fifteen, and you don't even have pockets in your pants to hold the few pennies you wish you had, and nothing to fall back on but a long criminal record, you learn to fend for yourself very quickly.

In Mick's case, it sometimes meant picking pockets or panhandling for nickels and dimes. It sometimes meant going to bed at night knowing that his next meal may be a few days away. And it usually meant staying perpetually stoned so he didn't have to always think about those things.

Eventually, Mick headed back East to see his sister Pam who graduated from UMass in May and was living in Amherst. He figured he'd be able to get a few bucks off her. When he got to her house, however, he found out that she had gotten married and moved to Albany the week before. Someone at the house directed Mick to the house I was living in, because his sister's former roommate, Jan, was living there for the summer.

So Mick stumbled into our house that night at about ten o'clock, looking tired and emaciated and carrying his prized possession, his sleeping bag. he reminded me of a skeleton with a dust mop placed precariously on his head. Jan took me aside and explained who he was, and asked me if he could crash in my room for the night, since I had a few extra mattresses.

I felt sorry for the kid, and it's not my style to toss somebody out into the cold, especially if it's somebody like Mick, who's been tossed into the cold all his life by people who never cared about him.

I invited him to the Bluewall to join me for a few beers and it was there that he candidly related to me a few of his many experiences. He impressed me as being a relatively mature kid in a lot of ways, but like I said, if you've been through what he's been through, you're likely to grow up fast.

He told me he planned to hitch out to Albany and track down his sister, so before I left for work the next morning, and while he was still sleeping, I left him a ten dollar bill and a tacit good luck wish, figuring I might run into him years from now if ever again.

But that one night turned into a summer. he never did make it to Albany. When I got back from work that day, he was still there, relaxing in my room, listening to my records, and POOR RICHARD'S welcomes unsolicited manuscripts, photographs, and sketches. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all material will be printed.

All manuscripts must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and are subject to editing for content or length. Deadline for the Friday edition is Wednesday noon.

Letters to the editor are accepted for perusal and or publication. Sometimes we need a good chuckle.

and smoking up a storm (which, it didn't take me long to realize, was where my ten dollars went to).

I rapped with him that night about what he plans to do, where he expects to get money to support himself, and how he intends to clear his court record. He didn't seem to know and he didn't seem to care. he wasn't worried about anything at that point; he had nothing left to lose.

I knew damned well that jail was the last place for that kid, and maybe Amherst wasn't such a bad environment for him to start all over again, get a job, settle down, and turn over that proverbial new leaf. I had a lot of faith in Mick. Here, I thought, was a young man who had never been given a chance and had taken a turn for the worse at a shockingly early age. Softhearted and softheaded as I am, I thought I'd be able to help him out for a short time, or at least get him headed in the right direction. One of the guys in the house got Mick a job at a cucumber farm, but that didn't last long. he worked there one day, and then complained to me that night that the work was too difficult. I told him he should stick with it for just a few weeks, so that he could make enough money to support himself. He didn't though. he walked off the field the next day, and explained to me that he had been fired for missing six cucumbers in one row. When I talked to the manager of the farm, I heard a more believable story — Mick simply quit because the work wasn't enjoyable.

So I continued to support him for a few days, each day insisting more adamantly that he find himself a legitimate means of income. I suggested that his search might be easier if his hair was a bit shorter. Looking back, I probably sounded like a conservative father, telling him to find a job and get a haircut, something which I vowed years earlier I never wanted to do. But I didn't have the money or resources to help him much longer, and as far as I could see, it was the only feasible alternative to jail.

He found a job in the want ads which involved pushing a little old lady around in a wheel chair, and it paid room and board, which is what Mick needed for the time being. Now I had trouble imagining Mick doing something like that, but he tried for the job anyway. Needless to say, he wasn't hired.

Weeks passed and I was rapidly running out of money and starting to worry how I was going to pay my semester bill. I didn't know what was going to happen come September when I had to move into a dorm.

We made one more attempt at find him a job, this time at a felt factory in Easthampton. But standing over a machine eight hours a day didn't particularly appeal to Mick, and he quit after four days.

Trying to make him find and keep a job was only one of the many ordeals we had to go through together. There were times when he lied to me, stole from me, and basically drained me of my patience, energy, and money.

> "But standing over a machine eight hours a day didn't particularly appeal to Mick . . ."

There was one instance when he talked one of my foolish friends into driving him to his hometown in the middle of the night, where he pirated a fourteen-year-old girl off into the dark and brought her back to Amherst, without thinking of a way to get her back home. She was a female version of Mick in many ways, and I would have liked to help her out also, but I figured that, if I'm going to be supporting kids, I'll get married and have a few of my own. So I talked one of my more sensible friends into taking the girl back home the next day.

There was another time when Mick ran into some twenty-year-old derelict-looking character and brought him back to the house, claiming that they were hitchhiking buddies in California and that fate reunited them on the streets of Northampton. So his friend stuck around a few days, and even got a job with Mick at the Easthampton factory, but he eventually wandered off, searching for greener pastures.

> "So Mick stumbled into our house that night looking tired and emaciated . . ."

I remember the night I was awoken by one of the guys in the house, and he informed me that he just saw my car pulling out of the driveway. I knew right away it had to be Mick and during the hour he was gone I worried that he would smash up my car or, worse than that, be stopped by a cop and ultimately thrown back into the klink. But he brought the car back safely, and informed me in his drunken stupor that he was considering driving to Boston "just for the hell of it". He hadn't taken into consideration that the gas tank was almost empty, he didn't have a penny in his pocket, and on top of that, I needed the car to drive to work the following morning.

Yes, there was excitement in our summer. We had good times, and we had bad times. But it was all worth it in the long run. I hope Mick learned a lot from Mick. I may be a few dollars poorer from the experience, but I am definitely a few years wiser.

When I heard about the M.A.R.Y. program in the final weeks of the summer, I knew it had to be just the thing for Mick. It offered him a place to stay, food to eat, and an education. Now Mick didn't mind accepting the first two, but he wasn't too receptive to "an education". It conjured up images of stifling classrooms, dull teachers, grades, and so on.

But I had worked all summer at putting a roof over his head, food in his stomach, and a smile on his face, and here, I thought, was a legitimate program which would provide all these things and an education too.

So we went down and talked to Neal Rist, the head of the M.A.R.Y. program. Neal is an extraordinarily amiable guy, who's bearded face bears a slight resemblance to Bert Lahr's in the Wizard of Oz. Neal understood the situation perfectly and was amazingly cooperative about the whole thing. With very little red tape to cut through, Neal managed to get Mick's court record cleared and get Mick's parole officer to approve his placement in the program.

Now Mick eats at the dining commons and will be living in Webster House as soon as an advocate can be found for him. He started attending classes Wednesday at the Teen Learning Center, an alternative school, where he is taking such subjects as English and Music (combined), Science, Social Studies, Math, and other courses in basic skills areas, all taught by graduate students. If he works diligently, he can obtain his high school equivalency diploma as soon as he is able to pass the required tests for it. Not bad for a sixth-grade dropout.

He will be associating with other youths his age, all in similar situations. More importantly he will be interacting with older, college-age students and finding out for himself the many resources available on a college campus.

> " . . . he wasn't too receptive to 'an education'."

I know Mick has come a long way since this summer, and I know there is a lot of potential in the M.A.R.Y. program for Mick and other youths in Mick's situation simply from talking with a few of the dedicated people involved with it. For Mick, it's more than an alternative to a dismal jail cell; it's a golden opportunity. And I hope he makes the best of it.

ART CONTEST

POOR RICHARD'S needs a new FLAG which is journalistic jargonese for the top of page one, which tells you, in essence, that it is Poor Richard's you are reading and not the Wall St. Journal. You know, the spot that is currently in the shape of a computer printout. NOW, we get to the real stuff...

We want you UMies to put your minds and creative talents to work. If you can come up with a way of translating the title Poor Richard's into a new art form — DO IT!

In short, lads and lassies, we're running a contest for a new banner. AND THERE ARE ONLY THREE REQUIREMENTS FOR YOUR BANNER: 1) IT HAS TO BE LEGIBLE; 2) IT HAS TO BE DONE IN BLACK INK: 3) IT HAS TO BE DONE IN TWICE THE SIZE OF THE CURRENT POOR RICHARD'S BANNER (in short, submit all logos as 20" horizontal by 3" vertical.

But remember, this is a contest, so we're giving something away. JUST THINK, YOU CAN SHOW THE POOR RICHARD'S LOGO TO ALL YOUR FRIENDS. (Won't you be proud?) and you have the extra ego boost of knowing that your design will be appearing 17,000 times every Friday.

Sound great? You bet! Just start rushing your applications up to our little cubicle in the Collegian office. The old logo is driving us wacky.

DRUGS DRUGS

POOR RICHARDS
Drug Perspective Series

What are the varying reasons behind drugs and drug use on the UMass campus? The Poor Richard staff is currently putting together a writing/research team that will probe into this question in a continuing Poor Richard series.

The first meeting of the team will be held Monday, September 24th at 8:00 p.m. at the Collegian offices. Representatives from Room to Move will be present to offer general direction for the series.

All those interested are invited to attend. Poor Richard's especially welcomes those who have been into downs, grass, cocaine, ups, psychedelics, and heroin. The team needs experienced drug pushers and users, for they are the ones who can offer the most to the project/series.

Upon request, the team members may remain absolutely anonymous. Hopefully, the project will help the University understand its relationship to the drug scene, and therefore confidentiality will be guaranteed to those requesting it.

If you have some experiences to offer to the team but are afraid of meetings, please call Bob MacKay at 6-7112.

Hare Rama

DO YOU REALLY THINK WE'll EVER MEET GEORGE HARRISON?
HARE KRISNA HARE KRISNA
HARE KRISNA
BUY KRISNA INCENCE. $1.00 Krisna will Love

Perhaps you've seen a follower of Krishna on the steps of the Student Union, distributing incense and selling books. Which means: the International Society for Krishna Consciousness has come to the UMass campus. I had the pleasure last week of taking supper with them.

Four devotees are up from Boston, traveling and living in a brown Dodge van equipped with pictures of Krishna taped inside and furnished with a raised hardwood floor. They're participating in that aspect of their Society which is directed toward "proselytizing" college campuses. I put "proselytize" in quotes because of their lack of obnoxious hard sell. While I was with them, the leader, Pyari Mohan Das, instructed his friends to merely introduce and perhaps sell the copies of the Bhagavad-Gita without making an attempt for converts. He sees the effort as one of beginning college students on the road to Krishna Consciousness. Das: "A sincere reading of the Gita will at least assure a person of avoiding an animal incarnation in his next life."

Pyari Mohan Das is a man of great intensity. While in the Navy he started questioning the meaning of life. When he got out he began his search for answers. Born a Roman Catholic, Das had a natural affinity for Jesus and became absorbed in Him. He saw Jesus in everything, including the activities he later got into — Zen, meditation, all forms of yoga. Much of his time was devoted to hitching around the country, meditating on mountains, etc. One day he met a devotee of Krishna who asked him what he believed in. Das replied "Me". The devotee said "Oh" and walked away. This incident made a great impression on him and he began to think more and more about the Krishna movement. On a subsequent hitchhiking trip through Canada he definitely decided to devote his life to Krishna. He worked for a time in the Society's book printing plant in New York (I think) before moving to Boston and eventually attaining the position of temple "commander".

Mr. Das had hard words for the students he encounters on the various campuses (and that means UMass, too). His primary objection is to the constant state of intoxication he sees all around him. (I did not smoke a cigarette while with the devotees; when I lit one up, Das became obviously uncomfortable, so I, you know, put it out.) Das: "They're into four things — Eating, sleeping, mating, and defending." I sought clarification on "defending"; would studying be in that category? "Yes, if they are studying to maintain their position in school. Or studying could come under eating and mating, if they study thinking "I'll get a better job and more sex if I go to college." His final observation: "They live like animals."

The future for these four consists of more traveling to campuses, perhaps in the South, and distribution of literature anywhere their are people who need help.

Overall I was impressed by their tremendous discipline and clear thinking. Yes, clear thinking. They came down hard on the influx of false prophets from India, taking great delight in Jaharaj Ji's encounter with a pie. They repeated to me the message I've been hearing so much lately: "Think for yourself, question, doubt is good, get the right answers."

You're Joshing Me!

BY BARBARA VOORHEES

JOSH IS COMING!
Pleasantly provocative, beautifully biting, irritatingly irresistable, a cool drink on a hot day.
JOSH IS COMING!

Jesus Christ! Every time you turn around, there it is again — one of those signs. In the Collegian, on blackboards, on every wall.

The oldest publicity gimmick in the game. And it works.

Cause everyone's wondering, at least a little bit, Who in hell is Josh?

"Josh McDowell, a graduate of Wheaton College and a magna cum laude graduate of Talbot Theological Seminary, is a member of two national honor societies. He has spoken at more than 400 universities in 42 countries. In the last five years he has spoken to more than two million students and faculty."ETC.

So spouts the back cover of his book, "Evidence That Demands A Verdict," which the Jesus freaks over at the UMass Christian Service Coalition tell you sold 25,000 copies in the first four months. Without advertising.

And Josh himself tells you in his book that on Dec. 19, 1959 at 8:30 p.m., he accepted Jesus Christ.

"Sex, revolution, the Bible — these are just a few of the topics that the controversial Josh McDowell will be addressing during Sept. 24-26 here on the UMass campus. He will speak on an ultimate solution to the problems of man, presenting a series of lectures on sex, Bible prophecy and the basic error of revolutionary movements." So says the press release from the Christian Service Coalition.

And that's not all. There's going to be a whole week of it. Sponsored by the area Christians.

Also appearing will be Arthur Katz, a Hebrew Christian. Who, in other words, is a Jew who believes in Christ.

And Candi. Candi Lowe, who they tell you presents her own brand of women's lib and sings and talks and all.

And Frank Jean, a Chinese Christian who they say they invited so he can share his unusual life story with all the UMies.

Good, God. they've got someone for everyone.

All for the price of $5300. Some area Christians pledged their summer earnings for the week. And the registration fee for those attending is $5. The Jesus registration freaks over at the Coalition tell you that they are praying that God will somehow provide the rest of the sum.

"We want to spread the Gospel throughout campus. We want the students here to think about who Jesus is. A lot of people are walking around asking 'Who am I? What is my contribution to this world?' We can help them find out through Jesus Christ." This is what they tell you over at the Coalition.

"We're going to share Christ on this campus. Christianity is a way of changing the world. We need a revolution of love rather than a revolution of violence." They tell you more.

A newspaper clipping tells you that "In the past three years, Josh has spoken to more than 1.1 million students and has had 61,000 of them indicate decisions to receive Christ because of his talks."

In a letter to Josh, one student says, "On Jan. 1, 1972, at 12:30 a.m., I asked Jesus into my life as a result of your lecture. From that moment on, my life has been one continuous change."

And one of the freaks over at the Coalition tells you that Josh is not another Billy Graham. "He's gonna give the facts. He's not hiding behind the black book."

A Jesus freak from Texas is up for the week and he tells you about the Olympics he went to. There were 37 Christian organizations there all joined together in a revolution of love. 37. Wow.

Inside A Madison Avenue Ad

BY JIM HOLDSWORTH

Advertising is a strange business.

You've probably heard the juicy fables about consummate seductions in the stockroom, the horror tales of classy backstabbing and the yarns about being in on the meeting where they first said, "Fly me."

There's always some truth to a story, but in nine weeks at a New York City agency (5th Ave. not Madison) I never saw such excitement. An art director once grabbed a secretary and said, "Come into my office for a quickie," but they both laughed and went back to their desks.

Anything you've heard about the evils of business will count doubly against advertising. Rule No. 1: Never Say Anything You Don't Want Repeated. Most people won't have any ill intent when they tell someone what you just told them. But. It soon becomes a vicious game of telephone that you never win.

Stories grow and change. My first week on the job, someone came in and said that Charlie over at Doyle, Dane just quit or got fired. Five minutes later it was going out over the phone. "You know Charlie over at Doyle, Dane? He just got fired."

Have you ever considered the work that goes into an ad? The labors are considerable. Agencies can't send someone out with a Polaroid camera, brainstorm a neat headline and have the ad pasted up before 5:00. The textbook agency can produce a four color (full color) magazine ad in twenty-five working days, if the copy, (text of ad) layout, art and approvals (client-legal) are all rushed at breakneck speed and the engravings (printing materials) are made on over time (expensive).

Our textbook agency will usually take fifty-nine working days on a four color ad, not including the time spent on research, planning and meetings to determine theme and premise. There should be time to write the copy, and then play with it. Wordings are never right the first time. An ad must grow.

The deadline for an ad is determined by the closing dates of the publications to be used. Most will give extensions, but that's a messy way to run a campaign, it soon becomes habit. Your home town newspaper probably closes two days before publication, Time magazine closes seven weeks ahead of printing.

FREE
WOW

The place I worked at isn't textbook, some of the clients are anything but. Rule No. 2: The Client Is Never Wrong. It seems to me that a good agency can afford to be a bit proud. Then again, I wasn't too worried about losing my job.

Anyway, Acne Plastics has several accounts at the agency. (This is a fictitious name it must be that I am afraid of being fired). If Acne's ads are to be finished before closing, we have to get orders six months in advance. The agency will work on the ad for a month and a half, then it is ravaged at Acne for four months. The ad comes back and we're told that it has to be completely changed. There are only ten days until the magazines close, sometimes four, never enough. While I was there, orders came in to make up ads for magazines that had already closed.

new improved
ZAP

At a big company like Acne, everyone finds something wrong with the ad, so that they can say something while the boss is around. The criticism is often picky. As the old political saying goes, "The giraffe is a horse, built by committee." It's all quite insane really, but to say anything is to lose the account ($).

Agencies often do silly things too. A friend in production told me the story of an old ad. It had looked pretty good on the first proof (print), but the agency sent it back to the engravers, covered with corrections. The adjustments were made and the ad returned. It was sent back with more corrections. This went on for a couple of weeks, the more tampering done and money spent, the worse it looked. On the seventh exchange the engraving shop gave up and sent a copy of the first proof. The verdict: "Beautiful," "Crisp lines, good color." The engravers soon lost the agency business, they were said to be too slow.

There are several dream accounts at the agency. One hasn't paid a bill in almost a year. Another account has two good ads ready to run, but has changed the name of one product, the other can't be manufactured yet. A third company is good about bills and such, but likes to have certain free services. They offer "Hot Drink Mugs," and other goodies. Every set ordered in the US of A and Canada goes across the desk of some poor clown in traffic, who has to write up the bulk order. ("Traffic" will be explained later). A fourth account wants "store checks." The extra pay is very generous, but you are expected to go out on your spare time to take notes on freezer cases. Yet another client promises orders to dozens of space salesmen, but will never sign the releases. The client gets taken to lunch, we get the calls of irate salesmen.

Each account has its idiosyncrasies, you must learn all of them.

The parasites of the advertising world are the space salesmen. These creatures get a commission on the space they sell for their magazine(s). A salesman answers the phone from 10:00 to 12:00, has lunch with his prospective pigeon, allota drinks, then staggers home. Most make good money. No one is safe from their overtures. In August I was phoned and given the pitch about the really really low rates on a special issue. (Everyone has a special issue). I had no authority, he just wanted to talk up his book with the traffic man. ("Book" is fancy adman lingo for magazine).

At the word "advertising," everyone seems to think of TV spots and how they hate to see women squeeze the Charmin. Television is a profitable medium, but only one facet of the trade. Don't forget (maybe you'd rather) the table tents at Howard Johnsons, the paper matches for ICS, the Mt. Tom billboards, the Budweiser jingle on radio, the TicTac display and the Goodyear blimp. All of this article applies to any form of advertising, but deals mostly with space (newspaper, magazine). Space is my main interest and also what I was given to work on most of this summer. (A medium sized agency, it handles about 60 per cent space, 30 per cent TV-radio, and 10 per cent sales promotion).

The only large TV push I was in on was the Good Humor "No-Drip" series with Jonathan Winters. The name should be "Slow-Drip," but "No" was passed by all the authorities and is therefore legal and ethical. Always bid high, you might get lucky. In spite of popular demand, I will not divulge the "No-Drip" formula.

I spent the summer in "traffic," which is a department of truckdriver-policemen. The traffic person must make a schedule for production, and see that everyone keeps up with it. It might sound easy, but something will always run awry. Traffic takes a delicate touch and a thorough knowledge of the people that you deal with and of advertising production. One copywriter may hate being bugged and will stall a project on purpose. Another can't remember his name after lunch and you have to sit on him.

A second duty of the traffic person at this agency is to send out the insertion orders (reservations for space). Everything takes time and there's never enough. If the client wants an ad changed after the printing materials are at the publications (as Acne often does), the traffic person has to phone the head of production at each book and have the materials returned, cajole the art director and production staff into making the changes and then issue superseding orders.

If a client wants to run an ad all over creation, the traffic person has to go through Standard Rate and Data to get all the different sizes, printing methods and specifications. It can be an all day job, especially when placed over the constant routines. Another duty is to get each proof that comes in signed by the copywriter, art director and account executive. It only takes five minutes, but the second you sit down, the Mississippi Garbage Contractor will phone and ask where their insertion order is.

Death is swift and silent. My first week, an art director was axed. He was out of the office by 11:00, the new director took up residence before 1:00. No one talked about it. The worst is when a large account leaves and there's wholesale slaughter. I'm thankful I never saw such a day.

Agencies get hooked on Xerox machines. When one copier is broken, the employees begin to get bloodshot eyes. When both machines are out the workers have runny noses and throw fits. You can't get any work done.

In August I handled a letter from the new Secretary Treasurer of a small magazine in Vermont. ($50 a page is very small). He had our insertion order and wanted to know, "What is it all about?" Two days on the job and I could write an insertion order. A letter was sent back complimenting him on asking such a "searching" question.

The best anecdote I heard this summer from a reliable source, was about Ralph So&so who wanted a better job. He saw a classified ad in the trade press that described a fantastic position at a "reputable" firm. He sent his resume to a box number and was fired the next afternoon. The position described had been his own, his boss had gotten the job application. This story was printed here because Readers Digest wouldn't pay $5 for it.

The most exciting incident of the summer was when an account executive bear-hugged a copywriter, pushed him over a desk. slapped the back of his head and yelled, "Where's the new copy?" Men are driven to strange things if they are worried about their jobs. The client wanted the copy, that day.

It was later observed that the account man had home problems, but that still, if one couldn't stand the heat, one should stay out of the kitchen. Rule No. 3: Never Hit Or Even Touch Anyone. People have been fired for that. Rule No. 4: Behind Your Back, Everyone Is Smarter Than You Are.

Later I heard a non-witness describe the incident. it was said that the copywriter had been punched. Before long, they'll think he was stomped.

Up to now it's been a rather grim picture. Allow me to amend two images. First, the client is not always a beastial ogre. There are cheap people in every phase of every business, there are cheap clients. However, the few men I met were pleasant enough, and their requests are usually reasonable. An agency will often push off half baked ideas, and the client just can't let them get away with it. One ogre told me during a quiet moment that you can never let an agency feel comfortable, the work would get sloppy. A company spends gobs of money to build an image, a personality. When some twit copywriter comes up with the headline, "Everything You Ever Wanted To Know About Modern Sanitation Control," it just has to be sent back with condolences. If it happens again, the account moves to another agency.

IMPROVED

The second correction is that back stabbers are not behind every water-cooler. There are vicious agencies, but frantic infighting is the sign of a poor product. At my agency, the ads were good, everything clicked and there was work for everyone.

There were a couple of people I hoped would get run over, but most of the co-workers were good people. Everyone was always helpful and kind. Mostly it was just a good time. For all its faults, advertising is exciting and a joy to work in because of the interesting and diverse peoples. Good people.

Before I left, an account executive told me always to remember two things about the business. The second I've forgotten, but the first will serve as Rule No. 5: There Is No Such Word As "We" In Advertising, Only "I". It's an ego game.

On the morning of my last day, a toast was made over coffee-cake. "To Acne Plastics, may they roast in hell."

Tummy Talk — Those Other D.C.'s

BY MARIAN PROKOP

If there is anyone who doesn't know about the current food crisis on this campus, then he/she must have gone out to lunch two weeks ago and not come back yet. U-Mass has been hit hard by the high cost of foods and we must be willing to make sacrifices in the name of the almighty budget.

After one particularly unenjoyable meal in the D.C., I began to wonder how food prices were affecting other college campuses. Were they paying more money for less variety and quality the way we are? Were they being forced to except drastic changes in food items in order to stay within the budget? I thought it might be an interesting if not enlightening project to find out. I investigated the matter by centering on the Five College Area and speaking to the managers of the Food Services departments at Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, Smith and Amherst Colleges. I asked them all the same questions and found the managers in most cases, more than willing to answer them. Their responses however, in comparison with each other and U-Mass standards appear to be not only varied, but very puzzling indeed. For this reason, I shall mention each school separately to make the data hopefully, less confusing.

At Hampshire College, there are three different meal plans:
19 meals per wk. for $290
15 meals per wk. for $250
9 meals per wk. for $210
These prices are somewhat higher than last year due to an increase of $30 for 19 meals, $25 for 15 meals, and $20 for nine meals.

"There are alternatives to eating in the D.C."

Obviously, the dining halls are open seven days a week. Each meal has several choices with dinner including three entrees and an organic foods line. (That seems like the way we used to have it). There are unlimited seconds and no cutbacks have been made on food items or their quality. Would you believe that on weekend mornings they have eggs made to order and steak every Saturday night? Wow.

Next I checked out Mount Holyoke College and found out that their room and board was pretty close to that of the average Umie (approximately $1,500 a year), but they get 21 meals a week and have had no bill increase since last year. They have two choices for each meal and two entrees at dinner, which is served (miracle of miracles) by a waitress. Now that's class. Mount Holyoke favorites are roast beef, turkey, and lasagna (not necessarily in that order). High prices have not affected the quality or the variety of food served except for steak which was not only too expensive but unavailable.

At Smith College, room and board are taken from the same bill so it's tough to estimate what percentage of the bill goes for meals. This bill however, did go up approximately $200 to $250 from last year. Meals are served seven days a week in separate house dining rooms which include candlelight and real tableclothes at dinner. (How's that for a touch of class). Lunches are buffet style and dinners served in what they call family style with one entree but allows seconds. An interesting point I discovered is that any guest of a resident can have dinner in the house dining room for only 99 cents (at U-Mass I believe you're charged around $2.35). Favorites of Smithies are roast beef, turkey, and chicken with no cutbacks made. However, I did find out that a freshman barbecue was cancelled because of the high price and lack of availability of hot dogs and hamburgers.

Amherst College, like Smith and Mount Holyoke, has a certain budget to follow instead of a separate meal plan but they manage to have the same variety in their menus as last year. This includes both steak and roast beef once a week. No cutbacks have been made, but due to high prices, sirloin steak has been replaced with cube steak (but after all, steak is steak, isn't it?). There is only one entree for dinners with Amherst favorites being steak and roast beef. They have also stopped seconds, but you can take as much as you want the first time around. There has been no change in the quality of the food and students can get it seven days a week.

The last question I asked concerned whether the managers anticipated another rise in food prices for next year. Admittedly, this was a loaded question and the general response was that it was very hard to tell nowadays since it's difficult to predict food prices for next week. One hope was mentioned that food prices had finally reached a plateau and would not necessarily get any higher. However, that still remains to be seen.

I suppose it really is unfair to compare the food services at these schools to what we have here. U-Mass Food Services probably feeds as many people as these other four schools combined and the money they lost because of unanticipated prices, waste, and loss is I'm sure, a good percentage higher than at the smaller campuses.

I sincerely want to believe that we are not being ripped off by food services. Not intentionally anyway. But when I see that we're paying so much money for so little and I see what other food services manage to turnout, well, I can't help but think we're getting the bum's rush somewhere along the line. It's a very frustrating feeling and I'm sure that Food Services share that feeling with me. Meanwhile, at Hampshire College there are eggs made to order and steak on Saturday night. Ah, dream on U-Mass, dream on.

BOB DYLAN: A Biography

REVIEWED BY ED SMITH

Bob Dylan: An Intimate Biography
By Anthony Scaduto 280 pp.
Grosset & Dunlap

In the past several years every pop music reviewer worth his salt has given his opinion of the great Bob Dylan. You will be pleased to hear that this reviewer has no intention of adding his voice to that howling chorus. Rather, I am going to give my opinion of the opinion of a member of that chorus.

There is a fantastic ego trip which almost all writers about Dylan seem to be on. The fact that they are able to write a book or an article about him allows them to say: "Look how much I know about Dylan." I feel this is clearly manifested in this particular book. At an early point in the book, Scaduto states that one cannot really interpret Dylan's songs. In the following two-thirds of the book he goes to examine, in fair detail, every song Dylan published from Bob Dylan to New Morning. What the author is saying is that "one", the masses, cannot interpret Dylan because one knows only his public face. However, he, as a biographer, has an intimate knowledge of the inner workings of Bob Dylan's mind. To me that is nothing but pointless elitist crap.

It would be a near impossible task to write a biography of Dylan and not interpret his music, but the author must concede that the analyses he gives are only his own impressions and not, somehow, authorized and infallible interpretations. This projected feeling of one-up-manship was, for me, the sourest aspect of the book.

Scaduto's research into the roots of Bob Dylan are far reaching. He travels the route from Hibbing, Minnesota, to the Village, up to Woodstock and back again to the Village. He interviewed people who had known Dylan both in Hibbing and in Minneapolis. The picture one gets of Dylan is more well-rounded than many I have come upon. This in-depth research produces some amusing side-lights as well. One such instance was when Dylan went to his high school reunion in 1969. There was a girl named Echo there about whom, it is claimed, he wrote Girl From the North County. When she talked to Dylan at the reunion she told him she had written a song about him. When he asked what it was entitled, she replied Boy From the North Country. In all, one must concede that Scaduto went about his task with a voracious appetite for detail.

In discussing Dylan at the high point of his career the author shows unusual insight into the pressures that must beset any man who is placed upon the pedestal of a god. That Dylan was often a bastard to people cannot really be disputed, but this book contains observations which clearly show the author has an understanding, to some extent, of the why and wherefore of Dylan's obnoxious behavior. Another outstanding aspect of Dylan's personality at his summit was an intense paranoia about being taken advantage of by those around him. The resulting behavior this paranoia caused alienated many of Dylan's early friends from the Village. Nevertheless, Scaduto's interviews with these people after they had split with Dylan revealed no resentment; they too understood the pressure one undergoes when being hailed as a messiah.

Even with this great storehouse of detail, Scaduto's writing is often sluggish. The very detail which makes the book interesting in some places, bogs it down in others. In all, Scaduto's biography is far reaching in its research, perceptive in its analyses, but too much like so many other pieces to be the innovative biography it has been billed as. Capturing the essence of Bob Dylan, which is what it would seem Scaduto set out to do, is a very difficult task at best. Though I would not say that is what Scaduto has achieved, he comes closer than most other writers.

Rahsaan Makes Bright Times

BY KEN BLANCHARD AND GARY GOMES

IN CONCERT
Bright Times
Rahsaan Roland Kirk and The Vibration Society
At Amherst College, Sept. 16

Ever since Roland Kirk made his appearance in Black Music circles with Mingus some 12 or so years ago, it's been within the minds of quite a few people to write Kirk off as a clown, a freak or a "showman" (whatever the hell that means). This was due in large part to Kirk's sense of Black tradition (the use of shakers and bells, plus nose flutes), and his sense of humor. Playing three reed instruments at once isn't the sort of thing that a lot of people would view as a "serious" jazz improvisation, and Kirk's stage flamboyance (spinning a bass on the top of his head while he was doing a saxophone solo, for example) are seldom viewed as anything beyond crowd-pleasing extravaganzas, but...

On September 16, at 8:00 p.m. jazz musician Rahsaan Roland Kirk and his Vibration Society performed in the Alumni Gymnasium at Amherst College. It was the first in a series of Sunday evening concerts being sponsored by the Amherst College Entertainment Committee.

Despite a half hour delay (when was the last time you were at a concert that started on time?), Kirk and his men immediately grabbed the audience with a lively rendition of the Charles Mingus composition "Get A Little Bit Of It In Your Soul." The fact that the audience was with him was indicated by their hand-clapping participation in a percussive middle segment of this song, which also featured a vocal by Kirk. This led into a baritone sax solo by the capable Ken Rogers,followed by a beautifully executed tenor solo by Kirk himself. Don Smith, the piano player, demonstrated the exceptinal range and quality of his voice (not to mention his keyboard ability) on a moving version of "God Bless The Child".

Rahsaan Roland Kirk In Action

"We're dealing with Black music", said Rahsaan, "music written because it had to be written, it wasn't written for money," he stated, specifically referring to Billie Holiday's "God Bless The Child" as an example.

"This is true root Black music," Kirk continued, "and if it's not your cup of tea, we'd appreciate you splittin'."

Kirk also spoke of the apparent obscurity of Black jazz musicians as compared to white classical artists. As evidenced he pointed out the difference between Art Tatum, a relatively obscure Black jazz pianist, probably the best who ever lived, and Andres Segovia, world renowned as a Classical guitar master. Yet, both, Kirk asserted, could be considered geniuses on their instrument.

After a few minutes passed by, Rahsaan decided to assault the collected multitudes with a composition called "Bright Times", described thusly: "Imagine if Nixon's cadillac broke down in the middle of Harlem, and about five 6'10" brothers came up to him and told him to cut the bulljive and hand over the tapes? That's bright times!" Roland adapted his flute style to a clearer texture than you're used to, and the audience was gassed.

There was so much that he did, and he was pouring himself out of the saxophones. However, the roof really caved in when he decided to do his "saxophone duet", manzello in one hand, tenor in the other, and both in his mouth, blowing two separate melodies SIMULTANEOUSLY. Then poising both reeds in the air he evoked the most beautiful fluctuating noise-harmony that I've ever heard — the harmonics on top of harmonics gig. And when Roland plays them, you never heard such sounds in your life! An incredible feat, and Kirk still hasn't received his due commendation.

Kirk likes to dabble in all sorts of things, so he conducted the band (the cat's blind, remember?) and the bass player got off some great stuff.

But, in reality, Roland played and played and PRAYED. "This is the night to say what you have to say!" and he invoked the audience to DO IT! He wanted to know if the audience wanted to help him up, so he extended his hands to the audience so they could "lift him up" while playing the tenor with his other hand. Sensationalism? Showmanship? Naaaaaah... it's just Roland's way.

Kirk and the Vibration Society followed this with "My Favorite Things", which led into a really nice piano solo before changing time and soothing the audience with a love song featuring Don Smith once again on vocal. Kirk then took a request from the audience, another sax "duet" played solo. After earning a standing ovation, a string of tunes highlighted by brilliant sax solos rounded out the evening. Those who had come to see and hear a virtuoso perform got what they came for. Those jazz artists who are yet to come to Alumni Gymnasium will be standing in the shadow of giants Rahsaan Roland Kirk and his Vibration Society.

But, then again, what can you expect from a cat whose first instrument was a garden hose, and who is known to jam with jet engines taking off? Rahsaan, Rahsaan... Maybe (quite likely) HE'S the SANE one.

by David Miller

This isn't exactly a concept album, but Art Garfunkel's first solo album does seem to have an idea running through it: the tension involved in maintaining a balance between the ideals of love, hope and happiness on the one hand, and the sure knowledge of pervasive cynicism, death, and love lost and re-lost on the other. In the process of exploring this, Garfunkel and co-producer Roy Halee have attempted to synthesize the talents of a diverse group of sidemen (for example — Jerry Garcia, Larry Knechtel, J.J. Cale, the St. Mary's Choir) and songwriters (ranging from Randy Newman to Osibisa to Jimmy Webb) into a single style. Sometimes it works; sometimes not.

In my opinion, the best songs on the album are "Down in the Willow Garden", "Old Man", and "Mary Was an Only Child". "Willow Garden", by Charlie Monroe, is a simple ballad of the murder of a young girl by her lover. While the lyrics are macabre — "I drew my sabre through her/ It was a bloody knife/ I threw her in the river/ Which was a dreadful sight" — the melody is light and the orchestration sparkles. The irony set up in this way is positively gripping, almost surreal. "Old Man" is the Randy Newman song and has an appropriately piano-based arrangement. About a cynic's last reward, the soaring strings set up a similar kind of irony in relation to the lyrics, which close with "Won't be no god to comfort you/ You told me not to believe that lie/ You don't need nobody, nobody needs you/ Don't cry, old man, don't cry/ Everybody dies." "Mary Was an Only Child" has a kind of "Scarborough Fair" feeling to it, particularly in the backing vocals. Written by Milchberg, Hammond and Hazlewood, it tells of an abandoned and wretched young woman who nonetheless "shone like a gem in a five-and-dime store".

If the finest songs on the album deal with the more negative side of that fine line between untarnished idealism and a kind of qualified cynicism, that leaves the balance to be handled mainly by the lesser pieces. "Traveling Boy", by Williams and Nichols, opens the album with big overtoned harpsichord chords. The song's about a rambler who always leaves his loves behind and always remembers them. It's nice enough, but a bit too predictable in lyrics and chord changes. "Feuilles-Oh/ Do Space Men Pass Dead Souls On Their Way To The Moon?" promises more than it delivers. The first part is folk tune; the second is a Bach chorale with new lyrics by Linda Grossman. An interesting idea, but not too well developed. "Woyaya", by Sol Amarfio and Osibisa, immediately follows "Mary" and appears to complement it. It's probably much too Anglicized here, and a bit banal, but it picks up quite nicely with the addition of a children's chorus. It and Van Morrison's "I Shall Sing", which here suffers from an overdose of pseudo-Mexicali, are both happy feets numbers about things getting and staying better in spite of. The album closes with "Another Lullaby" by Jimmy Webb. The song doesn't give an answer to the troubles; it says we'll try again tomorrow, maybe we can cop then. "Close your eyes/ My sister fair/ Though the snow is falling and the trees are bare."

Two noticeable disappointments are Webb's "All I Know", the current single, which, in spite of some good lines and the "Boxer" SuperDrums, is far too predictable, and the folk song "Barbara Allen", which is given a production so overblown that one can only marvel at it. But don't get me wrong — all in all, Angel Clare is an album worth having if you ever dug Simon and Garfunkel. It's just a bit unfocused.

Joseph Jarman, SONG FOR (Goody GY 30003) $2.98 list price. RCA, that monolith of the communications agency has seen fit to release some truly fine materials from the Delmark stores of knowledge, including this remarkable extravaganza from 1967 by Multi-reedman Joseph Jarman. Jarman as you may know, was one of the founders of the Art Ensemble of Chicago.

It's amazing to hear the duel drumming of Thurmond Barker and Steve McCall, and the incredible talents of the late bass player Charles Clarke and the late Christopher Gaddy, pianist. After the demise of this group, Jarman stagnated a few years, composing rather than playing, until he came across Malachi Favors, Lester Bowie and Roscoe Mitchell, whose lp SOUND features aforementioned Bowie on trumpet, Favors on bass and Mitchell on bass sax and assorted reeds. This is another $2.98 "Goody" (GY 30004) which also features the incredibly lurching tenor sax of Maurice McIntyre, and it showed the direction that the Art Ensemble would travel in, while being aided and abetted by Jarman. All the above were members of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians of Chicago. Let's not leave Chicago yet, for the father of us all Sun Ra, was working in the windy city in 1956.

Sun Ra and his Myth Science Orchestra, A SUN SONG (Goody 30002), features big band arrangements out of the Ellington mode with weird trappings, and this was the beginning of Sun Ra's personal voyage towards directly influencing such great men as John Coltrane. If you think that Sun Ra dropped out of the skies, you may be correct, but this album features Ra's arranging talents, and it is also his first album. If you're interested in what Sun Ra is doing now, you'd better look back to then, because it's all a logical line, and this album features the incredible beauty of Pat Patrick's and John Gilmore's (who 'Trane said he listened to before he recorded Giant Steps) saxophone playing, plus the remarkable tympani work of Jim Hearndon, who unfortunately is not playing this music anymore. The arrangements may sound dated, but that's only if you want to put dates on them. A beautiful album by a truly beautiful man. If you're interested in more contemporary Sun Ra, I'd suggest picking up on It's After the End of the World (BASF/ MPS-Saba 20748) which features the excellent violin, viola, cello and bass work of one Alan Silva, and his latest release on Blue Thumb records, Space is the Place (BTS 41), which features the immortal "Rocket Number 9". Sun Ra possibly has as many albums out as there might be stars, most released on his own independent label.

AND IT'S ABOUT TIME SUN RA GOT THE RECOGNITION HE DESERVED.
RATING FOR THE ABOVE ALBUMS: A PLUS SOLID.

An Album of Wealth and Taste

Goats Head Soup
The Rolling Stones
Rolling Stones COC 59101

Goats Head Soup will go down in history as being Sticky Fingers II, the logical successor to one of the Seventies most popular and important albums. This feeling, more than any other, becomes rapidly evident as the needle tracks on and unravels this latest Rolling Stones masterpiece. The two records show striking similarities in genealogy, conception and effect. They were written and recorded after an American tour which, aside from providing Mick and Keith with unique, cataclysmic song-writing experiences, always finds the band polished and well-honed. Song arrangement shows less brass this time, something that can be attributed to the Stones' ongoing maturation; but song placement and song structure of Goats Head Soup constantly reminds one of its zippered predecessor.

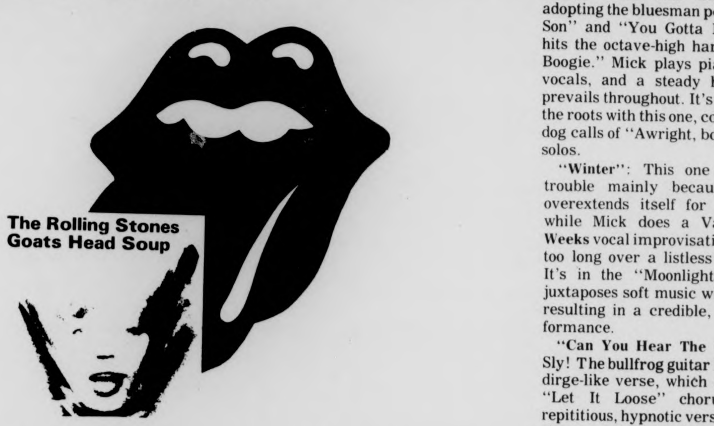
This, then, leaves Exile somewhere off Main Street and away from the predictable progressions their albums have traced. Exile was written and recorded on the eve of their last American tour, something which persuaded them to "rip this joint" and boogie their way across the States via a new act of hard cock-rock. Written largely to be played live, Exile can be easily thought of as a document of that 1972 tour in the same way a live record would have been. And live records seldom mark transitions or progressions, only time.

Without further adieu, then, please allow me to introduce Goats Head Soup, an album of wealth and taste:

"Dancing With Mr. D.": Mick Taylor plays a slowed-down, slightly modified "Bitch". Charlie hits his high-hat then lays down a thumping, throbbing voodoo beat while Keith lets out some screeching, piquant wails on his guitar and Wyman plods along behind in true undertaker fashion. Jagger beckons us in, whispering something evil and ominous. Before long it becomes apparent we are witnessing Mick's latest tryst with the Devil. Jagger's played this one before with "Sympathy for the Devil" and he ended up shouting for shelter, but here he plays with fire once. "Mr. D." takes place inside a graveyard amidst sculls, snakes, spiders and other horrorshow creepy-crawlies. It builds with eerie background vocals, then fades out under more screaming and moaning. Whew!

"100 Years Ago": A straightforward track that goes through a few transitions and reminds me of "Sway". Starting off with a simple verse-chorus structure, it grows stronger and louder with some frantic wah-wahing from Keith, then suddenly slows, becomes harmonic, then deliberately corny for a few measures of "Call me lazybones — Got no time to waste away". This breaks into a Latin-flavored jam reminiscent of "Can't You Hear Me Knocking" which tears things up a bit.

"Coming Down Again": Keith on vocals this time and judging from the shit he's been stepping into lately, it just may be his swan song. Mick's harmonies add an enamouring touch to this melodic ballad that brings back memories of December's Children and, more recently, "I Got The Blues" from Sticky Fingers. Nicky Hopkins' keyboard, and complementary sax from Jim Horn and Bobby Keys add the finishing touches to carry the song through its six minutes. Keith and Mick do the rest; it's primarily a vocal song.



"Doo Doo Doo Doo Doo (Heartbreaker)": Seems to be vindictive towards heroin pushers and the New York Police Department. (New York City, by the way, is mentioned on several of the album's songs.) It's very much like "Black Magic Woman" complete with a Santana-like guitar solo, lots of blaring horns, and some biting guitar chords. The shortest song on the album, by almost a minute, it nevertheless packs a wallop.

"Angie": Side one closes with Mick's bittersweet torch song for Angela Bowie. (For those out of touch with the Rona Barrett scene, Mick has all but broken up poor David's marriage and now insists to feed the fire with this lament.) Probably the finest Stones ballad since "Ruby Tuesday", it combines that song's sentiments with some 12-string "As Tears Go By" picking and mellow "Wild Horses" embellishments. Also their first accoustic song in a while to be picked intentionally for single status.

"Silver Train": Some funky raunch 'n' roll in the fine tradition of "Honky Tonk Women", "Brown Sugar" and "Rocks Off": it's about whores. It starts out like a Kinks number, but the "Mid-night Rambler" harmonica and the "Love in Vain" slide guitar make it sufficiently Stoned. Many fine songs have been written about trains (not to forget "Love in Vain"), and this train seems to be used as a metaphor. (I wish once and for all the Stones would give us the lyrics with the album!) The one-chord verse makes way for a free-for-all chorus that beats the pants off Johnny Winter's version.

"Hide Your Love": What would a Stones album be without a touch of dem ol' Delta blues? "Hide Your Love" has Mick re-adopting the bluesman persona of "Prodigal Son" and "You Gotta Move" while Keith hits the octave-high harmonies of "Casino Boogie." Mick plays piano as well as the vocals, and a steady hand-clapping beat prevails throughout. It's all the way back to the roots with this one, complete with hound-dog calls of "Awright, boy" to introduce the solos.

"Winter": This one runs into a little trouble mainly because it dangerously overextends itself for over five minutes while Mick does a Van Morrison-Astral Weeks vocal improvisation that drags on far too long over a listless two-chord pattern. It's in the "Moonlight Mile" mode and juxtaposes soft music with romantic lyrics, resulting in a credible, but indulgent performance.

"Can You Hear The Music": Shades of Sly! The bullfrog guitar leads the way into a dirge-like verse, which evolves into a nice "Let It Loose" chorus. Together, the repititious, hypnotic verse and the celebrant chorus make for a first-rate song.

"Starfucker": Forget the "Star Star" nonsense on the label, this one's named "Starfucker." It's a beauty; just as ballsy as "Honky Tonk Women", but not quite as infectious. There's a singalong chorus: "You're a starfucker, starfucker, starfucker, star fuck a star..." And Mick is on familiar turf with the verse: "Honey I miss you two-tongued kisses — Legs wrap around me tight — When I get back to New York girl — Gonna make you scream all night!" Jeez, Mick is good on this one!

Added up, Goats Head Soup is one hearty meal that will satisfy anyone's appetite for good rock 'n' roll. Never mind that wonderfully gross picture on the inside of a goat's head inside a bubbling cauldron; eat it up because this record's gonna be a monster!

Clean Living's Cowpie

Meadowmuffin
Clean Living
Vanguard VSD 79334 time: 32:21

One of this area's best friends, Clean Living, put out their second album this summer, and it turned out a qualified treat.

I say qualified because it does have a few, um, slow spots, and none of the playing on the record really gets past the point of being massively competent. Ah, but let's not dwell on that. Overall the record's good, and in parts, very very good.

Normal Schell wrote seven of the ten songs, and he has a keen knack for writing some very catchy tunes like "Far North Again", "New York City" and the stand-out "Red Lord".

A couple of songs, like the lullabye-ish "Carol For A New Lady" and the low-burning "Me and You" bog things down, one in strings, the other in stilted, over-indulged 'niceness'.

At their best, this band manages to evoke a moving timelessness not too far removed from, dare I evoke the name, The Band, at least in The Band's more country movements.

If you've ever seen and enjoyed them live, you know what Meadowmuffin (or Cowpie) is about, give or take a few strings and things — no glam-glitter, tricks or gimmics, just the music. And if you were in the mood at their concert, you got up and danced. It wasn't shake-dancing, it was more sway-sashay dancing. The distinctive thing about a Clean Living crowd is the way they react. No boogie or mind dance or other frenzy-inducing motion. Clean Living is something purer, simpler, almost more wholesome, healthier, something akin to the gentle swaying of the tall grass in the meadow...

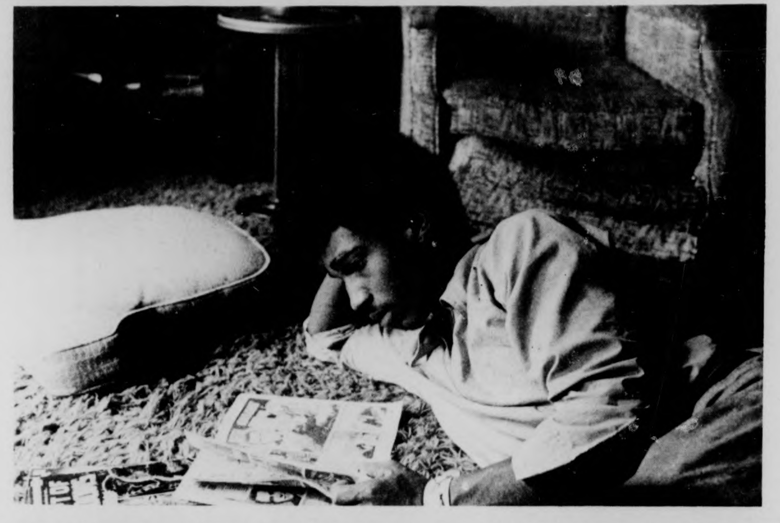
Last Page of Genesis II

BY: BILL FOSTER

(Ed. Note: Bill Foster is a university year for action student working at the Urban League of Springfield and was assigned to do a story on the Group Home, Genesis II.)



GENESIS II

On routine assignment, I stopped by an obscure address on Hancock St. in Springfield and was surprised to see an old friend. She was working along with a bunch of down-looking people in a small but efficient office.

"What's happening, Val?" And this is how I, a stranger in a strange land, got involved with the closing of the Group Homes in Springfield.

"They've screwed around with our money from the beginning and this is the final come down."

Although we had been laughing and cracking jokes only minutes before, the bitter tone came through. And when I looked into their eyes and saw these people who had dedicated all their expertise, time, and love to this program, I began to understand the pain there.

"The girls have taken it alot harder than the boys."

"Who told them?" I asked.

Valerie looked over at me and said softly, "They knew. It's been in the wind for a long time. We're closing down the office along with the houses. They come to pick up the Xerox machine on Monday."

Group Homes is a division of Genesis II, a program of half-way houses for young offenders. Here, they are counseled by both professionals and paraprofessionals on how to deal with themselves and the "system." They stay at the particular house (there are three) anywhere from three to eight months. Genesis II also ran a school for the young people until it had to fold because of no financial support on either the federal level or locally.

Of all three houses, only Middle Earth has a chance to remain open. The biggest problem that faces the staff is placing 25 young people with only a week's notice.

"It really hurts to have to turn them over. For many of them, the only option is to return to a detention center" one of the counselor said.

I went to each of the homes doing some unprofessional gawking and a lot of honest listening. The kids were not dope fiends or criminals, although these are the labels that stick all too often. We rapped and laughed a little and it made me sorry I was coming to know such good people at such a bad time.

I watched the counselors, giving that last bit of advice to "their students" before they cut out and could see only a glimmer of the special relationship that they have with each other. The same sort of sad beauty inspired by a beautiful piece of classical music, if that makes sense. These are the people who were given that "half-a-chance" to do something and were making all kinds of progress only to have that chance prematurely snatched away. It couldn't help being bummed out.

The day before the program was to end, I came around to take pictures.

"What are you, the MAN?" one guy asked me. The question was put forth jokingly, but he avoided my camera like the plague.

"Okay, no pictures." He smiled and came back. The girls politely avoided my attempts at candid photos too!

"Let me go up and put on my prom dress!"

I took the hint and tried being a little more discreet.

Leaving, I found it easier just to smile and keep moving. What do you say to people you've just met, who've touched something warm in you and who you'll more than likely never see again? Who have been called the "social dreggs" and outcasts who may never understand that you wish something could be done — But what the fuck can I do? The most sincere wish that I could have for them, things being as they were — Peace, Power & Soul.

PLEASE — Hear What I'm Not Saying

PLEASE — Hear What I'm Not Saying
Don't be fooled by the face I wear, for I wear a thousand masks,
And none of them are me.
Don't be fooled, for God's sake don't be fooled.
I give you the impression that I'm secure,
That confidence is my name and coolness my game,
And that I need no one. But don't believe me.
Beneath dwells the real me in confusion, in fear, in aloneness.
That's why I create a mask to hide behind,
To shield me from the glance that knows,
But such a glance is precisely my salvation.
That is, if it's followed by acceptance, if it's followed by love.
It's the only thing that can liberate me
From my own self-built prison walls.
I'm afraid that deep-down I'm nothing, that I'm just no good,
And that you will see this and reject me.
And so begins the parade of masks.
I idly chatter to you.
I tell you everything that's really nothing
And nothing of what's everything, of what's crying within me.
Please listen carefully and try to hear what I'm not saying.
I'd really like to be genuine and spontaneous, and me.
But you've got to help me. You've got to hold out your hand.
Each time you're kind, and gentle, and encouraging,
Each time you try to understand because you really care,
My heart begins to grow wings, very feeble wings, but wings.
With your sensitivity and sympathy, and your power of understanding,
You alone can release me from my shadow world of uncertainty —
From my lonely prison
It will not be easy for you,
The nearer you approach me, the blinder I may strike back.
But I am told that love is stronger than strong walls.
And in this lies my hope, my only hope.
Please try to beat down these walls with firm hands
But gentle hands — for a child is very sensitive.
Who am I, you may wonder?
I am someone you know very well.
For I am every man you meet, and I am every woman you meet.
And I am you, also.

Dance: "A Painting Trying To Be Reality"

BY MARK CUDDY &
CAROL CARDULLO

"If the audience is cold then we'll just do a technical performance and leave."

"I'm just an artist reflecting his times, what he eats, what he lives."

Eleo Pomare is a man with swift, magical gestures and a voice like James Baldwin. He describes his company as doing Living Theatre theatre-dance.

Why did you come to a predominantly white middle class university like U. Mass?

"Strange question . . . the thing is that there are not enough black institutions and places to really support the black artist and you'll find that it's the white audience, especially the college and university people whom I like very much. I'd much prefer performing for a university then, let's say, civic groups or a group of snobs who come to the theatre with some post-european ideas as to what aesthetics should be . . . I mean I've gone to colleges and I just ask the people who've brought us there how sophisticated an audience do you expect and we've had situations where they've said "do it the way it should be done, go all out, these kids need to be shaken up, they need to be awakened." So fine, we do the riot as we see it happen in Harlem and then they still end up upset."

What do you mean when you say you are a teacher rather than an entertainer?

"One of the things I've tried to do is to take jazz away from the Broadway stage mentality where people sit and be entertained. To me jazz is a way of living, a music evolves, a dance evolves, so that I'm more interested in the social or anthropological aspect of what this mode of movement can do or what it can say."

The Wednesday evening performance of The Eleo Pomare Dance Company featured four compositions by Pomare. The stark black background of "Climb" was the opening scene of the performance. This solo was executed by Henery Yu Hao Yen. It is an interesting piece of choreography to which the dancer did not do justice. He somehow lacked an elusive quality needed to give credence to this dance experience.

The choroegrapher called "Climb" a "study in atavistics" and indeed one notices the deliberate unfolding of a progression of increasingly intricate movements. However, the dancer did not seem sure enough of himself to pull it off. The more balletic parts, in particular, were weak.

"Nother Shade of Blue" was Pomare's attempt to create various expressions of the blues, without restricting himself to the black experience.

In "Early Morning Rain", a trio of women (two black and one white) performed. The black women dominated the piece by generating more excitement in their interpretation, thereby making the white woman seem slightly lackluster by comparison.

"First Time", sung by Roberta Flack and performed by Frank Ashley and Lillian Coleman was well received by the audience. I was a bit puzzled as to how this fit in with the theme of blues, but nevertheless it was well executed. The lighting, which created silhouettes for the opening of the piece, helped to establish the mood and dream-like quality.

Lillian Coleman was the superior technician, although again, Frank Ashley's feeling for the piece carried him through quite well.

In contrast, the man and woman in "Pretty Polly" seemed more evenly matched. Both Strody Meekins and Carole Simpson displayed a simultaneous blend of power and grace that made them highlight of "Nother Shade of Blue". The audience favorite in this work was "Travelling", the closing segment. It depicted a Western bordello scene and the audience seemed to enjoy the sexual overtones. The stark lighting and bareness of the scene gave it an almost surrealistic effect. Eerieness was further heightened by the humorless, shrill laughter of the prostitutes.

At this point, the choreography began to wear a little thin. Several sequences of movement were repetitious. Overall, the first half of the performances was disappointing.

The black experience was the theme of the second half, and in these pieces the company was far more successful. The black woman, in particular, was the focus of "Roots". According to Pomare, "Roots" deals with the way in which the black woman was stripped of her regality and how she regains it.

The lone black woman in a red-plumed helmet made a majestic, warrior-like and formidable figure. Driving African music enhanced the image of power. The transition of the woman into a slave was less effective. The dancer did not display the same feeling for this section. However, greater tension in the dancer's movement (which was needed) corresponded with a crescendo in the music and this elevated the level of excitement.

At the climax of "Roots", a stirring poem by Nikki Giovanni chronicled some of the sad and cruel events in man's (white man's) history. Giovanni ends by saying that in our society war has become peace and genocide, patriotism. Meanwhile the black woman has ragained her strength and pride. "Roots was a moving performance and an indication of the capabilities of the company. Quote from Eleo Pomare " . . . Blues For The Jungle ends with a kind of a situation where we try to create an environment. There's lots of language used, lots of collaging chaos but creative chaos, and some communities find it very offensive. . . If the audience is cold then we'll just do a technical performance and leave. But there are places where the students are really with it and you know if you walk down the aisle trying to sell a watch or calling someone a mother-fucker, the audience is not going to walk away thinking this is a personal confrontation."

A re-enactment of the agony of the slave auction was the opening for the most successful segment of the company's performance, "Blues For The Jungle". This work traced the black man's history from the days as a slave to the present. It was Pomare's best choreographed piece of the evening. It showed elements of diversity and intensity lacking in his other works. In particular "I Got A Hammer" allowed the three male dancers to project the image of seething forcefulness.

"NightSpell" gave the dancer a cooler attitude than the others, but the same raw power lurked just beneath the surface. A love-hate relationship between a man and a woman captured somewhat the same feeling as the black man's power and rage translate into murder.

It is interesting to note than the non-black dancers could not attain the same depth of emotion as the blacks and while they were at times technically equal, an intangible quality possessed by the blacks made them the superior dancers.

In the riot scene at the end, the non-blacks are given roles which do not detract from the intensity of the experience being generated by the blacks.

I found the riot scene trite. Pomare warned the audience needlessly about this segment prior to the performance, as if a few "motherfuckers" would upset a UMass audience.

"What you're seeing is a painting that's trying to be like reality, as opposed to the European concept where art gets put up on the wall or locked up in a museum and it's not educational at all. Because how many people go to museums?"

UMass Theatre

BY MARK CUDDY

The year's theatrical season is off and running at U.Mass. Four shows are in rehearsal and the fifth "Jacques Brel" is open this week.

"Jacques Brel" is made up of the same people who performed the show this past summer at the Provincetown Playhouse. The cast consists of Susan Anderson, Jon Farris, Elaine Vetterli-Brown and Norman A. Brown with Jon Farris directing the production. The show is based on the songs of French composer Jacques Brel with added material by Mort Shuman. It combines both satirical and farcical wit with some extremely moving pieces.

" A Moon For the Misbegotten" by Eugene O'Neill and directed by John Farris opens Oct. 4 with John Countryman as Phil Hogan, Harry Mahnken as James Tyrone, and Diane Tomer as Hogan's daughter Josie. The action takes place on the small farm of an Irish peasant named Phil Hogan. His daughter, Josie, is a fat, ugly farmgirl who has built up the reputation as being the easiest lay in the region, but this is not true. She only uses this as a defense for her unattractiveness and cannot believe that the man she loves, Hogan's landlord James Tyrone, could ever love her. Tyrone is an alcoholic who knows Josie is not a slut but who too cannot tell her of his love. Meanwhile, Hogan sees everything that is going on and tries to open their eyes to each other. You'll recognize the character of James Tyrone as Eugene O'Neill's older brother who also appears in "Long Day's Journey Into Night."

"The Entertainer" by John Osborne will play the weekend of December 13 as well as next semester. The musical-comedy is directed by Gary Stewart Phd. and stars Harry Mahnken as Archie Rice, an aging vaudeville performer who refuses to give up his act. The play as written by Osborne takes place at the end of the British Music Hall era, but director Stewart has transposed the setting to American Vaudeville Theatre in the late 30's.

And that's not all. The Music Theatre Company here at UMASS is planning at least one and maybe two productions for the 73-74 season. You'll remember that they were responsible for "Company" last spring.

The UMASS Theatre Department will be running 3 shows in repertory in the spring. Besides "The Entertainer", they will produce "Rosmersholm" an Henrik Ibsen play directed by 3rd year grad student James Sweeney, and "The Importance of Being Earnest" written by Oscar Wilde and directed by Marya Bednerik.

Now don't tell me UMASS ain't got no culture.

"Jaques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris", University Theatre, Bartlett. All performances at 8 p.m. — Sept. 21, 22, 27, 28, 29. Oct. 11, 12, 13, 25, 26, 27. Nov. 8, 9, 10.

Note: Thursday is dollar night.

"A Moon For The Misbegotten." University Theatre, Bartlett. Oct. 4, 5, 6, 18, 19, 20. Nov. 8, 9, 10.

Sharks Vs. Jets

REVIEWED BY MARK CUDDY

"WEST SIDE STORY"
Kirby Theatre, Amherst College

"West Side Story" is a musical about juvenile delinquent action on the West Side of New York City, during the last days of summer in the late 1950's. Two street gangs, the white Jets and the Puerto Rican Sharks are vying for control in the neighborhood. Tony, one of the Jets, falls in love with Maria, the sister of the Sharks' leader. The Sharks and the Jets plan a "best man from each gang punch-out" at midnight under the highway and Tony goes there with the intent of stopping it. The fist fight turns into a rumble and after the Sharks' leader Bernardo stabs Riff, the leader of the Jets, Tony kills Bernardo with Riff's switchblade. In the confusing day that follows, Tony and Maria plan to run away and get married, but because of misinformation, Tony is told that Maria's old boyfriend Chino, has killed her and is coming after Tony. Tony then searches in the night for Chino to end his misery too, and at the moment he hears Maria calling him and sees her in the shadows, a shot rings out and Tony lies with a bullet inside of him.

The Amherst College Masquers have attempted this difficult show as their first production of the season. They carried the show off well enough to draw an audience, but I was not satisfied. Director Bentley has gone for poignancy in two very romantic scenes, ruining one and making the other ridiculous. The first meeting between Tony and Maria occurs at a dance at the gym where Riff is to tell Bernardo that the Jets want to rumble with the Sharks for control of the area. In the midst of a fast and furious dance number the action suddenly freezes, the lights dim down to a single spot in the center of the stage, Tony and Maria walk to each other, stand in the spotlight and kiss. There was no build, no acknowledgement of each other before the lights dimmed and therefore no feeling when the lights came back up and Bernardo caught them together. Bentley also designed the lighting, I might add, and I am always skeptic of directors who also design in their own productions. The second questionable scene came during the "Somewhere" number. Bentley had the same good ideas technically with the stage transforming into a bright never, never land, but the scene bordered on absurdity. The shallow dreamyness of Tony bubbled all over the stage and the corny choreography of the entire company made it look like an "Up, Up With People" ad.

Two other major flaws must be pointed out. The musicians under the direction of Paul Jensen never seemed to quite get it together. They were either too loud, too slow or too fast and therefore threw much of the solo singing off. Also, "West Side Story" was written in the 50's about the 50's and in order to pull the play off now you have to have a special ingredient. Reckless abandon is what I call that ingredient and without it you can never quite depict the freedom and fearlessness that belonged to the street gang. They had an unmeasurable pride that makes you emphathise with them in "West Side Story" even though they were thought of as scum in many quarters.

Lest you think this was a bomb, let me put you straight. It wasn't... There were some scenes that stand out in my mind as being very well directed. The two drugstore scenes consisting of the war council and the taunting of Anita somehow seemed better rehearsed and acted with pin-point precision. The "Gee, Officer Krupke" routine came off very well. Some directors (and actors) have the habit of milking a proven comic scene to death but Bentley fortunately toned his actors down to pertinent business and the audience caught all of it. The blocking at the end of the play was almost letter-perfect to the script and therefore sufficed. I've always thought that the finale resembled "Romeo and Juliet" maybe a little too closely but because Maria is still alive at the curtain, all is forgiven.

Some of the performances sparkled, namely those of Linda Spohn (Maria), Derek Meader (Bernardo), Don Howard (Riff) and Bruce Boyer as Glad Hand, the coordinator of the dance at the gym, who with horn and cowbell in hand saved that scene with some timely comedy. Ms. Spohn's performance was exceptional as she combined the best female singing voice in the cast with the only real convincing Puerto Rican flare for life. Don Howard and Derek Meader both showed the kind of leadership that made teenagers flock to gangs in the 50's. It was their fresh vitality that was so convincing, how their eyes glistened and their movements lashed out at society.

I couldn't end without paying tribute to Dennis Dorn who designed the strong skeleton-like set. There being 15 scenes in the two-act play, a lot of thought has to go into making the scene-shifts as simple as possible. The sets were composed mainly of scaffolding with three units on casters that served as the Drugstore, Anita's room, and the Dress Shop.

Street fights kind of died down in the year's that followed. Marijuana had hit the streets.

MUSICA

BE THERE AND LEARN
by Gary Gomes

Due to the dearth of exposure of Latin American Art in this country (with the obvious — although fusioned — exceptions of Gato Barbieri, Santana, and — shudder — Sergio Mendes, plus both Dizzy Gillespie and Tito Puente's big band efforts in the large band field), it becomes increasingly obvious that we know very little about the actual efforts in film, music and poetry that the true innovators of Chicano-Latin America have been dealing with.

As a result, the Fine Arts Council, in conjunction with the Third World Alliance, is putting on a Latin American Festival starting with the Eleo Pomare Dance troupe this past Wednesday (see review).

To start off the weekend, three films will be shown this Friday night at 8 p.m. in Herter 231, and general admission will be $.75 for UMass students and $1.50 for others.

On Saturday night, the Student Union Ballroom will be the place for a sound and dance experience with Eddie Palmieri and His Orchestra, one of the truly fine progenitors of Latin American music. The show starts at 8 p.m. on Saturday, at the SU Ballroom. Tickets are $1.50 for undergrads and $3.00 for all those nasty outsiders from Holyoke.

On Sunday there'll be a poetry reading. Check the spirit out (for free) at Herter 231, 2 p.m. Sunday afternoon.

Tickets will still be available from the Fine Arts office in Herter today. Otherwise you'll buy them at the respective places. Be there and learn.

UNDERGROUND FILMS

The first of a Series of Underground Films under the sponsorship of the Fine Arts Council will be presented on Wednesday, September 26, in Thompson 106.

The Series, which was coordinated by Professor Jerry Kearns of the Arts Department will include the following dates in addition to the September 26th opener: October 24, November 8 and December 5.

This Wednesday films to be shown are;:

METANOMEN (1966) by Scott Bartlett the story of the enigma between men and women; THE WONDER RING (1955 — silent) by Stan Brakhage — a trip on the now demolished Third Avenue Elevated in which the circle of railway was seen as a wonderful ring.

WINDOW WATER BABY MOVING (1959 — silent) a Stan Brakhage — about the birth of his first child; FIST FIGHT (1964) Synchronized to sections of Stockhausen's Originale and one of Robert Breer's best;

DEM WATERMELONS (1965) — ROBERT NELSON — a violen, ironic, and very funny comment on the white idea of black and MATRIX (1971) JOHN WHITNEY a free-form fantasia of flowing metamorphosizing images.

There will be two showings: one at 7:30 and the other at 9 p.m. and the price of admission for all five films is 50 cents for UMass students with IDs $1.00 for others and tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall.

COMPILED BY BOB NESTI

BADGE 373

The further exploits of Popeye Doyle, the New York police detective whose earlier adventures were used in "The French Connection." A gritty, hard cops and robbers thriller — a B movie with pretentions. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

CABARET (1972)

One of the most acclaimed films of last year is this film version of the 1967 Broadway musical which mixes spectacular cabaret entertainment with the rise of Nazism. The musical was hailed on the stage as one of the more innovative and exciting of the past decade and has been transformed, through the skillful hands of Bob Fosse, into a truly unique and stunning film. The story concerns the romantic encounters of a young British writer in the Berlin of the early Thirties, immediately prior to Hitler's takeover. The songs here are dispersed through the action, not the plot, and comment rather than further the story. The effect is the first truly unique film musical in quite some time. The score, by John Kander and Fred Ebb, beautifully echoes the era as does the performances, chiefly those of Liza Minnelli as Sally Bowles and Joel Grey the Cabaret's Master of Ceremonies. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE DAY OF THE JACKAL

Raymond Forsyth's best selling novel about an international espionage plot to assassinate Charles DeGaulle was filmed with a cold precision by Fred Zinnemann. The picture has a totally professional look to it, only it's slightly dull; reading the book also helps. Some fine acting, with Edward Fox. Academy of Music, Northampton; Showcase Cinemas, West Spingfield.

THE EMIGRANTS (1972)

The experience of the Nineteenth century emigrant from his disgust with his native land through the long, difficult journey to the new world, is portrayed with compassion and human resonance in this Swedish film. Most historical dramas use their period as a backdrop, this film uses its setting and time to bring the viewer closer to the agrarian ascetic lifestyle of Swedish farmers. Jan Troel directed, wrote, and photographed this beautiful and engrossing film with a skill that's extraordinarily mature. One of the best films of last year; with Liv Ullmann and Max Von Sydow. The first half of a two-part film, its second portion The New Land is scheduled for release this year. Upon seeing its first half, you wish it would follow immediately. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

FRENZY (1972)

Hitchcock, and a beauty. A culmitative film of Hitchcock themes. The story concerns a necktie murderer in London, another man is mistakingly arrested and convicted for the crimes. The economy of the picture is remarkable; Hitchcock expands upon themes he introduced in earlier films such as "The 39 Steps", "Strangers On A Train," and "The Wrong Man," plus a number of breathtaking quotes from "Psycho". His mastery over content and performance has never been equaled. The film opens with a magnificent shot of London as seen from high above the Thames and never for a moment touches ground. With Alec McCowan and Viveen Merchang. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, Sept. 23, 7 and 9:30.

GUNGA DIN (1939)

One of the most enjoyable escapist films ever made. Directed by George Stevens, who made some of the more pleasant Thirties films before he mistook weight for greatness, the film is an adaptation of Rudyard Kipling's poem about heroism and sacrifice in India. Not to be taken seriously at all with a stellar cast led by Cary Grant and Douglas Fairbanks. Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Friday and Sunday, September 21 and 23, 7:30 and 9:15.

HAIL TO THE CONQUERING HERO (1944)

Woodrow Lafayette Pershing Truesman is discharged from the Marines for chronic hay fever. A bunch of Marine heroes adopt him and foist him off on his home town as a genuine hero. In the ensuing hero-worship, he is elected mayor but allowed to keep his post after admitting his deceit. A burlesque satire on the manners and mores of small-town America (peopled by typical Sturges character types) and a more acid satire on hero-worship. Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, Sunday, September 23, 7:30 and 9:30.

LADY SINGS THE BLUES (1972)

The film biography of the popular pop singer from the Thirties and Forties Billie Holiday is mounted with care and style in this enjoyabie throwback to the three-handkerchief Hollywood bio's of the Fifties. It is reminiscent of I'll Cry Tomorrow and The Helen Morgan Story in its tragic story of an entertainer who slowly destroys herself from problems not truly her own doing its fascinating performance by the female star. A star is born in Diana Ross who may not be Billie Holiday, she is a pop singer not a song stylist as Ms. Holiday was, but is an enchanting screen personality. What is best about her performance is that we are never reminded that Ms. Ross was once the queen of Motown. She performs with a spontaneity in the early sections then admirably the intensity of Ms. Holiday's struggle with heroin. Her acting is the film's best point. Her singing is good, it has a tight, raspy, sensuous quality; but it doesn't suggest Billie Holiday's reading of a song. Diana Ross sings all the Holiday standards, but you have to return to the originals for their definitive interpretation. Director Sidney Furie makes the entire mess very agreeable and, in the end when Ms. Holiday stands on the Carnegie Hall stage, quite moving. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE LAST OF SHEILA

Probably the wittiest script of the year can be found in this nifty comedy-thriller about the games some nasty jet setters play on a yacht off the Riviera. Sheila, a viscious gossip columnist, dies at the hand of a hit-and-run driver. A year later her husband organizes a party on his yacht called the Sheila and he invites all those who could have possibly been responsible for his wife's death. The one-liners are astringent and the plot unfolds with enough twists and jolts to make the picture probably the most enjoyable released this past summer. All the performances are good, except for Raquel Welch's manaquinesque Hollywood star, and there is one superb piece of comic acting in Dyan Cannon's bitchy talent agent. Directed with a piss-ass discretion by Herbert Ross; written by Stephen Sondheim and Anthony Perkins. With Richard Benjamin, James Mason and Joan Hackett. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

LIVE AND LET DIE

The latest of the James Bond films, this time with Roger Moore playing the Ian Fleming spy. Gimmicky, ludicrous, and some fun. The film culminates in a huge, destructive chase across a Louisiana boyou in which speedboats crash a genteel wedding. Moore is uncomfortable as Bond, although the picture has enough clever action to sustain interest. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

MY FAIR LADY (1965)

George Cukor's film of the Broadway success is not entirely successful. There's a feeling of a museum exhibit about it. Very good to look at and well played; Rex Harrison gives his memorable interpretation of Professor Henry Higgins, the George Bernard Shaw hero who attempts to change the diction (and lifestyle) of a Cockney slavey. He won an Oscar. Audrey Hepburn plays Eliza Doolittle, and is charming. The Lerner and Leowe score is intact. Won a skew of Oscars and is generally considered Cukor's most acclaimed film, although far from his best. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, September 22, 6:45 and 9:45.

PAPER MOON

A charming story about a pair of con artists in Kansas during the Thirties. He's Ryan O'Neil, she's his nine year old daughter Tatum. Peter Bogdanovich does a superb job of keeping the material from becoming cloying and the film has a freshness usually reserved for watching old Thirties Freddie Bartholomew pictures. A sort of restrained professionalism that keeps things moving without sticking for too long. Tatum O'Neil gives a remarkable performance as the wily cigarette smoking girl who bribes her dead mother's one time lover into taking her on his Bible selling route. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Calvin Theater, Northampton.

PATTON (1971)

The chief reason for seeing this unorthadox Hollywood biography of General George Patton is the magnificence of George C. Scott's performance in the title role. He makes the legend of this complex American general, who commanded his troops to a number of strunning European victories during the latter stages of the Second World War frightenly overpowering. The film has a razzle-dazzle quality that came from watching too many old Russian silent films, but is literate and has a drive and force. Won Five Oscars, including Best Actor (refused), Director, and Screenplay. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Thursday, September 27, 7:30.

ROMEO AND JULIET (1968)

Franco Zeeffjrelli liberates the young tragic lovers from the likes of overaged prima donnas like Norma Shearer and John Barrymore, unfortunately he doesn't liberate Shakespeare's text which sounds as if it is being recited by a junior high school reading group. The picture has great drive and some interesting effects — it would be a great deal of fun to watch if you didn't feel as if Leonard Whiting and Olivia Hussey receives the leads because of their pretty looks. The text, also, is badly tampered with. Sweeping kitsch, the romantic ardour is stifling. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

SHOULDER ARMS

This biting satire on war and the army is a perfect blend of realistic description (muddy trenches, water-filled dugout) and free lyricism as Charlie Chaplin, camouflaged as a tree, moves into the realm of dreams, rescues a beautiful French girl (Purviance), captures the Kaiser (Syd Chaplin), the Crown Prince (Wilson), and a German general (Bergman) and winds up the war singlehandedly. Chaplin had originally intended to produce a five-reel film but First National objected to some of the more polemical scenes. Among these was the film's original ending in which Charlie, after his victory, is feted by Poincare, King George V, and Wilson, steals their buttons as souvenirs, and forces them to flee clutching their trousers. Even with the deletions, First National was wary of its "bad taste" and finally released it with some trepidation shortly before the Armistice. It was a great popular success and, for some, still remains Chaplin's masterpiece.

THE SILENCE (1962)

Two women, Ester, who is seriously ill, and Anna, who is perhaps her sister, sensual and indolent, arrive by train in a foreign city, with Anna's son, Johann, and stay in a large hotel. The last part of the trilogy with Through A Glass Darkly and Winter Light and one of Bergman's most perfectly realized films, oppressive in its atmosphere and disquieting in its human implications. The best scenes show the small boy wandering around the strange world in which he finds himself, a world that amuses and excites him more than it disturbs him. Anna is entirely carnal and libidinous but the scenes of intercourse are not at all erotically stimulating (though parts of them were censored outside Sweden and Germany), being presented objectively and dispassionately. The Silence has little dialogue, and conflict between the two women being present almost entirely in visual terms and through a sound track made up of incomprehensible words and sound effects such as tanks rumbling past the hotel. The Bach music is heard only via the radio that Ester switches on to soothe herself. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke, Sunday, September 23, 8,

Cutting The Crap In Amherst

By BILL MAHONEY

If you won The Game this week and decided you'd like to buy a new home and live happily ever after in Amherst--you can't.

Since February 16, 1973 occupancy of new homes has come to a virtual halt in the town of Amherst. On that day the Massachusetts Water Pollution Control Board imposed a ban on further sewage extensions in Amherst citing pumping station overflow on Stanley Street and the passage of essentially raw sewage to the Connecticut River as the reason.

In May when Amherst residents received their water bills they also received an instruction sheet recommending a brick in the toilet, showers not baths, and other means of reducing the total sewage flow. The present plant can handle 4.25 million gallons per day. However during the peak hours it overflows by one million gallons polluting the Mill River.

Town Manager Allen Torrey while seeing the problem as serious said the 'interim modification' granted by the WPC may allow hardship and priority cases to be expedited. Since August, Torrey says he has been able to grant 20 certificates of occupancy. Still it will not be till November of 1976 when the problem will be resolved with the completion of a secondary treatment plant which will break down the sewage to an acceptable level of contamination. This plant will be funded 90% by the state and federal governments with Amherst paying the outher 10%.

Numerous small contractors whose livelihood depends on the construction of two or three homes a year cannot obtain building permits, unless a septic tank is desired and allowed.

The largest construction firm affected has been that of Otto Papparazo's Amherst Fields Project. Located on a 640 acre tract behind the Rusty Scupper on Belchertown Rd., Papparazo's project has been the subject of much controversy. Papparazo said he is "proud of the quality, taste, and integrity of his project." Amherst Fields will proceed by Papparazo building his own sewer treatment plant which will be dissassembled upon completion of the town's plant.

Meanwhile back at UMass, where the largest flow originates, Director of Planning Jack Littlefield said the University will apply for exemptions to the ban so that the Fine Arts Building, The Graduate Research Tower, and some smaller projects may be completed and connected to the system. These appeals will be based on the reasoning that "The facilities primarily constitute correction of long standing resource deficiences in existing University programs and services. And the personnel to be located in these facilities will be primarily reassigned from existing facilities."

Littlefield also said that the greatest growth is over for UMass. It will not be till 1980 that the student population will reach 25,000 from the present 22,000.

The next time in the library look down to the west at that small red brick building with the greenhouse, past the men's athletic fields. That is the Amherst sewage plant. That is all there is between everybody in Amherst and what fish are left in the Connecticut River. It can't handle the 'influent' and the 'effluent' pollutes.

Incidentally that greenhouse isn't for flowers. That is where they dried the 'sludge' in the old days. Now the sludge is vaccum dried and trucked to the sanitary landfill.

Agnew To Begin Defense

By MARGARET SCHERF
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Vice President Spiro Agnew was reported to be proceeding yesterday with plans to "defend his constitutional office."

Two developments over the weekend indicated the vice president intends to try and retain his office and fight charges of political corruption.

Agnew will move in court next eek to block a grand jury investigation, sources close to the vice president revealed Saturday. "He is going to defend his constitutional office," Agnew's lawyer, Judah Best, was quoted by WTTG-TV in Washinton as saying.

This seemed to indicate that motions filed in behalf of the vice president would argue that he could not be indicted without first being impeached and removed from office.

Further evidence of Agnew's fighting mood was the disclosure Saturday by an aide that "an Agnew defense fund" is being organized.

Agnew has denied allegations growing out of a federal grand jury probe in Baltimore that he took political kickbacks for awarding construction contracts while he was governor of Maryland and while he was a Baltimore County executive.

Presidential counsellor Melvin Laird was asked yesterday about charges that he was the source of published reports that Agnew is considering resigning and is "engaged in plea bargaining."

Those charges, Laird said, "are false. I had no such conversations with reporters."

Agnew's aides have denied the reports.

In its Sunday editions The Washington Post quoted informed sources as saying that lawyers for Agnew and Department of Justice officials are deadlocked in their negotiations over Agnews's possible resignation and acceptance of a guilty plea in the Maryland investigation.

The Post reported Saturday that Agnew's lawyers and the department officials have been engaged in "delicate negotiations" concerning a possible Agnew resignation to be coupled with a guilty plea to a relatively minor offense.

Laird refused to answer questions on the vice president's situation, saying Presidnet Nixon and Agnew agreed during a meeting Friday to tell members of their staffs not to discuss the matter.

He said the vice president had requested the meeting with Nixon but added: "That should not be judged one way or another."

Laird was asked his reaction to reports that congressional Democrats had decided that if Agnew resigns they will not approve any successor picked by the President who might be a presidential candidate in 1976.

"Congress will not impose that kind of condition," Laird said. "There are no conditions set in the constitutional amendment covering this matter."

Under a constitutional amendment adopted after John F. Kennedy's assassination, when the vice presidential office becomes vacant, the President is empowered to choose a new vice president with the approval of Congress.

Report On Grad. Admissions

By BONNIE ASSELIN

UMass officials will submit a final report to the Dept. of Health, Education, and Welfare alleging violation of federal law by the School of Education's Center for Human Relations. The study over alleged discrimination againt non-minorities will hopefully be filed within the next ten days, according to Dr. Russell Kraus, special assistant to the provost.

Six new students, in addition to the six already chosen before the dispute arose, were admitted as a result of a complaint filed by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai Brith with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination and the Civil Rights Division of HEW on June 4. Persons applying were told they were denied admission because the University's Affirmative Action commitment to recruit minority students precluded consideration of their applications. They received letters of rejection stating that the center would not consider their applications "due to the constrictive quota for Human Relations Center and for the School of Education as a whole and the School's commitment to recruit minority students."

The 290 letters of rejection dated May 11 were declared "null and void" and the University claimed that the letters, signed by Dorothy Loyd, an administrative assistant and graduate student at the School, were "illegal and unauthorized." UMass claimed the letter was unauthorized because Ms. Loyd was only a graduate student at the School and that only the dean could make official notifications and illegal because to "refuse on the basis of race is against federal law under Affirmative Action" and because it is "discriminatory to ask race" on applications, said Dr. Kraus.

Of the first six slots allocated for the Center of Human Relations, three are non-minority students and three are minority. Affirmative Action does not require a specific breakdown and thus, the School was free to decide its own percentage. Dr. Kraus said, "All rejected students received a proper review and the six new students were chosen." He also said that he did not know the number of minority students of the new six. The decision to admit them was under the opinion that those who had already been admitted should not be penalized.

The final report is the result of three separate confidential investigations. The School of Education study was headed by professor Alfred Alschuler, Eugene Piedmont, Associate Dean of the Graduate School, and the third, under the Provost, Robert Gluckstern. All three could not be reached for comment.

University Year For ACTION To Recruit

By CHERYL WALSH

Dissatisfied with fifty minute three-times-a-week traditional university education? Searching for an exciting and meaningful alternative? Concerned about the discouraging conditions that exist in our country's cities and institutions? Prepared to translate your concern into commitment?

If you answered yes to one or all of the above questions, the University Year for ACTION, (UYA), has an answer at their recruitment meeting, tomorrow in Room 803 of the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m.

UYA, founded in 1971 as a cooperative effort by UMass and the federal government, has openings for placement within community agencies beginning in October.

UMass is one of 11 colleges and universities with a UYA program which offers graduate and undergraduate students placed in specific social agencies, a chance to earn 30 academic credits while working to meet the needs of low-income or institutionalized residents of western Massachusetts.

About 150 UMass students have devoted, through UYA, a year's full-time social action work in the fields of: Health, Social Services, Community Planning, and Education and Housing.

According to Dr. Ruth W. Burgin, Director of the UYA program at UMass, "the program offers a real chance to take your knowledge out of the classroom and put it to use in surrounding communities."

Phase IV openings still available for the fall include: Springfield Hospitals Project, needs four information specialists to develop better communications between hospitals and non-English speaking clients; Belchertown State School, needs one Psychology Assistant to train residents and staff toward one common goal-independent living for the residents Northampton State Hospital, needs two Volunteer coordinators to recruit and supervise all Volunteer activities within the hospital; New England Farm Workers Council, needs one Manpower Assistant to develop and coordinate job placement and manpower for migrant farm workers; Neighborhood Youth Corps, needs one remedial math teacher; Friendly House, Inc., needs one Physical Education Coordinator to train, supervise and coordinate a comprehensive neighborhood recreational plan; Springfield Girls' Club, needs one Administrative Assistant, to assist the Executive Director in his duties also one boys' recreation leader; Western Mass. Legal Services, needs one paraprofessional involving clientele intake, follow-up research of laws, counseling of clients; No. Worcester County Legal, needs one paraprofessional in Welfare Law and one Administrative Assistant Worcester Juvenile Court, needs one coordinator of community service for a Spanish-speaking community and City-Wide Public Housing needs someone to organize councils, and train tenants about rights and responsibilities as public housing tenants.

Susan Garr, former UYA volunteer, now UYA Staff Assistant, sees the program as an opportunity for students to break away from formal "ivory tower" education, while giving a service of themselves, and gaining personal experience as well as qualifications for future career plans through field experience.

If you are interested in being a part of a fast growing UYA program, and are a graduate of undergraduate student enrolled in one of the Five Colleges, and have at least 30 credits remaining, UYA invites you to talk with former volunteers in the program from Sept. 24 to Sept. 28, on the Concourse level of the Campus Center.

"Here is a chance to do something of real value, to work for concrete change in America," says a UYA spokesman. More information is available at the UYA Office, 513 East Pleasant Street, Amherst or call 545-1381.

Petitions Law Under Question

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-A law passed by the legislature last year, if enforced, could mean six month jail sentences or $500 fines for persons promoting initiative petitions recently approved by the state attorney general.

The original 10 signers on three of the petitions neglected to file organizational reports with the Public Records Division of the state secretary's office.

The oversight, according to division spokesmen, could result in criminal penalties if the law is strictly adhered it.

An initiative petition-a means of filing a bill with the legislature or proposing a constitutional amendment-requires 10 signatories before going to the attorney general or approval of its legal form.

Those promoting the petition then have to gather another 56,000 signatures before it can be presented to the legislature.

The original 10 signers, according to the Public Records Division, are responsible for the organizational reports.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn approved six petitions earlier this month. They would require public officials to disclose their assets repeal the state's Racial Imbalance Act; create a Corrupt Practices Commission and strengthen campaign finance laws; create a state director of campaign and political finances, and allow municipal legislative bodies to reduce the budgets of their school committees.

FOR THE 3,000TH TIME this UMie digs in to his Veal and Spaghetti at the Hatch. Surrounded by salt and pepper shakers that probably won't last the night and memories of three periods of History notes that probably won't last the week, he waits for some one to move him out.

At The Hatch

Those Were The Days...

By BILL BALLOU

They lock the doors at five past seven, and by 7:15 a worker comes by your table and asks "Are you finished?" and if you are she cleans it off and you feel as though you're intruding.

The Hatch wasn't always like that, in fact most people will remember when the Hatch was the busiest place on campus between 8 p.m. and 11.

The Hatchet and Pipe is the way the official title reads on the outside of the window near the juke box, but the last person to use the full name was Arthur Aggie way back in '56 (19 that is).

It still serves breakfast, and lunch, and if you want supper you can have it there, too, but since the Campus Center Food Services made the decision to start closing it around 7:00 last semester, it hasn't been the same.

Some people used to live in the Hatch. You'd see them at a table at 8:55, drinking coffee and eating a doughnut; at 1:20 with a coke and a hamburg; at 6:10 with the veal and spaghetti special; and at 9:30 with twinkies and milk.

Two things sold me on the Hatch--the Twinkies and the size of the cokes. Ah, those were good days. You used to be able to buy a coke the size of a milkshake 15 cents and the eternal search for Twinkies used to let you play detective for a while.

And the juke box was never silent. The song throughout the three years I frequented the place was "Layla." At first it was the short version, and within a half-hour span you probably hear it three times. When they put the long version in, it might pop up once every 45 minutes or so. I haven't heard it this year.

And there was lots of soul music. Varying numbers of black men and women would crowd around the juke, sometimes dancing, at other times just listening.

We used to joke about putting the Collegian out down there, and one night Bill Manburg, then Business Manager, suggested that we do it for a publicity stunt. He brought it to the Board of Editors and someone told us "Next time you're down the Hatch with Manburg, keep your mouth shut."

There are better places to go at night now, like the Wall and the Top and the Campus Center Coffee Shop. When the drinking age changed, the youngsters didn't have to settle for Sprite and Hostess any more, but could have their Schlitz and beer nuts.

And now they serve beer where you could only get chocolate chip with jimmies, in an effort to get some of the lost ones back, and as sad as it may be to those who loved the Hatch in all its dryness, it's a bar.

A study lounge, yes, but a bar, no. It was always a wonder to me how anyone could study in the middle of Layla, two hundred conversations, several belches, some singing, a register ringing, footsteps, and the smell of hamburg, hot dogs, and cheese.

A wonder, but still, the Hatch was responsible for more Basic Statistics 121 tests getting passed than Goodell could ever have hoped for.

A study hall, an eating place, and social club for freaks, jocks and all those in between, the Hatch was UMass in miniature. Now if you want to get a look at the School, you can't go to one place, you've got to check the Campus Center Complex and hope you can afford the price of several packages of twinkies.

You'd better have lots of time and lots of money.

Butz-Consumer Demand Cause For High Prices

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - Strong consumer demand and consumer pressure for price controls is what caused food prices to skyrocket, Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz said Sunday night.

"We've seen the disastrous results that can take place when we ignore the lessons of the past and give in too quickly to the pressures of politicians," Butz told the opening meeting of the 55th annual convention of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture.

"By caving in to consumer pressures, we caused oversolves some unnecessary grief," Butz said in prepared remarks.

"Elimination of poultry breeder flocks, marketing of pregnant sows and similar actions by farmers were entirely predictable when, by government decree, farmers were shut off from the opportunity to make a profit in the marketplace.

"I think the American people have learned an economic lesson--that you can't get more by bidding less," he said.

Calling for the end of controls, Butz said "many of us will be pleased when Phase V comes into effect. Phase V is Phase-Out."

Butz told the convention that farmers' net income this year will approach $24 billion, "up from the recor $19.2 billion set last year."

He said the newly-enacted Agricultural Act of 1973 is "a good bill" and will allow the federal government to share some of the production risk without interfering with the price function of the market "without forcing Washington-made allotment and quota provisions on individual farmers."

Butz said the target price concept "says to the farmer, in effect: 'Go ahead and produce for the market. If something unforeseen happens to distort the market system. . .the federal government will assist you in maintaining farm income based on normal production of your farm at the target price'."

The secretary said the new program "will encourage farmers to look at demand signals from the market and will help in our battle against inflation by encouraging American farmers to produce at full capacity.

Murphy Tours UMass Campus

By JERRY LAZAR

Dr. Thomas Murphy, president of University College in Dublin, Ireland, visited campus last week as part of a 30 day tour of American colleges and universities.

His visit here included a speech on "Ireland Today," in which he talks on education problems currently facing Ireland.

Dr. Murphy's tour of the U.S. is by invitation of the State Dept. to examine post-high school education systems. It is the third time he visited this country.

Commenting on the differences between the two countries' educational systems, Murphy noted that Ireland does not have a system of community or two-year colleges, which abound in the United States.

"Our people have high school, or secondary school, and then go on to one of the five universities," he said.

Murphy said he was impressed with the number of student-run organizations at UMass, noting that University College lacks a student union building and other facilities for student activities.

Irish students and American students have a lot in common, according to Murphy. "Modern students seem more concerned about social problems than they did in my day," he said. He also observed that, in both countries, students seem to be heading from one extreme of political involvement ot the other end of the spectrum, apathy.

"You have to strike a balance between letting a student express his opinion, and letting him run the show with no experience," he said, referring to the issue of letting students determine their own educational goals and methods.

Student opinion has considerable influence at University College," said Murphy where there are approximately 40 committees, including both students and faculty.

All things considered, educational resources are greater in America, according to Murphy, and the ratio of teachers to pupils is better here.

Murphy said he did not think the Amherst campus was physically cluttered, which is a typical complaint of many UMass students.

"I've seen some campuses which pack the same number of buildings in one quarter of the space," he said.

When asked to comment on the parking situation, at University College, and whether they had the same problems that have recently come to a boil at UMass, he claimed that there is ample parking space at University College.

"We all want to be able to drive into the office," he said, and suggested that, "if a selective parking system was necessary, "you should put names into a hat, and let everyone take an equal chance."

Murphy said he was particularly impressed with the state college system of not duplicating staff and facilities unnecessarily, something which he believed saves a considerable amount of money.

University College, Ireland's largest and oldest university, was founded in 1851 as the Catholic university of Ireland. It's first Rector was Cardinal John Henry Newman, after whom many college Catholic organizations are named, including a Newman Catholic Center at Umass.

Murder Trial Continues

NEW BEDOFRD, Mass. (AP) - Continuation of the murder trial today of Edward S. Lykus, of Woonsocket, R. I., was a question mark because of the injury of the presiding judge, James P. McGuire.

McGuire, of Fall River, was admitted to St. Luke's Hospital Saturday night after suffering two broken ribs in a fall at the New Bedford Country Club.

Lykus is on trial in the kidnap-slaying of 13-year-old Paul Cavalieri, of North Attleboro, last Nov. 2.

The mishap came only hours after completion of the Saturday session of the trial in which testimony was presented on the validity of voice prints.

JOSH IS HERE.

Sex, revolution, the Bible — these are just a few of the topics that the controversial Josh McDowell will be addressing during Sept. 24-26 here on the U. Mass Campus. He will speak on an ultimate solution to the problems of man, presenting a series of lectures on sex, Bible prophecy and the basic error of revolutionary movements.

The 34-year-old, dark-haired seminary graduate last year alone spoke to more than 500,000 students and faculty members. Josh has spoken on more than 450 campuses in 42 countries around the world.

Josh states, "A change in the social and economic system of society is not enough to bring about peace in our world. Envy, greed, racism and hatred will still be present in the basic nature of man. What we need is a power that can change man's basic nature."

A native of Union City, Michigan, "Josh" graduated from Wheaton College cum laude and from Talbot Theological Seminary magna cum laude. He holds degrees in economic theory, in languages and in history and is a member of two national societies.

He has been the recipient of numerous speaking awards including the Lyman Strauss Speaker of the Year Award which he received in 1965.

Josh will be speaking on Mon., Sept. 24, at 7:30 in the C.C.A., Tues., Sept. 25 at noon in the C.C.A., Wed., Sept. 26 at 7:30 in the S.U.B. and at Hampshire College Tues., Sept. 25, at 7:30.

Mass Execution Witnessed By Couple In Chile

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) - An American couple held prisoner for a week in Chile said Sunday they had witnessed the execution of 400-500 persons since the military took control of Chile.

Patricia and Adam Garrett Schesch, who returned to this country Sunday, also accused Chile's new military leaders of "conducting a program against foreigners."

The Scheschs, graduate students at the University of Wisconsin, were released Friday and expelled from Chile. They arrived in Miami aboard one of the first flights permitted to leave Santiago, the Chilean capital.

"We personally saw the shooting of 400 to 500 prisoners, in groups of 30 to 40, at the National Stadium where we were being held," said Schesch, 31. He said the shootings were carried out by the military and occurred in the stadium.

Mrs. Schesch, 30, said they also had seen and heard beatings administered to other prisoners, many of them foreigners.

The Chilean military junta said Saturday that 7,000 Chileans and foreigners were being detained at the football stadium. The group included two Maryknoll priests from the United States - Francis Flynn of Miami and Joseph Daugherty of the Boston area.

The release of the two American priests had been expected Saturday but was delayed because authorities said they wanted to question them further.

The junta said Saturday that 244 persons were killed during the Sept. 11 coup which ousted the government of Marxist President Salvador Allende. They had previously confirmed five executions since the coup. Unofficial estimates of the deaths ran much higher.

Weary and nervous, the Scheschs told newsmen at the Miami airport that they had been in Chile 2½ years, conducting research for their doctoral degrees in history and sociology.

The two said they were arrested Sept. 14 when Chilean troops burst into their home and found news clippings, books and other material considered Marxist and subversive.

Schesch said he was beaten on the night he was arrested. "The told me I would be shot," Schesch said.

"We knew a lot of government people and politicians and we were studying some of the government programs," Mrs. Schesch said. "Later, we were told this was subversive. It was virtually impossible to live in Chile and not have had contact with people now considered subversives."

The Scheschs have a 1½-year-old son who was allowed to live with friends during their confinement.

The couple and their young son were enroute to Washington, D.C., where Mrs. Schesch's parents live. They said they wanted to hold "a long, detailed press conference in Washington tomorrow, Monday, after we've had some sleep. We've got a lot of information on a number of things that are happening there."

They said they wanted to appeal to people in this country and elsewhere "to put pressure on to help the foreigners there."

"One of their military junta's tactics is a program on foreigners," Schesch said. "There have been killings and there have been beatings, of Europeans, Latins and others."

The bespectacled, bookish-looking Schesch said the junta was also "shipping all the foreigners in exile in Chile back to their own countries, where some of them face death."

He accused the U.S. embassy of "not caring" about what has happening to them and other Americans in Chile.

"When we finally got to see the consul there, he had a list of about a dozen American prisoners," Schesch said.

The American embassy has said only the Schesch couple and the two priests were among those Americans listed as prisoner. Three other Americans were reported missing but they were not on the list of those arrested, the embassy said.

E. Howard Hunt Is Witness

Watergate Trial Resumes Today

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. will bang his gavel against the mahogany table in the huge Senate Caucus Room today resuming the Watergate hearings that have been recessed since Aug. 7.

The committee has promised that the rest of the hearings will be streamlined as compared with the first 37 days.

They'll run only three days a week instead of five. The witness list has been culled to wean out minor testimony. And there is a self-imposed deadline for winding it up-Nov. 1.

Live television cameras will be on hand at least today, tomorrow and Wednesday, with each of the three commercial networks taking one day. What they'll do after this week hasn't been announced.

Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt will be the witness today. His testimony is expected to complete phase one: the review of events leading up to the Democratic headquarters break-in, the burglary itself, and the subsequent coverup.

Then the committee will swing into the so-called "dirty tricks" in the 1972 presidential campaign and finally the financing of campaigns.

The committe's request for the tape recordings of Watergate-related conversations in the White House still is pendng in the courts.

Legal moves for those tapes and others, made by special prosecutor Archibald Cox, are further along. The U.S. Court of Appeals is deliberating whether to uphold an order by Chief U.S. Dist. Judge John J. Sirica that he be allowed to preview the tapes and decide what shall go to the Watergate grand jury.

Hunt, a 21-year employe of the Central Intelligence Agency until his resignation in 1970, pleaded guilty to conspiracy, burglary and wiretapping in the Watergate break-in. He has since asked Sirica to allow him to withdraw the plea.

The 55-year-old Hunt has admitted to being a crew boss of those who broke into the office of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist, although he was not one of the four men who were indicted by a Los Angeles county grand jury in the case. Hunt will testify before the Senate committee under immunity from prosecution for anything he might say.

Nixon's Congress Criticism Obscures Own Failures

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Speaker Carl Albert defended Congress' legislative record yesterday and said President Nixon's criticism of it was an attempt to obscure the administration's own failures.

In a nationwide radio address responding to Nixon's latest attack, Albert said Congress has compiled an impressive record so far this year and will improve on it before adjourning.

"The President does not have a monopoly on wisdom or on a committment to serve the nation's business," said Albert. "Congress is doing and will continue to do its part in moving the legislaive program forward."

Albert's speech was the Democrats' reply to a second State of the Union message by Nixon Sept. 10. Nixon preceded delivery of his written message to Congress with a nationwide radio broadcast.

In his message, Nison said Congress' performance was disappointing, particularly in regard to 50 measures proposed by the administration.

Albert said 40 of the 50 priority items were already in the legislative process when Nixon set up the message and that half of them have passed one or both houses of Congress. And the message itself, he said, "contained an embarrassing lack of new initiatives."

It is Congress that has taken the lead, Albert said, in trying to deal with the major problems facing the nation in the areas of the economy, health, energy and crime.

"Congress granted the President some of the most sweeping economic powers a Congress can confer upon a President," he said. "Because the President was slow to act, the cost of living is up 8 per cent compared with 3.4 per cent for all of 1972."

The administration's shifts from control to decontrol to recontrol of prices have provided no relief from inflation, Albert said, and price increases are now plaguing nearly every American family.

"Congress has helped by increasing Social Security benefits, expanding farm production to eliminate shortages and guaranteeing children a hot nutritious meal at school," he said.

And it is Congress, not Nixon, he said, that is doing something effective about holding down federal spending.

"Congress has cut President Nixon's budget requests by more than $20 billion over the past four years," he said. "Despite that, the President's first four budgets added an incredible $97 billion to the national debt. That totals up to 80 per cent of the national debt accumulated in just four years."

In its efforts to provide health care services for the nation, Albert said, Congress has been thwarted by Presidential vetoes and budget cutbacks.

City Officials Meet In Boston

BOSTON (AP)-Municipal officials from the United States, Canada and several foreign countries began arriving Sunday for the 59th Annual conference of the International City Management Association.

The conference, Monday through Thursday, will center on issues in the future of local government management and will include lectures and workshops on revenue sharing, labor relations, law enforcement and citizen involvement.

Dean Paul N. Ylvisaker of the Harvard School of Education will give the keynote adress Monday.

E. Robert Turner, city manager of Cincinnati, was elected president of the group earlier this year in the association's first mail ballot.

He heads a slate of officials to be installed at the end of the sessions Wednesday.

Nixon's Military Budget Faces Senate Test

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's pleas against cuts in the military budget face sharp tests in the Senate this week on moves to cut U.S. forces overseas and slow development of the Trident submarine.

In his latest expression of concern, Nixon said, "all of our efforts to secure a more peaceful and prosperous world will be endangered if we unilaterally erode our defense posture."

In a letter to Senate leaders, released Saturday by the White House, the President said current efforts in Congress to reduce the defense budget "are deeply disturbing to me."

"There is no doubt in my mind that a stong defense posture is closely linked to the past success and future development of our foreign policies," Nixon said.

The Senate is expected to work all this coming week on a bill authorizing $20.4 billion for military procurement in the current fiscal year.

The House, meanwhile, plans to act on the second stop-gap appropriation bill for the fiscal year that started July 1. It provides funding for federal agencies.

Senate and House leaders are still talking about winding up the session at the end of October.

For the seventh time this year, congressional Democrats will try to muster the two-thirds vote needed to override a Nixon veto.

The Senate has scheduled a Tuesday vote tomorrow afternoon on overriding the veto of a bill expanding federal disaster relief aid by providing up to $2,500 that wouldn't have to be repaid. The original bill passed the Senate 82 to 1 and the House by voice vote.

The Senate plans to put the military procurement bill aside for several hours Monday to consider a bill authorizing an additional $129.5 million in federal subsidies to meet rising costs in the school lunch program.

Similar to a bill recently passed by the House, it is opposed by the Nixon administration.

Among military prcurement amendments due for Senate consideration today is a proposal by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., to authorize a study of possible merger of the Air National Guard and the Air Force Reserve.

Peron Expected To Return

Elections Held In Argentina

BUENOS AIRES (AP)-Millions of Argentines cast their ballots yesterday in elections expected to return Juan D. Peron to the presidency 18 years after he was ousted in a coup.

Peron said his name was not included in a list of eligible voters due to the fact that he was exiled in Madrid when the list was completed six months ago. But the 77-year old general voted anyway at a polling station in the residential northern district of Buenos Aires. He was cheered by many of the people lining up. An interior Ministry source, asked how Peron was able to vote, said he had no official information on the subject.

Peron must win by more than 50 per cent of the vote in the four-man race to avoid a runoff election. Peronist sources were confident Peron would pile up over 60 per cent of the vote. A majority close to 50 per cent would be a severe blow to his prestige.

The only reported incident was in Cordoba, where a terrorist placed a tiny explosive inside the envelope used to vote. The ballet box was set ablaze but no casualties were reported.

More than 14 million citizens over 18 years of age were entitled to vote. Their choices were among:

-Peron and his third wife, Isabel Martinez, presidential and vice presidential candidates of the Justicialist Liberation Front, formed by the majority Peronist movement and four smaller parties.

-Ricardo Balbin, 69, candidate of the middle of the road Radical Civic union, the nation's second-largest party, and his running mate, Sen. Fernando de La Rua.

-Francisco G. Manrique, a former navy officer turned journalist and later politician, and his vice presidential candidate, Rafael Martinez Raymonda.

The election was the second this year. On March 11, Peronist candidate Hector J. Campera beat eight rivals, and was sworn in May 25. But he and Vice President Viconte Selane Lima resigned July 13 to trigger new elections and pave the way for Peron's return to power.

Kissinger Delivers First UN Speech

By WILLIAM N. OATIS
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - Diplomats from around the world are looking to Henry A. Kissinger to bring something new and exciting to the U.N. General Assembly's general debate, too often dulled by dreary recitals of familiar positions.

Kissinger will speak to the 135-nation assembly today immediately after Brazilian Foreign Minister Marie Gibson Barboza opens the annual round of policy statements in which 120 governments so far are listed to take part.

The speech will be Kissinger's first since becoming secretary of state and his first ever at the United Nations, though for almost five years he has deeply involved in U.S. foreign policy as President Nixon's assistant for national security affairs.

Kissinger will be in New York from late Sunday through Wednesday. He will confer with U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim before he addresses the General Assembly, give luncheons Monday and Tuesday for representatives of African and Arab countries, respectively, and attend Waldheim's dinner for the Big Five foreign ministers Wednesday night.

Foreign ministers and ambassadors are eager to hear what he has to say about the waning war in Southeast Asia, prospects for peace in the Middle East, U.S. relations with other countries and regions, and the American attitude toward the United Nations and U.N. issues like colonialism, racism and poverty.

Black Member Of FCC Points Women's Rights

By DOUG STONE
Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)-Benjamin L. Hooks, the lone black member of the Federal Communications Commission, has warned broadcasters that they must stop discriminating against women or face action from the agency.

"I'm hoping it'll not take court action or denial of licenses," he said. "I believe that the majority of men-and you women-who own broadcast facilities, intend to do right. But like most of us, they need a little help. And that is what we plan to do."

Hooks spoke Saturday night at a meeting of the southern chapter of American Women in Radio and Television. About 200 women broadcasters and executives from broadcast chains in nine Southern states were in attendance.

Hooks, a former Memphis judge appointed to the FCC last year by President Nixon, has been named by his fellow commissioners to watchdog equal employment opportunitites in the industry.

Hooks said a survey shows slightly more than 40,000 persons employed in broadcasting, with about 9,000 of them women. But 75 per cent of the women are in "dead-end clerical jobs," he said.

Libya Studies One No. Africa

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

RABAT, Morocco (AP)-A proposal to form a North African federation joining Libya, Algeria, Tunisia and Mauritania under a common government is being studied by Libyan President Moammar Khadafy, sources here report.

The sources say Khadafy, the mercurial Libyan strongman, is nibbling at the proposals to join the suggested federation as an alternative route to his goal of Arab unity.

The informants said Khadafy got the suggestion from several North African leaders after his drive to merge with Egypt was postponed because of Egyptian reservations.

Talk of such unity has been heard before, but Khadafy's passion for bringing Arabs together and the pulling power of his vast oil wealth could turn the talk into reality.

In addition, Algerians and Tunisians are reported anxious to avoid letting Egyptians influence reach too deply into their part of the Arab world. They fear it might happen if the stalled Egypt-Libya unity plan becomes reality.

The initiative for the North African grouping came from Presidents Houari Beumedienne of Algeria and Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia, with Mauretania's President Mokhtar Ould Baddah an eager partner, the sources said.

As the price of Khadafy's participation, Beumedienne and Bourguiba had to promise exclusion of the Libyan leader's arch foe, King Hassan II of Morrocco, the sources said.

Informed Moroccan sources said Hassan got word of the plan in late August and consequently pleaded illness to avoid attending the nonaligned summit meeting earlier this month in Algiers. He was the only Arab absentee.

In an intervies with the Egyptian magazine Al Moussaur, Bourguiba said the four countries would form a federal state roughly similar to the United States. Each country would retain its state administration but there would be a joing defense force, a common foreign policy and legal system.

Boston Dr. Wins Bowdoin Prize

The $10,000 prize, Bowdoin College's most distinctive non-academic honor, will be presented to Dr. Cronkhite at a special convocation Friday.

The Bowdoin Prize is awarded once every five years to the Bowdoin alumnus or faculty member who has made "the most distinctive contribution in any field of human endeavor." The selection committee consists of the presidents of Harvard and Yale Universities and the Chief Justice of the Maine Supreme Court.

Dr. Cronkhite, the ninth person to be awarded the prize, was a cum laude member of Bowdoin's Class of 1941. A native of Newton, Mass., he was awarded his M.D. degree at Harvard in 1950.

A former president of the Bowdoin Alumni Council, Dr. Cronkhite was named to the college's Board of Overseers in 1969, was elected a Trustee in 1970 and now serves as chairman of the Governing Boards Policy Committee and as a vice chairman of Bowdoin's 175th Anniversary Campaign Program.

Dr. Cronkhite has been an industrial physician, organizer of medical care groups and health plans for industry and labor, military intelligence officer, businessman and Medical School and Massachusetts General Hospital. He is an expert on human survival in space and a trained parachutist in command of airborne troops.

World Affairs Council Sponsors Foreign Student Tour

Hospitality Tour Sponsored Saturday for Foreign Students

In coordination with the sponsoring World Affairs Council of Springfield, the Foreign Student Office announces a hospitality tour of Springfield, the Foreign Student Office announces a hospitality tour of Springfield, including pot-luck dinner in the evening and welcoming ceremonies by the Mayor of Springfield.

This is a chance for new foreign students to acquaint themselves with and meet American families outside the immediate Amherst area, and for older foreign students to join in. If you have a host family assigned to you, this is a good chance for you to repay some hospitality by inviting them along.

If interested, apply for details on the Saturday afternoon and evening trip, this Saturday at the Foreign Student Office, 5-0019 or 5-2843. Round trip transportation will be provided.

He was appointed general director of the Children's Hospital Medical Center in 1962 after practicing privately as an internist. He was named executive vice president in 1971 and was promoted to his current position as president of the Board of Trustees last May.

Now living in Marblehead, Mass., Dr. Cronkhite is a member of the Scientific Advisory Board of the Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation.

The Bowdoin Prize, established in 1928, is a memorial to William John Curits of Bowdoin's Class of 1875. Its terms stipulate that the prize "shall only be awarded to one who shall...be recognized as having won national and not merely local distinction, or who...is fairly entitled to be so recognized."

Smith Offers Mozart Opera

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.-On Tuesday evening, September 25, the Smith College Department of Music will sponsor a full-dress performance of Mozart's opera, Cosi Fan Tutte, to be sung by members of the Metropolitan Opera Studio. The opera will be presented in Theatre 14 at Smith College, and will begin at 8:15 p.m.

Cosi Fan Tutte is a bright, lively, and amusing opera, full of admittedly fantastic coincidences and involved and complicated situations. Yet it contains some of Mozart's most beautiful music, to which the words fit with remarkable smoothness, both in the original Italian and in the masterly English translation by Ruth and Thomas Martin.

Performing on Tuesday evening will be Henry Price, tenor, and Arthur Thompson, baritone, as Ferrando and Guglielmo; sopranos Connie Barrett and Barbara Martin as the sisters Fiordiligi and Dorabella; soprano Mildred Fling as Despina; and John Seabury, bass, as Don Alfonso.

Tickets to the performance may be obtained at the Theatre Box Office in the Center for the Peforming Arts at Smith College, 584-2700, ext. 840, between noon and five p.m. weekdays, and beginning at 7:00 p.m. on the evening of the performance.

Guild Seeks "Journal's" Records

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)-A motion for a subpoena under which the Providence Newspaper Guild is seeking a wide range of Providence Journal financial, pay and tax records as well as union contracts will be argued in Superior Court Monday.

An earlier subpoena move requesting essentially similar material but in less detail, was quashed in court Saturday. The guild strike, triggered by a dispute over retroactive pay, began Sept. 13. No end is in sight.

The detailed subpoena motion is expected to take precedence in court Monday upon resumption of the hearing before Judge Christopher Del Sesto on the company's request for an injunction to curb mass picketing by guildsmen.

Meanwhile, the guild has charged that six of its members have been victims of vandalism and harassment during the past three days.

In a telegram Sunday to Journal Publisher John C.A. Watkins, guild president Frank Keane said: "While we are sure no company executives would condone such activities, we must take note of the fact that several of those guildsmen who received threatening phone calls has unlisted phone numbers known only to the Journal...We have taken great pains to ensure the peaceful nature of our union activities and we appeal to you to ensure that no company employes participate in this terror campaign against our members."

Responding to that statement Sunday night, the company said it "deplores the acts of violence against members of the Providence Newspaper Guild as equally as it deplores the acts of violence that have been committed against the company and our non-striking employes.

"Violence, intimidation and threats, regardless of who engages in these tactics, serve no useful purpose," the company statement said. "Any employe, striking or non-striking, who engages in such acts will be disciplined."

When the guild voted 92-86 to strike over the retroactive pay issue, members had reached agreement to accept a contract calling for a 6.2 per cent pay hike, the same as given to other unions in the Journal.

But the build refused to waive the rights to sue for retroactive pay from January to March.

Junta Announces Emergency Economy Plan

By LUIS MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) - The military junta has announced an emergency plan to put the Chilean economy in order and open the door to foreign investment with guarantees against expropriation.

General Gustavo Leigh, a member of the four-man junta that seized power from Marxist President Salvador Allende, said Saturday the emergency measures were necessary "to repair the chaos" inherited from Allende's government.

But Leigh said the military government will not scuttle social reforms carried out by Allende during his nearly three years in power.

On foreign investment, which declined sharply under Allende, Leigh said guarantees will be offered and added: "We want to give confidence to the entire world. The doors will open for any foreign capital seeking a place in Chile."

Leigh said Chile's industries have reurned to near normal since the Sept. 11 coup and those that were nationalized legally under Allende will continue under the control of the state.

Those that were expropriated illegally will be returned to their former owners, he said. Leigh did not define either what constituted an illegal takeover or who will determine which seizures were legal.

Allende's government expropriated by regular procedures about 200 of Chile's biggest industries, including millions of dollars worth of U.S. investments in the copper mines that are Chile's biggest foreign exchange earners.

Other industries were seized by workers and turned over to government administrators without regular government procedures. These were presumed to fall in the illegal category referred to by Leigh.

Leigh said the junta hopes its relations with the United States will be "the best possible." Washington has not yet officially recognized the new government but no major problems are foreseen.

Relations between the United States and Allende's leftist government were cool, particularly because of his refusal to pay acceptable compensation to the nationalized U.S. companies.

Leigh said the first stage of the economic reconstruction plan will include:

-An immediate freeze on the amount of money in circulation.

-Strict austerity in government spending.

-Normalization of industries, many of which have been taken over by workers.

"To rebuild this country, we will all tighten our belts," Leigh said. "We will try to reduce inflation.."

Inflation in Chile reached 323 per cent in the last 12 months.

Leigh also said the junta plans to lift price controls on some products. In the past, the government has controlled the prices of most basic consumer goods. The controls contributed to scarcities of products whose prices left little chance of profit for producers and merchants.

SBA Offers Accounting Courses

Amherst, Mass.--Three programs for practicing professional accountants will be offered in November by the University of Massachusetts-Amherst School of Business Administration.

Prof. Anthony Krzystofik, accounting department chairman in the School of Business, says the programs are designed to meet the growing needs of professional accountants.

A new course to prepare candidates for the Accounting Practice Section of the Certified Public Accountants examination in Boston Nov. 7, 8, and 9, will be given at UMass-Amherst from Sept. 25 to Oct. 25. The course, in room 105 of the School of Business building, will provide practice in problem solving and will be taught by Prof. Robert W. Lentilhon of UMass, co-author of "The CPA Examination."

In cooperation with the Massachusetts Society of Certified Public Accountants, the UMass accounting department will offer an Accounting and Auditing Conference Nov. 2 and 3 at UMass. The focus will be on new accounting, auditing, and reporting problems.

Mr. William E. Williams, district director of the internal Revenue Service, and the UMass accounting department will present a Federal Tax Workshop Nov. 28 and 29 at UMass. The program for tax practitioners will feature a new workshop approach to solving federal tax problems. IRS personnel from the New England area will speak on: state and gift taxation, the intelligence division, the appellate branch, and the Andover Service Center.

Further details on any of these programs may be obtained from the Accounting Department, School of Business Administration, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

French Corridor Sponsors Moliere Play

Democrats Consider VP Selection Reform

The Democratic Party's commission on Vice-Presidential Selection Reform will meet in Boston on Wednesday to solicit opinions from Massachusetts democratic leaders and members of the public on proposed methods of choosing a nominee for Vice-President, beginning with the 1976 Democratic National Convention.

The Commission hearings will be called to order at 10 a.m. in Room 436 of the Massachusetts State House. Senator Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.) and former Governor Endicott Peabody are scheduled to chair the proceedings.

The hearings will be preceded by a press conference and a reception for Senator Humphrey at the Parker House, beginning a 9 a.m.

Among those invited to attend from western Massachusetts are John Lawlor of Florence, Ann Nichols of Holyoke, and Kenneth Mosakowski of Amherst. All were elected delegates to last year's Democratic National Confention in Miami Beach, Florida. Lawlor is a member of Northampton's Ward 6 Democratic Committee. Miss Nichols is a former member of the Bernardston Democratic Town Committee.

WMUA Broadcast

AMHERST--Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA (University of Massachusetts radio, 91.1 FM) will air a discussion with a leader in the nationwide movement to remove President Richard M. Nixon from office.

Tonight's program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski's guest for the live, 60-minute forum will be Mrs. Frances Gagnon of Springfield, who is Massachusetts co-ordinator of the Committee to Recall the President. The Oklahoma-based group hopes to collect at least 10 million signatures on a recall petition which will be presented to Congress on October 1st.

Interested listeners are invited to call in questions during the live broadcast.

Emergency Numbers

In an effort to provide more effective service to the University Community, the Department of Public Safety is instituting an EMERGENCY TELEPHONE NUMBER. Effective today, the telephone number for reporting On-Campus Emergencies will be 545-3111. This will permit direct-line communications with the Police Department Desk Officer.

The 545-3111 emergency number will have additional truck lines available in order to lower the probability of receiving a busy signal. Administrative numbers are not being changed.

What A Josh Might Be

Ever find yourself in a classroom lately, or traipsing around campus or even perusing through the contents of a colorful bulletin board recently? And, if so, you have probably noticed little signs to the effect that Josh is coming. Josh exists. Even the plaintiff question "who is Josh?" appears in neat little Madison Avenue displays everywhere one looks. These bits of information are constantly being bombarded at us. During a stimulating lecture on the biophysical electrophoresis of a figleaf, or during a droll afternoon brew at the Bluewall or even during a good shit at one's favorite stall. Well, I for one DON'T CARE WHO THE FUCK JOSH IS, or where he was born or the color of his kidney or what his insecurity stems from that makes him want to flood the campus with call letters, unless it's money, which makes Josh just another commercial. Well running the risk of giving this Josh more publicity that he deserves, I am predicting who Josh might be when he-she-it arrives:

Maharishi Josh Ji---A new seven year,old perfect master straight from True Bliss Utah, a community of peace nestled in the heart of Death Valley. Maharishi Josh Ji will show you how to get the most out of a good piece. Although he is only 7, the Maharishi has already mastered this art which truly makes him a boy wonder. For only the price of a New York City Massage, twenty dollars, the Maharashi will show you how to attain your piece. Rush Twenty Dollars right now and you'll receive your salvation kit and directions to the Grand Canyon which is the only place it works.

Josh Paul Jones---A Navy Recruiter will make UMass history and expose himself in the Campus Center Concourse, all in an effort to attract a Few Good men to the Navy. Remember---join the Navy and see the World---Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Thailand, Chile, Attica.

Josh Armstrong---United States Olympic Punchball Champion will speak on the Rear Approach Toward Dynamic Punchball. Included in the program will be The Backhand: Pros and Cons, and the reverse followthrough. Armstrong will also show a filmstrong "What Punchball Means to Me" and will autograph milk cartons.

Joshua T. Quota---The new Admissions Dean to the School of Education. Dean Quota has indicated that from now on the School will accept 40 per cent blacks, 30 per cent Puerto Ricans, 20 per cent other 3rd World, 30 per cent Woodchucks and 45 per cent Flying Frisbees. Also this year's Marathon will have as its theme: The Institutional Sexism of the Black Widow Spider, under the Inspiration of Dean Quota.

Josherina Toughcookie---The famous Women's Liberation self-styled "Hard-Assed Dyke," author of the best seller "Don't Touch Me You White Honky Motherfucker." Ms. Touchcookie is also an inspirational songwriter, and has written some sensitive and deep material for the struggle. Such stirring gems as KICK ASS and Bill Baird Must Die may be on her program. Let's hope so.

Joshua K. Botulinski---The New "Special Director of Food Services in Charge of Polish Night" which has been extended to every night this semester. One of Mr. Botulinski's new innovations will be to replace the dining commons trays with real shingles, so as to come as close to the old adage as possible.

Josh Trojan---The famous birth control advocate will hand out free rubbers to all comers. Mr. Trojan will then deliver a lecture on "Inefficiency, and the Elasticity of Demand."

Josh Birch, noted Amerikan, anti-Communist, apple pie manufacturer and mother, will speak on the sinister Communism of the Peoria Women's Club. Ms. Birch will hand out Bomb the U.N. and I'm Silly for Chile buttons to all takers, provided they show citizenship papers first.

Isn't Nietzche Pietzche?

Aid To Saigon Police

By KEN REARDON

A major confrontation is brewing in both the senate and in the congress between the supporters of the administration's proposal to extend continued economic aid to the Thieu regime for the expenses of the South Vietnamese Police Force and prison system and those who oppose such subsidies. A bipartisan committee lead by Senator Kennedy and Senator Abourezek of South Dakota is seeking to attach a rider to the foreign aid bill to cut off all aid to international police forces.

It has been U.S. foreign aid money that has been tied to the construction of the now infamous "tiger cages" presently in use in South Vietnam to hold over 200,000 political prisoners of the Theiu regime. Money from the U.S. government channeled thru the Agency for International Development has also been tied to a 15 million dollar project for the development of a identification system, similar to the one presently in use in South Africa to support the aparthied policies of the Smith regime. Under this system every person over 15 years of age must carry his-her "pass book" under the penalty of imprisonment. In addition to supporting police activity in South Vietnam U.S. foreign aid money has also been sent to assist in the maintenance of law enforcement units in the Phillipines, Brazil, and South Korea.

Recent returning visitors from South Vietnam added support and substance to the statements of Senators Kennedy and Abourezek. Bishop Thoma Gumbleton, Auxiliary Bishop of Detroit, who recently returned from the South says of the political prisoners, "I can state unequivocally that there are political prisoners in Saigon's jails and in jails throughout the provinces. They are in jail not for any crime but simply because they are in political opposition to the present government. The proof is overwhelming. It is clear that these prisoners are subject to inhumane treatment, including deliberate and prolonged torture."

As the knowledge of the situation of political prisoners in South Vietnam has grown public opposition to extended aid to international police forces has grown. This week marks the first national "Week of Concern" observed by educational programs, demonstrations, and ecuemenical services throughout the nation to make people aware of the condition of political prisoners in South Vietnam and the role of American aid in the support of such oppression.

Locally, activities began last week in the Campus Center with the display of a "tiger cage" and leafleting. Over 1200 people signed a petition which will be sent to Senator Brooke and Kennedy urging them to actively support any moves to cut off aid to the Thieu regime. On campus, a group of 30 concerned students have formed a Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners. The committee has already planned a showing of the film "A Question of Torture," which depicts the plight of the prisoners in South Vietnam. The film will be shown tonight at 7:00 p.m. in the lounge of Grayson House. The group also plans to continue the leafleting and petition campaign in the Campus Center on tuesday of next week in hopes of stirring popular opposition to the Foreign Aid bill which is due for congressional action Friday.

Letters To The Editor

Why The U.N. Is Ineffective

To The Editor:

Mr. Eibel's criticism of the UN, particularly in the context of the Middle East, is very reminescent of earlier American criticism of the UN's inability to contain "communist agression" in Southeast Asia. In the Mid-East today, as in Southeast Asia in the past, the efforts of the UN have been a failure insofar as the US persues a policy seeking a balance of military power based on bilateral American support of authoritarian and militaristic governments like the one now in power in Israel.

The greatest obstacle to a negotiated settlement supervised by the UN is Israel's "reprisal" attacks against Palestineans who have been denied their rights since the creation of Israel in 1948 and the June War. Israel insists that the political and military activities of the Palestineans are directed by the Arab governments much in the same way President Thieu of South Viet Nam insisted that civil war in his country was caused by North Viet Nam. As a result, Israel will launch attacks against Syria, Lebanon and Jordan at will; just as South Viet Nam encouraged the bombing of North Viet Nam, Laos, and Cambodia. At the same time Israel calls for more American military aid to fuel military tension in the Mideast and suspend the political issue of the Palestinean minority rights which apparently have little place in the Jewish State whose politics are dominated by military personalities and neo-racist Zionists.

It would be most realistic to appreciate how American aid to Israeli military adventurism is totally consistent with bilateral American support for authoritarian and militaristic regimes in Portugal, Spain, Greece, Turkey, Iran, Pakistan, Thailand, and South Viet Nam.

As long as American foreign policy gives higher priority to a sense of security based on bilateral balance of power and politics, the United Nations and human rights will continue to be ineffective and for that reason, and that reason only, Mr. Eibel.

The Only Available Info

To The Editor:

This letter is in response to a recent Letter To The Editor by Mr. Robert M. Myers concerning the publication 1+1‡3 and its coverage on the issue of adoption. In his letter, Mr. Myers claims that the information given was "extremely inaccurate as to make its publication harmful rather than helpful." I would like to refer to that matter.

First of all, 1+1‡3 took us approximately nine months to prepare. We wanted to include a section on alternatives to abortion for women who might want options other than abortion. During that time, we wrote to a major source which allegedly deals with such alternatives requesting information and never received a reply. Our financial resources were limited. We searched through all our available pamphlets and resources and found absolutely NO information in regard to adoption. We finally stumbled upon one short article which was published in the Boston Women's Health Collective's "Women's Yellow Pages" and, with their permission, we were allowed to reprint it in our book. Since that time, it is still the ONLY article we have come across on the subject of adoption. Its information may perhaps be incomplete, rather than inaccurate.

We do suggest, however, that if you are greatly concerned about the issue, that YOU write a section on the subject of adoption as an alternative which we most willingly will include whenever the book is next revised and published. We also suggest that your agency might best show its concern by making available to UMass students some PRINTED information on the subject in order that they might get a "clearer and more concise" picture of adoption should they ever opt for it. We say this because, presently, there are no printed sources available here which students can refer to.

Until that time, we will continue distribution of the book.

Chalk One Up For Eve

To Bill Ballou:

Hold on a minute before you, "chalk another one up for Adam." You predicted in Thursday's Collegian that Bobby Riggs would outsmart, outfiness and outpsyche Billie Jean King in their much publicized tennis match. You saw a sure victory for Riggs. In fact, you gave no consideration to the possibility that Billie Jean might win the match.

Well, Mr. Ballou, you were wrong. Not only did Billie Jean beat the fast-talking Riggs, but she wallopped him in the first three sets. The fact that your presumptious prediction was wrong does not offend me. Nor am I offended by your capricious statement that women have no business competing with men (For that matter, men really have no business competing with men, but that's another letter.) What does seem basically tasteless in all this is your refusal to accept and admit your error. In Friday's Collegian you take it upon yourself to suggest that Riggs deliberately threw the match. Excuse me if I remark that that sounds like tiresome sour grapes to me. Billie Jean played a remarkable game of tennis and Riggs was clearly no match for her.

I think we both agree that the significance of the game in terms of one sex's superiority over another is nil. The match does not prove anything about the comparative talent and skill of men and women on the courts. We know that the match was set up to raise strong emotions about this issue, but its over now and nothing has been demonstrated but that one woman could beat one man in a fair match. Let's agree on that, though and try to keep from dragging out issues that obscure our view of a well-played and totally enjoyable exhibition.

Marian M. Adams

Nyah, Nyah!

Yours in gentle remonstrance,
Bill Halainen

The Whole Damn Zoo

To The Editor:

The Viet Nam Conflict has now taken a back seat to more sensational Watergate Saga but by no means is it over. Before the current tenant of 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue can boast to have achieved a "Peace with Honor" in Southeast Asia he must first grant an unconditional amnesty to those who opposed the illegal and immoral waging of war in Southeast Asia. The only hope for a shred of honor to be included in the "Peace" that Mr. Nixon and Mr. Kissinger claimed to have achieved will come only when amnesty has been granted to:

1.) Men within the military who have unsuccessfully filed for C.C.

2.) Men who refused military duty because of their objection to the war on the military.

3.) Men charged with AWOL or as deserters who acted because of their objection to the war or the military.

4.) When the criminal records of those civilian resisters who were arrested for their civil disobedience or their destroying of draft files are expunged.

The Viet Nam Conflict is a nightmare that will haunt this nation, Southeast Asia, and the rest of the world for years to come. It remains a fact that the leaders of this country erred when making such a military committment to "stop the spread of Communism" in Southeast Asia, but this is no reason to force the young men who refused induction into the military and fled the country, to avoid prosecution, to remain in eternal exile.

The only crime they are guilty of is the crime of refusing to kill or help to kill. Is this crime as an atrocious crime against our society as Mr. Nixon would have us believe. . .lest we forget Watergate, ITT, the use of federal moneys to increase the value of personal property, or the fact that Mr. Nixon granted a presidential pardon to such an outstanding citizen as Jimmy Hoffa. The only thing that Mr. Nixon's vindictiveness and his desire to punish anyone who opposes him.

The following is a quote of Vice President Agnew. It shows the double standard and vindictive policies of the current administration, ". . .as for these deserters, malcontents, radicals, incendiaries, the civil and the uncivil diobedients among our youth, SDS, PLP, Wetherman I and Wetherman II, the revolutionary action movement, the Black United Front, Yippies, Hippies, Yahoos, Black Panthers, Lions and Tigers alike - I would swap the whole damn zoo for a single platoon of the kind of young Americans I saw in Vietnam."

Nixon, Agnew, Haldeman, Erlichman, Mitchell, Stans, Dean, Segretti, Hunt, Liddy, Magruder, Colson. Kalmback, and many others. . .I would swap the whole damn zoo for a single one of these young men who believed it immoral to kill or to help kill in an illegal war waged by the leaders of this nation.

"We need unity, we need peace, we need our young men, let's welcome them home."

Just Plain Crude

To The Editor:

Dammit, I'm pissed. I don't know who's responsible for that tragic attempt at a clever ad on page seventeen of today's Collegian, but she or he had better pray I don't run into them, because I've been known to get violent in instances such as this.

I'm talking about that "cute" little crack "MDC Classifieds Could Sell Your Mother (And Your Sister Too If She's A Virgin)" "It is precisely this attitude of woman as commodity that the feminist movement is trying to combat. Slavery was outlawed about a hundred years ago, but women even today must put up with an insidious form of slavery, the cult of woman as object -- something to be bought, bribed, conquered, anything but dealt with as a fellow human being. With ads like this, you're putting yourself in a class with Playboy. And you haven't even got Hefner's flair for it. You're just plain crude. Think about what you're saying--would you place an ad jokingly offering to sell the residents of the Black Corridor? Would you like to have a price put on your body commensurate with the fact that there's a thin membrane in your vagina that has never been broken?

I pray to the Goddess that you come to your senses. Because if you don't, there's no place for you in a truly human society. And that's what we're trying to build. A place not for men and women, but for people.

Black Poetess To Speak

AMHERST, Mass.- Professor Sonia Sanchez, nationally and internationally known to millions as Sister Sonia Sanchez the Black woman poetess, editor and playwright, will speak on "China: A Woman's View" at 8 p.m. Friday Sept. 28 in the Converse Assembly Room at Amherst College. The lecture is open to the public without charge.

Sister Sanchez, presently an associate professor of Black Studies at Amherst College, has spent much of the last four years reading her poetry and lecturing widely in over 200 colleges in the United States and the Carribbean on the subject of the Black woman in America, the role of Black literature in the history of the Black man and the coming of age of Black Studies. In April, 1973 she made a trip to the People's Republic of China.

One of the first Black woman playwrights widely recognized, Sister Sanchez's play Sister Sonji gained international acclaim and was performed by the Joseph Papp Shakespeare Theatre in New York. Her many articles and writings have appeared in several national magazines and reviews, and she is currently editor-at-large for Journal of Black Poetry and Black Theatre. She has also appeared on various radio and television programs and recently released her first record of poetry.

Kennedy Asks To End Vietnam Refugee Funding

WASHINGTON, (AP)-Sen Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., called on the administration yesterday to end all U.S. funding of forced refugee resettlement programs in South Vietnam.

"Recent reports from the field suggest that refugees are still being moved involuntarily as pawns for political and military purposes and that U.S. refugee relief funds are supporting these forced relocations," he said in a stetement.

"We should be out of the business of pacification in South Vietnam, under any label," said Kennedy, chairman of the Senate refugee subcommittee.

Kennedy's statement was made in commenting on a reply he received July 31 from John A. Hannah, administrator of the Agency for International Development A.I.D., to his inquiries about the refugee program.

""Contrary to previous testimony before the subcommittee," Kennedy said, "A.I.D. now admits that pre-1972 refugee resettlements were often carried out without the consent of the people."

"This is a shocking admission after years of official denials over reports of forced relocations," Kennedy said.

He added that "even now, according to the A.I.D. report, the U.S. mission in Saigon can give no assurance that local South Vietnamese authorities will not in the future forcibly resettle refugees."

Room-To- Move

Workshop To Start

As part of its continuing outreach program, Room-to-Move is again offering a series of Bio-energetic workshops led by Gene Silver. Ms. Silver, who has been trained by Dr. Alexander Lowen and Dr. George Greenberg of the institute of Bio-energetic Analysis in New York, has extensive experience as a leader of groups and as an individual therapist. The groups, which will meet weekly throughout the semester, are limited to twelve students each.

In them, Ms. Silver hopes to 1) help the individual gain more contact with his or her body, muscular tensions, feelings and, 2) help him or her to gain means of dealing with negative energy and feelings. Emphasis will also be placed upon the development of positive self-awareness and acceptance.

Each interested applicant must have a personal interview. These interviews will take place tomorrow from 12:15-2:15 p.m. and Wednesday, Sept. 26 from 11 a.m.-2:00 p.m. at the Room-to-Move office. If you are interested but are unable to apply at those times, call 545-0400 to leave your name and number.

Domestic Heating Oil Shortage Foreseen

FAIRLEE, Vt. (AP)-Domestic refineries will not be able to meet the rise in demand for home heating oil this winter, says an oil company executive.

E.F. Loveland, a vice president of Shell Oil Co., says the nation will have to rely on significantly higher imports to get through the winter.

Loveland told a meeting of the New England Press Association Saturday that "Shell estimates that the U.S. must import more than 650 million barrels of distillate and residual fuel oil to meet 1973-74 winter demands."

He said this is a substantial increase from last year and in light of the world market he wonders if it will be possible.

He said the problem is compounded by production limits imposed by Middle Eastern oil countries and competition for fuel from Europe.

New England could be in for particular trouble this winter, he said.

"The Northeast consumes 40 per cent of the petroleum used in the United States and has only about 10 per cent of the refining capacity," he said.

"That means long supply lines and in the time of product tightness or shortage, special problems regarding the obtaining, transporting and storage of fuel may arise."

He said oil companies did not contrive the shortages.

Contract Dispute Stops Busses

WORCESTER, Mass.(AP)-The Worcester Bus Co. shut down service at midnight Saturday in a contract dispute with union employes.

The employes, who had been working without a contract since July 1, voted 132-3 Friday to reject the latest offer from the company. A union official said they objected to a company proposal to eliminate cost-of-living increases from the new contract.

William L. Fox, president of the bus company, said the company offered a two year contract, retroactive to July 1, calling for wage increases totaling 64 cents an hour and for improved accident and health benefits.

"We have made our final offer," Fox said. "I haven't anything more that I can say."

The financially-troubled company said this summer it would close Aug. 28 because of money problems. It remained operating, however, waiting for pending state legislation to provide it a total $600,000 subsidy.

The state would provide $300,000 of the subsidy.

Seminary "Trial Year" Fellowships Announced

A student fellowship program to finance a "trial year" of theological seminary has been announced by the Fund for Theological Education.

Full-cost fellowships are available to persons who have not already decided on the Protestant ministry as a career, but who would be interested in attending seminary for a year.

An information meeting and dinner, sponsored by the Fund for Theological Education, has been scheduled for Thursday, October 11 for students in the five college area.

Interested students may obtain further infomation, and make reservations for the dinner, by contacting either the Classics Department Office in Herter Hall, 545-0512, or the United Christian Foundation, 319 Hampshire House, 545-2789 or 545-2661. Dinner reservations are due by October 1.

About 60 fellowships are awarded annually. Grades are only one factor in awarding fellowships.

Pell Criticizes Nixon Veto

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)-Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., criticised President Nixon Sunday for his veto of a bill which contained a Pell amendment to make small businesses hurt by the closings of military facilities in Rhode Island eligible for Small Business Administration disaster assistance.

Pell said in a statement telephoned from his Washington office that the veto is a damaging blow to small businessmen in the nation, and would have a "particularly harsh and cruel impact on small businessmen in our state of Rhode Island."

Pell said his amendment, adopted 69-11 in the Senate "would have given these small businessmen the benefit of SBA loans at reasonable rates to help them in the difficult adjustment required by the department of Naval activities from Rhode Island."

Pell said Rhode Island has suffered a double wrong.

"First we are the victims of outrageous and wrong decision by the administration to move vital and viable naval installations from our state," he said.

Central Counseling Center To Open

The Central Area Counseling Center, located in Gorman House, is about to open for its second year, with many programs, workshops, seminars and individual counseling sessions offered to the residents of Central Area and the campus in general. Outreach facilities (services offered by the Center) to area dormitories will be available in the form of team building, specialized counseling in the areas of: career counseling, feminist counseling, Third World counseling and life planning, communication and listening skills, organization development and whatever needs are surveyed as priorities of the area.

Staffing will be complete in the next two weeks and opening date is scheduled for October 9th. The Center supervisor, Ms. Parny Hagerman, is looking for interested undergraduates and graduate students with an awareness of counseling skills and a background in above mentioned areas.

A Graduate Assistantship and tuition waiver is being offered to a person who will coordinate outreach programs to the dormitories in the above areas and also be the counseling component for the Freshman Year Global Survival Program. This program has its students primarily in Central Area and has many concerns-problems that arise unique to the program and its students. Anyone interested in such as assistantship and has skills in these areas, submit a resume to Central Area offices located in Hills North (1st floor). All hiring will be done in accordance with Affirmative Action guidelines. Application deadline for this is Thurs., Sept. 27th. October 9th, Opening Day, Central Area Counseling Center-bring your concerns and-or just conversation.

For additional information or questions call Parny at 546-4544. All inquiries are appreciated.

Coming Tomorrow Night

Jill Johnston, Village Voice columnist and author of "Marmalade Me" and "Lesbian Nation", will speak on lesbianism Tuesday night at 8 in the Student Union Ballroom.

"Until all women are lesbians," says Jill Johnston, "there will be no true political revolution. No feminist per se has advanced a solution outside of accommodation to the man."

Ms. Johnston divides her time between New York City and Massachusetts. "Marmalade Me" is a collection of her essays while "Lesbian Nation" is an account of her evolving political consciousness and growth as a committed activist.

Russians Attempt Mars Landing

MOSCOW (AP)-The Soviet Union, in a rare departure from previous policy, revealed Sunday that one of its four unmanned space probes hurtling towards Mars would attempt a soft landing on the planet.

The disclosure came in a Pravda interview with Roald Sagdeyev, 41, the new chief of the Soviet space research institute. The interview marked the first time that Sagdeyev, a nuclear physicist, had been identified as the new head of the agency.

The institute is the only Russian scientific organization devoted to space that is pubicly discussed in the press. Other organs and groups in the Russian space program are hidden from the public eye.

The national Academy of Sciences announced last month that Sagdeyev's predecessor, Georgi Petrov, had taken voluntary retirement. He was 61.

In the past the Russians have not announced specific space mission goals in advance so that failures, should they occur, do not have to be explained.

It was believed the authorities had decided to break with the past in an effort to demonstrate Soviet willingness to cooperate with the United States in view of the planned joint Soviet-American space flight planned for 1975.

Pravda's interview, a common device used here to announce top level appointments, even admitted the probes launched last July and August had developed some problems en route to Mars.

"One should not think that the path to Mars is absolutely smooth," Sagdeyev said.

Noting "cases of deviation in the vehicles' systems," Sagdeyev said, "For example, now the ground scientists are taking measures to correct the telemetric system in one of th probes."

The space vehicles Mars 4 and Mars 5, launched four days apart in July, were due to reach the planet next February. Mars 6 and Mars 7, launched Aug. 5 and Aug. 9 are expected to arrive in March.

The aim of the space experiment is to "comprehensively explore Mars from the flight path, from the orbit of an artificial satellite of Mars and directly on the planet," Sagdeyev said.

The United States has not planned a soft landing on Mars until 1975-6 when two Viking spacecraft will attempt to determine if Mars can support life.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on completion, getting to heart of matters, facing basic tasks, issues. Health and employment are spotlighted. Nothing now is halfway. It is all or nothing and Libra persons are in picture. Be frank, direct.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Deal with young persons. Be willing to change with the times. Look ahead, not backward. Fresh opportunity for happiness is upcoming. Have enough self-esteem to take advantage of second chance. Leo, Aquarius may be involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Home, parental authority--these areas are likely to be featured. You cannot skip responsibility. Finish what you start--be frank, forthright. The truth now can set you free--in literal sense. Message will become increasingly clear.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may be on the move, concerned with short trips, calls, messages--and relatives. Be versatile and maintain sense of humor. You will be active but don't spread efforts too thin. Sagittarius, Gemini Persons could figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Protect your own interests. Promises from others will not, in themselves, suffice. Check fine print--read between the lines. Be thorough and you will save yourself time, money. Collect and pay. Settle accounts. Clean money slate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lunar cycle is such that you can successfully initiate project. Highlight original approach. Stress independence of thought, action. Leo can aid. Perceive trends. Act on "inner feelings." Shake off lethargy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct 22): You may come face-to-face with what has been a dilemma. Key now is to realize that what you fear is nebulous. You are dealing with "paper tiger," a shadow. Family member can be ally. Know it and make peace at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some of your desires are reviewed--and some will be fulfilled. Pisces, Virgo individuals could play important roles. Be selective. Romance is in picture. Emotions tend to dominate. Avoid self-deception. Look behind the scenes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This could be a power day. You get things accomplished. You also receive benefits from past efforts. Professional associates pay compliments. Prestige rises. You should cooperate in civic project. Special recognition comes your way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Plan for future project. Be in contact with those who have ability to promote and publicize. Give more thought to distribution. Long-distance message could prove of importance. Don't neglect messages, requests or reservations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Insist on accounting. Review financial statement. One who handles money for you may have ideas opposite your own. Know it and attend to partnership or joint projects. Leo plays key role. Be creative. Imprint your style.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent on partnership, marriage. Improve image. Give attention to advertising, public relations. Gather information for future use. Let others show their hands. Play waiting game. Regard opposition as healthy challenge.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you appreciate the arts--and good food, more so than does the average individual. In October, you could put finishing touches on important project. You attract to you many born under Taurus and Libra. You are basically fair, diplomatic and have compelling voice. Check tendency toward "sweet tooth." You will fight for justice. You are concerned with law and fair play.

The NFL; Chapter Two...

Chiefs 10-7

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)-Old pros Len Dawson and Otis Taylor combined for a couple of long passes, setting up a second period touchdown and field goal, and the Kansas City Chiefs held on against the error-plagued New England Patriots Sunday for a 10-7 National Football League victory.

Dawson, a 17-year veteran, connected with Taylor on a 41-yard pass in paving the way for a short touchdown plunge by Willie Ellison on the first play of the second quarter.

Then, with the Chiefs with their backs to the goal after recovering a New England fumble at the four, Dawson hit Taylor with a 46-yard gainer. When the drive stalled, Jan Stenerud booted a 33-yard field goal.

Jets 34-10

BALTIMORE (AP)-The New York Jets, playing most of the way without injured Joe Namath, scored 31 points following six second-half interceptions and trounced Baltimore 34-10 in a National Football League game Sunday.

Raiders 12-7

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP)-George Blanda, playing his 300th regular season professional football game, kicked four field goals for Oakland Sunday and the Raiders beat Miami 12-7 to stop the champions Dolphins, whose streak matched a National Football League record, were shut out until 1:07 remained in the game and Bob Griese threw a 27-yard touchdown pass to tight end Jim Mandich.

Cardinals 34-27

ST. LOUIS (AP)-Donny Anderson scored three touchdowns and Don Shy sprinted 97 yards with a kickoff return as the St. Louis Cardinals upset the Washington Redskins 34-27 in the National Football League Sunday.

The Cardinals, advancing their record to 2-0, burst from a 10-7 deficit early in the second half behind the passing of Jim Hart and Shy's return.

Practice Sessions Are Tough, But Rewarding

By SCOTT HAYES

The Umass Cross Country team, Yankee Conference champions for the past three years, has become accustomed to winning as a result of hard work in practice sessions.

Coach Ken O' Brien said that he tries to vary the workouts. The teams runs from seventy to eighty-five miles during an average week. Some weeks the mileage goes over a hundred miles and sometimes dips to thirty or forty miles, depending on how much rest the runners have had.

The UMass mentor stated that most runners are in good shape and those who want to compete the hardest in a race make the difference between an excellent and average runner.

Many of the varsity runners played different sports at one time in high school or went out for cross country because they were too small to play football. This year's co-captain, Randy Thomas, played three sports in high school. He went out for cross country to get in shape for basketball and realized that he was better in cross country than any other sport. By his senior year, Randy decided to devote everything to running. Thomas said that some of the motivation in running comes from "trying to improve your times and seeing how far you can push your body, finding out how much it can give." The record holder of the UMass Cross Country Course, Thomas believes that "running is 90 per cent mental because you're only as good as you think you are."

When Bill Gillin, co-captain along with Thomas, was asked what keeps him motivated, he replied: "I suppose it would be the success you get from the sport, that you realize that in order to be any kind of a good college runner and help your team, you have to go out and do the workouts."

Gillin also feels that mental attitude plays a big role in running. "I would say that you could do a lot of physical hard work and training, but if you don't have any kind of mental attitude and want to do good and want to compete hard, that you won't have any success in running as far as yourself or helping the team. I think mental attitude is about 75 per cent of your running and you have to have the right frame of mind to run."

Enjoyment also plays a part in running, as Gillin explains: "If I didn't enjoy running I wouldn't run. I don't run just for the glory of it because there isn't enough glory in running. There's a personal satisfaction in running, but there's no outside satisfaction from fans or people coming to watch the meets. It's just your teammates and yourself."

Bill Gillin (l.) and Randy Thomas are the UMass Cross Country team's co-captains

Sophomore Tom Maguire, coming off a sensational freshmen year, declared that motivation is caused by a desire for self-improvement. He added, "If you go out there and run the miles day in and day out, you will improve your race times. It's a lot of self-satisfaction, just like playing football or anything else, just being able to do something you're good at."

Senior Paul Segersten, a physical education major, became interested in running through some of his friends. Segersten, who enjoys any kind of activity, feels that concentration on running is important. Paul has his own concept about running "to have fun". Being able to compete and still have fun is part of what cross country is all about.

Another senior, Doug O'Connell, has been running since grammar school. He stated that the key to running is the right attitude. "You can't run well without the right attitude." O'Connell explained that running is enjoyment and "knowing that you can put your body through strain and become stronger for it".

Chris Chambers, a recreation major from Newington, Connecticut, started running to keep in shape for baseball. He was a pitcher and did some running, and when a coach saw the ability Chris had, he suggested cross country.

The team goal this year is to win the New England championships and to finish in the top five in the IC4A's. With all the hard work that goes into a season and the desire that exists, the team should achieve their goal.

Women's Tennis Team Opens Wed. vs. Smith

By MDC STAFF

The UMass Women's Tennis team will start its season this Wednesday by coming up against a usually strong Smith College team, at the Boyden courts at 4:00 P.M.

Coach Sally Ogilvie is looking forward to a good year, expecting fifteen players to start the year, ten returning from last year and five promising newcomers. From these fifteen it is hoped that two singles players and one doubles team will go to the New England Tournament at Yale University in mid-October.

Although a line-up has not been set as yet for the first matches on the schedule, six singles matches and three doubles matches will be played with each school.

The women will meet with seven schools this fall as opposed to last year's five teams, Williams College and Central Conn. State being added this year. Although Ms. Ogilvie was not doing any predicting and there are several steady and strong tennis players on the team, the results of daily practices remain to be seen.

Returning from last year's team are: Karen Wesley, Caron Tsapatsaris, Muffy Trafton, Ronnie Sanders, Beth Perkins, Carol Mottau, Ann Foley, Gaylen Goode, and Diane Green. Three of the newcomers will be Donna Braca, Donna Siscavage, and Donna Volpe.

I-M's Finally Levelling Off

By BOB KAGAN

Unless you've been wandering aimlessly lost around and about the new library for the past week (and that's entirely possible to do) you are probably well aware that the UMass intramural program is well well under way.

In recent years, just as the student population of this campus has grown disproportionately, so too has the intramural program undergone rapid and extensive expansion. It appears now however, to be in a levelling off stage, according to Peter Graham of the intramual office.

"We have a few less teams participating in both men's and women's football this year," said Mr. Graham, "but in turn, we received an excellent response for the track meet to be held this week. Roughly speaking, our program involves sixty-six percent of the student population. Naturally we would like one-hundred percent participation, but we're very pleased with the way things are going."

Touch football, both men's and women's (it is no longer called powder puff football), is by comparison the most popular of the fall intramural sports. The reasons are obvious. Football is a relatively exciting team sport, and this brand has the ability to unify dorm residents.

There are however, other intramural activities which appeal to a smaller segment of the students, largely because they stress more individual talent, but which are nevertheless just as important to those people as football is to others.

Both tennis and badminton competition begin this week. Cross-country running will take place in October.

Lastly, the first intramural Track Meet will be held on both Monday, September 24 (men's quarterfinals) and Wednesday, September 26 (men's and women's finals). The participants are already fixed but spectators are very welcome. The meet will occur at Derby Track (located just beyond Lorden Baseball Field). Competition will begin at three-thirty on the designated days.

Everything You've Always Wanted To Know About The UMass Field Hockey Team But Never Bothered To Ask

By BETH O'BRIEN

To the majority of students on campus, the words "Womens' field hockey" probably conjure up visions of women wildly wielding clubs in uncontrollable frenzy: a potentially fatal, so-called sport; a parody of those graceful men on ice. For the most part, this is just not true.

Field hockey like any other sport, can get rough. It is a game ruled, governed and played by women; a truly "feminine" sport. Field hockey at UMass means long hours of practice, control, a high level of skill, and a great game to enjoy.

For the considerable number of people who know nothing about the game, field hockey is almost identical to soccer, and vaguely similar to ice hockey. It features some of the same strategies popular in both hockey and soccer, as well as those unique to it alone.

Field hockey players line up on the field as in soccer, but use sticks instead of bodies to manipulate the considerably smaller and harder ball into the net. Players may use only one side of the stick, and must keep it below shoulder level at all times. Screening out or blocking the ball with the body, as well as touching the ball are illegal. The game is divided into two twenty minute halves, with virtually no other stops in play. The team plays under the Northeast College Field Hockey Association with area teams. A post-seasonal tournament is held from which members of the New England team are chosen.

On Thursday, Sept. 27th, the field hockey team, coached by Jane Farr, will open their fall season against Keene State on their own fields behind the North Physical Education building at 4:00 pm.

After last season's fine 8-3-1 showing, Coach Farr, now in her 5th season with the team, is optomistic about their chances this year, projecting a 6-2 record. As in previous years, the teams to beat will be Springfield, Southern Conn. and Bridgewater.

When asked how this year's team compares to last year's squad, coach Farr said, "We have a higher skill level and overall better players now. I have girls that are ready to play varsity that I just don't have toom for. This means our J.V. will also be strong."

Coach Farr feels the main weakness of the team will lie in the inexperience of defense, while its strength is up front on the forward line. Looking at this year's roster, it is easy to see why.

Senior Wendy Alpaugh leads the offense and provides the scoring punch at left inner for the second year in a row. She is probably UMass's best player, and has twice been chosen for the All-New England team while leading her team in scoring for the past two years. Next to Wendy, at left wing will be sophmore Linda Lambdin, the J.V.'s high scorer last year.

The line will be centered by sophmore Kathy O' Neil, and next to her, Elaine Senosky at right inner, both scoring whizzies from last year's J.V. squad. Joanne Smith rounds out the forward line with the ability to play almost any position.

Senior Nancy Barr, who Coach Farr calls her "hardest working player", anchors the defense for the third year in the nets. Veterans of three years, Kathe Germann will play at right half back, and junior Lori Nazar will be backing her up in the fullback spot. Karen Johnson and Kate Stanne are good defensive prospects for the left side.

In respect to the upcoming opponents, Coach Farr feels "if we beat them last year we can beat them again. They are very aggressive, but not highly skilled."

Discover another exciting sport that UMass has to offer. Come on down (or up) to the North Physical Education Building fields (I can't say WOPE anymore) on thursday afternoon and see two fine teams tangle. It will be a different experience.

Strength Is In Numbers As Booters Kick Off Season

By STEVE DeCOSTA

The soccer boom is upon us. Starting with one of the largest turnouts in UMass soccer history, new head coach Al Rufe has been faced with the difficult and often unpleasant task of paring the squad from its original 134 to a more workable number.

Rufe commented on the situation, saying "the competition has been keen. In many cases it's a day-to-day affair."

One position that is set is goaltender. Carl Vercollone, last year's starter who gave up slightly over one goal per game, is returning. Carl is coming off a shoulder injury, a separation which he suffered this summer, but, according to Rufe, "has started to come around and is rapidly approaching last year's form."

Backing up Vercollone will be another veteran, Paul Pelloquin, who, according to the coach, "should see quite a bit of action."

Co-captain Curt Syer will spearhead the Minuteman defense at fullback. Other starters at that position should include Gary McKenna, Bob Merrill, and Dan Ouellette, who is the younger brother of last year's MVP and present JV coach Dave Ouellette. Back-up strenth should come in the form of Dean Longu, who will be shifting to defense after spending last season at attack.

Halfback is an important position to any soccer team. It is the midfielders who handle the transitions from defense to offense and spearhead the attack. The Minutemen have an abundance of good halfbacks, headed by co-captain Mark Tyma. Other starters should be returnees Jim Vollinger and Mike Nugent but they could be hard-pressed by Bill MacDonald.

The keenest competition for a strating berth is at attack. Seven or eight different players are vying in what Rufe calls a "day-to-day thing" for the three starting positions.

One of the starting slots will almost surely go to last year's leading scorer, Tom Coburn. Now a junior, Coburn tallied 11 goals last season to lead the Minutemen.

The other two spots are up for grabs, with as many as seven players seeking the nod. Names to watch for are Ken Banda, Charlie Palano, and Brian McKenney.

Rufe plans to stay with the basic UMass 3-3-4 attack (3 front liners, 3 halfbacks, 4 fullbacks) although he may occasionally switch to a 4-2-4, depending on the opponent or game situation.

The Minutemen have looked good in recent scrimmages, defeating Amherst 4-0 and AIC 7-1. Although the games will not count in the official standings Rufe was pleased by his teams' performances, saying "it showed how good we could look in a game situation.

Soccer is one sport in which UMass is not the defending Yankee Conference champion. URI took conference honors as the Minutemen finished fifth. Rufe cited a conference championship as his "immediate goal". More than that, the team would like to be recognized throughout the region and gain a spot in the New England playoffs.

Rufe thinks his team has the horses to realize both these goals. He says he has "a good club with a lot of depth," but he is also wary of his YanCon foes. As Rufe commented, "You know," as the old cliche goes, "any team can beat any other team on a given day." That may be stretching things a little, but there's no sense taking chances.

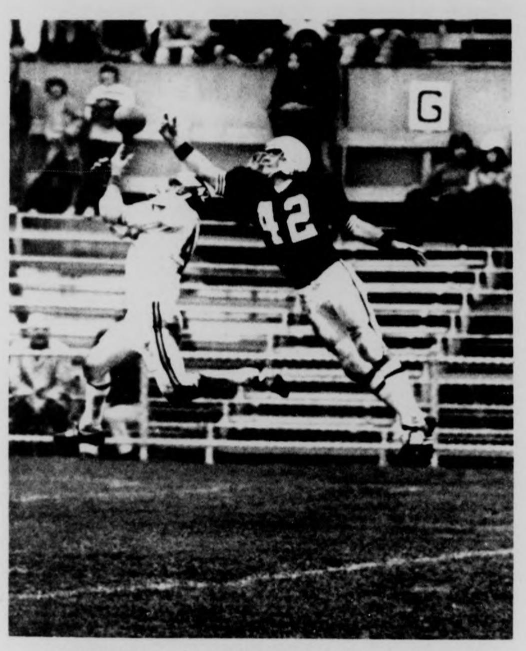
UMass Stops Polar Bears Cold



TIM BERRA (42) REACHES IN VAIN — Berra just misses collecting Fred Kelliher pass late in the third quarter.

By BILL BALLOU

UMass football fans finally got to see four quarters of football Saturday, and the end result, a 20-0 win over Maine, must have been nice but probably the only thing that kep the 9,000 or so frostbite freaks in attendance awake was fear of falling asleep and never waking up.

It was a typical UMass-Maine game of recent vintage; a low-scoring bore. The Black Bears came close to the end zone on two occasions, once in the second quarter when a fumble at the UMass nine stopped things and then in the third quarter when they had first and goal from the UMass seven and could get no further than the three.

It was the fourth consecutive shutout for UMass over Maine and with the whitewash the Black Bears now haven't scored a touchdown in the series since 1965.

For Umass the big story was the outstanding performance of the defense, which had given up 48 points in the first two games.

It contained Maine well, being threatened only twice, and was particularly stingy against the pass. Maine quarterbacks Rick Prior and Bob Munzing were able to complete just four of 22 passes for only 30 yards and had three intercepted. Prior, who played most of the game, was under constant pressure from a fierce UMass pass rush that forced him to throw while retreating almost every time he dropped back.

However the Minutemen couldn't contain freshman running back Mark DeGregorio, a Winthrop native, who played human bowling ball and ran under and through UMass tacklers for 112 yards in 13 carries.

SPORTS

The Minuteman offense was, for the third week in a row, shades of Sky King, as all three touchdowsn came on passes.

The first, on the first play of the second quarter, was a 20 yard toss from Peil Pennington to Bill Wolfe, capping an 80 yard drive.

The second was an eight-yarder from Fred Kelliher to Tim Berra halfway through the third period, and the third a 42-yard bomb from Kelliher to Berra near the beginning of the fourth quarter.

Pennington, who had to leave the game near the end of the first half with a leg injury, was 9-17 for 129 yards while he was in there.

Kelliher, rapidly becoming a favorite with fans, was 7-15 for 103 yards in another excellent relief performance.

Flanker Tim Berra had another outstanding game with nine receptions and two touchdowns. Berra now has 24 receptions on the season and a good shot at the record of 45 set last year by Steve Schubert. He also has scored six touchdowns and 38 points, but the school record in that department, 127, is still a hefty distance away.

The Minuteman running game looked much healthier, statiscally anyway, than in the past two Saturdays. It picked up 106 net yards, although it took 49 carries to do it.

Top man was sophomore Bernie Street, seeing his first varsity action, who picked up 43 yards in 17 carries. Bob Wolfe, who was injured early in the gme, had 24 yards in 11 carries.

Still, the ground game was sluggish and forced quarterbacks Kelliher and Pennington to employ the pass more often than is healthy.

INCIDENTALLY: Sophomore Tom Rohan saw his first varsity action taking over at quarterback late in the game, but he didn't throw a pass. . .UMass has now scored only one touchdown rushing in three games, that one a one yard bootleg by Pennington against Holy Cross. . .The Marching Band was again excellent and is keeping a lot of people in their seats at helftime. . .Next week's opponent, Harvard, hasn't opened their season yet.

Aaron Closes; Needs Just 2

HOUSTON (AP) - "It's been a tiresome thing, constantly talking about Babe Ruth," said Hank Aaron, the 39-year-old Atlanta Braves star who needs only two home runs to tie the immortal Ruth's all-time record of 714.

"I just want to hurry up and get it over with," said Aaron, who Saturday night smashed his 712th homer, a three-run, sixth-inning blast off left-hander Dave Roberts that gave the Braves a 4-2 victory over Houston.

Mets And Bucs In Command

By DAVE EIBEL

Heading into the final week of the baseball season, the New York Mets and Pittsburgh Pirates seem to be headed to a last-minute showdown for the National League East divisional crown.

The Mets won their sixth in a row and twentieth in their last twenty-seven, by handing the St. Louis Cardinals a five to two setback in New York, behind the hitting of Wayne Garret, and sterling relief performances by Harry Parker and Tug McGraw. The Pirates handed the Montreal Expos two defeats by scores of 6-3 and 7-4, virtually eliminating the Expos from pennant contention. The first game of the doubleheader, Willie Stargell's three-run Pittsburgh uprising in three-run seventh inning homer, his forty-second, gave the Pirates the win, while in the nightcap, Richie Zisk keyed a six-run Pittsburgh uprising in the fifth inning, with his first career grand slam homer.

This has been a week of streaks in baseball's weakest division. The Mets, after losing to Pittsburgh 10-2 Monday night, took four in a row from the Pirates, and two in succession from St. Louis. The Pirates had their own four game losing skein ended by their sweep of the Expos yesterday. The Montrealers, only a half-game out on Monday, lost three in a row to the Chicago Cubs and two to the Pirates afte splitting a doubleheader with St. Louis, Monday night at Jarry Park in Montreal. The Expos, now three and one-half games behind the division-leading Mets, are playing the type of baseball the Mets once-upon-a-time made famous, leaving runners on base by the dozen, and blowing leads in important games. In the six games they have lost in a row, the Mauchmen led in four of them, before their natural instincts got the better of them. And with their recent demise, goes the dream of every Canadian for the first pennant on foreign soil.

The final week of the season has Pittsburgh playing Montreal in another doubleheader Monday night, facing the Phillies in a three-game set during the week, and closing the season at home with three more games with the Expos. The Mets play Montreal in New York, Tuesday and Wednesday, then head for Chicago for a four-game season-ending series.

The standings have the Mets in first, with the Pirates a half-game out in second place but one game ahead in the all-important loss-column. The Cardinals are in third place three games off the pace, a half-game ahead of Montreal and the Chicago Cubs. The Phillies, now are ten games off the pace, and mathematically out of it.

Bill Blew It

When I was just a freshman, bright and innocent and just out of Northbridge High, I was standing naked outside a shower stall on my floor in Kennedy. A girl walked in, took one look, and coughed. I said "Hi."

Last Thursday I once again exposed my manhood, only this time on the back page of the Collegian. And this time it's not one girl on the third floor of Kennedy coughing, but 8,000 female UMies laughing. I am horrored, and almost speechless.

If you're expecting an apology, stop reading. Actually I did you Billie Jean fans a favor by publicly predicting her defeat. Last time I made a prediction in the Collegian it was that Eddie Kasko would be imminently fired. That was May of 1971. The time before that I predicted the Bruins wouldn't win the Stanley Cup. They took it easily.

But back to Bobby and Billie.

I guess my prediction could be classified as a partial mistake. After all I did say it would be straight sets.

And I guess I'll have to admit that Billie Jean King is a better tennis player than Bobby Riggs. There will be no rematch, because it would be like rematching Roosevelt and Landon.

But I'm not going to back off on my theory that men are better athletes than women.

The Riggs-King match wasn't qualified by saying that Riggs, after all, was 55. And his age serves as no excuse. I, him, and most of the rest of American manhood thought that Bobby could handle any woman, no matter what. And it would just go to show how much more superior men were when Bobby finished Billie Jean off.

But I do have a well-thought out theory about why men are better athletes than women, and here it is.

Most athletic events, contests, and etc. come down to being basically a test of strength. It's who can throw the farthest, run the fastest, punch the hardest, shoot the fastest or whatever. And though sports like baseball and basketball have various niceties incorporated in them, they still reduce to basics like strength, speed, endurance.

Men are stronger, faster, and more physically durable than women. Sport is a pastime conceived by men for the pleasure of men. It was born long before me or Bobby Riggs. Men are naturally better at it.

Maybe some day some "sports" will evolve in which women can compete on an equal basis with men. But that day is some time off.

What did this whole thing prove, then. Nothing, really. It didn't prove that Bobby Riggs was a male chauvinist pig, because I don't think anybody took him seriously. He was a huckster, and a damn good one. It obviously proves nothing about the comparative talents of men and women, athletically speaking at least.

It did prove to be a great spectacle, and great entertainment. I'm kind of sorry it's over so convincingly, because a rematch wouldn't have been hard to take.

I'd like to thank all those people who wanted to call, and didn't, and I wish I could meet the woman who called my apartment and had my roommate tell me to go suck on my sugar daddy.

If she'll buy I'll be glad to.

Too Many Cars, Too Little Room

By JACKMAN WILSON

A car pulled over to pick me up just as I was beginning to feel frustrated. "Thanks for stopping," I said to the girl who was driving. "Tell me, please, why do you pick up hitch-hikers?"

She glanced at me uneasily as I scribbled furiously in my little notebook. "Well," she said cautiously, "you didn't look particularly dangerous."

"I'm glad to hear that. I was beginning to think the opposite," I said, remembering the innumberable cars, back seats empty, which had passed me by.

Traffic was moving slowly. Policemen stood at every intersection. Mass Avenue was immobilized. A teenage death song from the fifties was on the radio: "It was Saturday night. . .in my daddy's new car. . ." We rolled down Pleasant Street, occasionally having to jockey for position in the mad crush of late afternoon traffic, and eventually arrived in Amherst center.

I thanked the girl, wished her luck, and went to keep my appointment with James Cope, Amherst town planner. I asked him what he considered to be the causes of Amherst's rather serious traffic problem.

"First of all, the town of Amherst was not planned with the automobile in mind," Mr. Cope explained. "Our road system was laid out in horse-and-buggy days, and cannot efficiently accommodate the automobile. Another factor," Mr. Cope continued, "is the rapid growth of the town in recent years."

"UMass has more than doubled its population since 1966," I observed.

"Yes," said Mr. Cope, "and the road system hasn't grown much at all. Also, more people, especially students, own cars these days."

I asked Mr. Cope if any new roads were being built in the Amherst area. He told me of plans for a northeast bypass which will connect routes 116 and 9 by way of the Presidential Apartments. "Of course, building new roads is not the best solution to our traffic problem," Mr. Cope said. "The best solution is to make the automobile unnecessary."

Mr. Cope foresees the decline of the automobile. The rising cost of operating a car, coupled with growing ecological concern, will diminish its role as a primary form of transportation. As town planner, Mr. Cope is trying to prepare Amherst for this eventuality.

We talked of the development of alternative transportation systems.

"In 1976 a network of bicycle paths will be built by the state Department of Public Works in conjunction with the town recreation committee," Mr. Cope said. "A free mass transit system already exists to some extent, and there is talk of expanding this system."

I thanked Mr. Cope, left his office and walked out into the sunshine. With men like him in responsible positions, I thought, there is hope for the preservation of Amherst's quasi-rural environment.

Hunt Denies Blackmail Attempt

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - E. Howard Hunt, the one-time master spy, testified Monday he had brought up "seamy" chores he had performed for the White House in one request for payment of his post-Watergate expenses.

But he denied the reference amounted to blackmail and said he had never asked presidential clemency.

The convicted Watergate conspirator, a member of the White House unit that conducted the burglary of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office, added a new element to an oft-told story in an otherwise colorless resumption of the Senate Watergate hearings.

He said former White House special counsel Charles W. Colson knew in advance about the intelligence-gathering plan that led to the break-in of Democratic party headquarters.

Hunt had sworn earlier that he had no such knowledge about Colson. But he said Monday that his memory was refreshened in closed-door questioning by the committee counsel Samuel Dash.

From that, Hunt said, he recalled a conversation with Colson in January 1972 where Colson "indicated he was aware of the over-all intelligence plan."

That would have been before the Jan. 27 meeting in which G. Gordon Liddy first broached a million-dollar intelligence plan to then Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, Dash pointed out.

Hunt recently asked to withdraw his plea of guilty to the charges stemming from the Watergate break-in, indicating in his motion that he believed Colson, among others, approved the plan.

Dash suggested that the move to withdraw the plea might have influenced Hunt's change of testimony. Hunt said his legal position does not depend on when Colson knew of the intelligence plan.

Testifying in a subdued voice, frequently conferring with his lawyer, Hunt stopped short of saying that Colson knew specifically about the Watergate burglary plan and stood by a previous sworn affidavit that Colson had information "only to the over-all intelligence program."

Colson has denied having fore knowledge of Watergate burglary plan and stood by a previous sworn affidavit that Colson had information "only to the over-all intelligence program."

Colson has denied having fore knowledge of Watergate, but asked to be excused from Senate testimony on grounds of possible self-incrimination.

Hunt said that in March this year, a few days before he came up for sentencing on his guilty plea in the Watergate Trial, he met with Paul O'Brien, an attorney representing President Nixon's re-election committee.

He said he spoke about his legal bills, which then totaled $60,000, and about his concern for the future of his family.

"I put it to Mr. O'Brien that I had engaged. . .in other activities which I believe I described as seamy activities for the White House," Hunt said.

Asked if that was not a threat, Hunt said "No, sir."

He added, however, that soon thereafter he received $75,000 in a sealed envelope, which he put in a safe deposit box.

As the Senate hearings resumed after a seven-week recess, the crowds were still standing room only, but no one had to wait more than a few minutes to get in. The turn-over was rapid as the questioning of Hunt proceeded slowly.

Two of Hunt's children - 19-year-old St. John, and 22-year-old Lisa - were among the spectators. "I think he's doing a great job," Lisa said.

As Hunt testified about his roles in the Watergate and Ellsberg burglaries, President Nixon's lawyers urged a federal court here to reject the committee's effort to obtain the White House Watergate tapes. The brief sounded again the argument that the court lacks jurisdiction to force the President to release the recordings.

Josh Speaks . . . Finally!

By KEVIN KITTREDGE

"Resurrection: Hoax or History?", was the subject of Josh McDowell's speech last night in the Campus Center. Speaking to an audience of 640, McDowell outlined a view of Christianity "based on fact rather than myth."

McDowell puts the resurrection in the courtroom and then subjects it to the rules of evidence. Four points of physical evidence that cannot be denied, said McDowell, are the Roman guard, the 118 pounds of spices used to preserve the body, the stone placed before the crypt and the empty grave.

Bringing Christ to a more personal level McDowell said, "I am a walking example that Jesus Christ is alive today." Talking about his youth McDowell said, "I was frustrated and full of hate." His father was the town drunk and McDowell and his brother would urinate in his bottles to show their hatred.

However, all of this changed on Dec. 19, 1959 at 8:30 in the evening. McDowell says, "I became a Christian." He prayed to Christ and asked him "to change me from the inside out."

The results, says McDowell, were dramatic. He could tell his father that he loved him and saw his father find Christ before his death. He now has "an inner source of joy and not an absence of conflict, but an ability to cope with it."

Amherst Selectmen Subcommittee Releases Proposal

More Public Input Encouraged

By MIKE ALLAIN

The Amherst Board of Selectmen Subcommittee on Procedures last night released details of an upcoming proposal that would make public all communications received or sent by the Board.

In a memorandum from member Nancy Eddy, the subcommittee stated that the policy of the Board of Selectmen is "to encourage public discussion of governmental issues and to provide avenues for the public participation in the decision making process."

The board will vote on the proposal at next Monday's meeting.

The memorandum said the board can assure its accountability to the electorate only when the public understands the reasons for actions taken by the Board.

To promote this, the memorandum states that the secretary to the Board shall provide copies of memoranda, letters, petitions, and prepared motions for distribution to the public at the time of discussion in open meeting.

A "Friday packet" would also be made available to the press and public at Monday noon. This packet would include information pertinent to the evening selectmen's meeting.

Lengthy memoranda and reports concerning "substantive issues" would be made available to the board and the press at least one week prior to scheduled discussion.

This would provide for prior publication of the issues to be discussed and the presentation of available alternatives for action.

Eddy's memorandum also proposes guidelines for classifying material as confidential.

"Communications received or sent by the Board or members of the Board that are presumed...to be of a confidential nature...may be identified as confidential, dated and initialled by any member of the Board."

Documents designated as such must "receive a majority vote at the next Board meeting to be classified Confidential."

These would include personality discussions and matters endangering public safety, which would be sent to executive sessions under the Open Meeting Law.

Request from boards, committees, or individuals that confidential status be given to their memoranda would be honored until the next regular meeting of the Board when it would have to receive a majority vote to be classified as confidential.

The selectmen's secretary would remove from the Friday press packet any communications labeled as confidential, while any member of the Board, who after reading the packet, believes a document to be of a confidential nature, might remove it from the press packet and treat it as confidential material.

The memorandum did not specify whether the Board would have to approve with a majority vote as confidential those documents removed by Board members from the press packet.

Get Out-And Walk

However, Mr. Cope's vision of a community of bicyclists, pedestrians and bus riders lies several years in the future. I arranged to meet with a representative of the Amherst police for information on the traffic situation as it stands today.

The policeman I talked to prefers to remain nameless. He said that he wasn't running for any office and wanted to speak not for himself but for the Amherst police force as a whole.

I was amazed to learn that seventy-five percent of an Amherst policeman's time is spent controlling traffic. Fortunately there have been no cases where congested traffic has interferred with the movement of emergency vehicles. Peak traffic hours are between 7 and 9 in the morning, 11:45 and 1:15 at midday, and from 3:30 to 5:15 in the evening. If you must drive, avoid these hours. The worst traffic is around the Hadley supermarkets. Incidentally, the Amherst police wish to thank UMass students for their high level of cooperation during the current parking crisis. No foolin'!

The Parking Office at UMass expects to have eleven or twelve thousand cars registered to park on campus this year. No exact figure will be available until after the dust settles sometime in October, but it is obvious that UMass students, staff and faculty are responsible for the Los Angelization of Amherst. Any immediate improvement of the traffic situation will have to come from us. There are several things we can do, none of which cost anything or hurt very much.

-Don't drive unless you have to.

-If you have a bicycle, ride it.

-If you have to drive someplace, find some friends who want to go and take them along.

-If you don't have any friends, pick up a hitch-hiker.

-Ride the bus. In most cases it's free.

Amherst is a lousy place to drive a car. The town was not built for cars; they do not belong here. With its concentrated population and small area, Amherst is ready to become a non-automobile community. Of course, I don't own a dinosaur myself, so it's easy for me to tell people to stop using them. However, if I did own a car, I would sell it now, while it's still worth something, for the days of motormania are numbered.

Nixon Lawyers Contend: Court Can't Force Tape Releases

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's lawyers urged a federal court Monday to reject the Senate Watergate committee's effort to obtain the White House Watergate tapes, contending the President "is answerable in only one constitutional proceeding"-an impeachmnt action.

In a 71-page brief filed with U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica, White House attorneys sounded again their argument that the court lacks jurisdiction to force Nixon to release tape recordings of meetings and telephone coversations related to the Watergate scandal.

The Senate committee's suit is separate from one brought by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox. Sirica ruled in the Cox case that Nixon must turn the tapes over to the judge for private inspection-a decision the White House has carried to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

A compromise suggested by the appeals court that was designed to keep the White House-Cox dispute out of court failed last week and the court now is in the process of deciding the question.

In bringing their suit, Senate committee lawyers said the purpose was, as the White House brief noted, "to discover evidence from the President's records, indeed from his own private conversations that might establish presidential complicity in the commission of serious crimes."

R.I. Awarded $2 Million

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — An additional $2 million in federal funds has been awarded by the Labor Department to help Rhode Island offset unemployment caused by Navy cutbacks.

The funds were granted Monday with the promise that more money be available if the state proved it used the funds effectively and demonstrated a need for more.

"In other words, this isn't the end of it," said Michael Stanton, news secretary to Gov. Philip Noel.

Noel's office previously had been awarded $1 million in federal manpower funds from the Labor Department. The state has requested a total of $20.8 million for manpower retraining—$5.6 million of it immediately.

"This is another step forward in the state's effort to recover from the Department of Defense cutbacks in the state," Stanton said. However, we feel much more federal assistance will be required if these recovery efforts are to be successful."

Massachusetts, which previously had been awarded $1 million in manpower funds, also received an additional $2 million Monday. Gov. Francis Sargent said the state eventually will receive, but they were confident the federal government is impressed with the state's response to tackling the impending job problem.

About $25,000 of the original $1 million were spent on the state's three-day job fair at Quonset Point last week, which state officials are hailing as a successful effort to find employment for displaced civilian workers at Navy bases.

John Anderson, coordinator of the Governor's Office of Manpower Affairs, said the final results of the fair have not been computed. However, he said he was sure that at least 100 persons found employment with federal agencies and the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics Corp. in Groton, Conn., expects to hire about half of the 400 persons it interviewed at the fair.

More than 130 firms offered jobs at the fair. "Even the military recruiters who were there scored pretty well, except for the Navy," Anderson said.

A member of the state Department of Employment Security has been assigned to follow up the job fair interview this week and develop on-the-job placement and training contracts with employers, Anderson said. Much of the original $1 million award will be used to subsidize up to 50 per cent of the salary for workders training on the job, Anderson added.

Newspaper Vs. Employees

Court To Decide On Picketing Rights

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - A decision on the Providence Journal Co.'s temporary injunction request against picketing by striking newspaper employes will be issued in Superior Court Tuesday, Judge Christopher Del Sesto said Monday.

Del Sesto said he will hear closing arguments in the morning and then issue his decision in the afternoon session. He said he expects his decision to be a lengthy one.

At Monday's session, the judge asked for and received an apology from Milton Stanzler, lawyer for The Newspaper Guild Local 41, after Stanzler indicated he thought Del Sesto already had made up his mind in the case.

The situation arose when Del Sesto asked Stanzeler if he still wanted to give a closing argument. Stanzler replied that he would, "unless you think it's futile."

Asked for an explanation of his remark, Stanzler said the judge "appeared to have a leaning as the case has gone on."

Del Sesto said he considered the remark "an insult" and "a terrible accusation. As of now, I don't know what my decision will be."

Testimony on the temporary injunction request ended Monday after William Chafee, company treasurer and secretary, presented a number of payroll and advertising reports requested by the Guild.

The Guild also subpeonaed the company's income tax returns, strike insurance documents, and monthly financial statements. However, Del Sesto upheld the company's request to squash these subpeonas.

Chafee said the company has retained the Wackenbut Corp., an emergency security guard service, on a standby basis at various times since last January.

Ruling Expected On Picketing Ban

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)-Judge Christopher Del Sesto was scheduled to rule in Superior Court today on the Providence Journal Co.'s request for a temporary injunction against picketing by its striking newspaper employes.

Del Sesto said Monday he would issue the decision after hearing closing arguments by lawyers for the company and The Newspaper Guild Local 41.

Milton Stanzler, guild attorney, apologized to Del Sesto at Monday's court session, after the judge took exception to his remarks indicating he thought a decision in the case had already been reached.

The incident began when the judge asked Stanzler if he still intended to make a closing argument. The lawyer replied he did, "unless you think it's futile."

Stanzler went on to say he thought Del Sesto "appeared to have a leaning as the case has gone on.

The judge said the statement by the guild lawyer was "an insult" and "a terrible accusation." Del Sesto said he had not made up his mind in the case.

Earlier in the session, the company's treasurer presented a number of payroll and advertising reports subpoenaed by the guild. Other company documents, including income tax returns, strike insurance papers and monthly finance data were not admitted into evidence, as Del Sesto upheld the company's request to quash those subpoenas.

Willian Chafee, Journal treasurer and secretary, said the company has retained an emergency security guard force on a standby basis at various times since last January.

Chafee produced company letters subpoenaed by Stanzler which indicated the Wackenhut Corp. has been hired to supply guards, investigators and photographers.

Some 40 such personnel have been on duty at the newspaper's building, since the strike began, Chafee said. Others were employed by the company last April, when the Guild first voted to authorize a strike, he said. No strike was called then, however.

Stanzler made a motion to continue the case until later this week when company payroll data from last week can be presented as evidence. He said this data should be used to show what actual losses, if any, the company is suffering as a result of the strike.

Del Sesto denied the motionto continue. He noted only the question of a temporary injunction is now under consideration and that other such evidence might be more pertinent during the permanent injunction hearing.

Some 900 persons, nearly all of the newspaper's non-supervisory personnel, have been idled by the strike, Chafee said.

Stations Protest Gas Hike

By BOB MONROE
Associated Press Writer

Phase 4 gasoline price protests spread Monday to Indiana and suburban Washington, D.C. A spokesman for a national retailers' group warned they would continue to grow unless there was real relief.

As many as 75 per cent of the stations in Indianapolis were reported closed and an American Automobile Association survey found 18 of 24 stations closed in the capital's Maryland suburbs.

Thousands of stations remained closed for a third day in Northern and Central California where a spokesman claimed victory for the protest after President Nixon ordered a hike in retail gasoline prices expedited.

But John Huemmrich, executive director of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, warned that "just giving us a crumb is r going to satisfy us. We'd like to have a piece of bread."

Huemmrich said at the group's Pittsburgh headquarters that the dealers want every gasoline price increase immediately passed through to consumers. That is prohibited under the Phase 4 rules.

The White House said the President had ordered Cost of Living Council Director John Dunlop to expedite action on a retail price increase and "get a decision out this week."

Huemmrich observed that Dunlop said last Friday that the council would not change the basic regulation. "If the council decides to give us one cent a gallon or two cents even...they're not giving us a darn thing. The oil companies have already taken that from us last month by increases they passed on to us," he said.

"If he doesn't change that...we will be faced, I'm almost certain, with a national closedown," Huemmrich added.

"Not that we will call it. We won't have to call it, for the simple reason dealers are closing down one by one because they can't continue in business."

Bob Moore, executive secretary of the California Service Station Dealers Association, was more optimistic about the President's action. "Beautiful, beautiful," he said, "this is the guy we were trying to reach."

Moore said he was asking member dealers to open Tuesday for regular operating hours instead of the reduced 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. shift that had been planned by many dealers.

A Look At Our Bus Service

By DAVE GREENSLIT

UMass buses will be running on cleaner fuel next semester, according to Bob Godding, operations manager of the Student Senate Transit Service.

The switch to propane fuel was to have taken place this semester, Godding said, but the supplier of the fuel was unable to install propane tanks in the buses until October.

To avoid interrupting bus service, the necessary modifications will be done during intersession.

Service may be increased on present routes, and extended to again include Belchertown and So. Deerfield, according to Godding. This, he said, depends on the Student Senate. He said the original decision to cut Belchertown service was made by the administration.

Godding said that more students than ever now ride the buses. A ridership survey will be taken soon, he said, to allow students to comment on the service.

Most students interviewed by the Collegian said overall service was adequate. The most frequent complaint was buses being late. One student, who lives in Puffton Village, said that he often becomes "disgusted" waiting for buses, and ends up walking to Puffton. He added that when the buses do come, they are too crowded. Asked if he would rather drive, he said:

"No, I'm glad the bus system exists. I just wish they'd be a little more organized."

Another student said night service should be increased. She said that because night service is infrequent, she once had to hitchhike from Central to a class in Southwest.

Two students complained that this year's schedules are confusing. But Godding disagrees. He said individual route schedules are an improvement over last year's chart.

Faculty Art On Display

An exhibition of works by Amherst College Fine Arts faculty members will be on view from Oct. 3 through Oct. 23 in the Mead Art Building at Amherst College.

Included in this exhibition will be watercolors and serigraphs by Prof. Carl N. Schmalz, Jr.; sculpture by Prof. Mark Oxman: paintings by William Utermohlen, the Visiting Artist for 1973-74 at the College; pastels and paintings by Prof. Robert Sweeney and photographs by Prof. William Arnold.

Also on view in October will be an exhibition of American Impressionist paintings, drawings and graphics including works by Childe Hassam, Theodore Robinson, John H. Twachtman and Willard L. Metcalf.

Concurrent with these exhibitions the Mead Art Building will also host a selection of Baroque and Renaissance works of art from the permanent collection of Amherst College.

The Mead Art Building is open from Monday through Saturday from 9 to 5, Sundays from 11:30 to 5.

Two Robbed In CC Garage

By KATHY SHEEHAN

Two UMass students were robbed of $150 last night at 7:25 in the Campus Center Garage by three men brandishing a hunting knife, a UMass spokesman said. One of the victims, was hit with an umbrella by one of the robbers according to the spokesman.

Two of the robbers escaped in a car and the other on foot. The victims, who were not identified, were able to supply the Campus Police with the car registration. The case is still under investigation.

Kissinger Assures UN

U. S. Will Not Dominate World Affairs

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger assured the nations of the world Monday that the United States will not seek to dominate their affairs in concert with the Soviet Union, or with any other big power.

"My country remains committed to the goal of a world community," Kissinger promised the United Nations General Assembly in his debut as secretary. "We will continue to work in this parliament of man to make it a reality."

In order to make the United Nations more effective, Kissinger proposed that the 135 member nations reach agreement on peacekeeping guidelines for swift and effective action in future crises.

"In recent years we found ourselves locked in fruitless debates about the inauguration of peacekeeping operations and over the degree of control the Security Council would exercise over peacekeeping machinery, an impasse which ensured only that permanent peacekeeping machinery would never come into being," he said.

Kissinger also proposed that the United Nations organize a world food conference next year "to harness the efforts of all nations to meet the hunger and malnutrition resulting from natural disasters."

And he renewed the U.S. pledge of support for permanent membership in the Security Council for Japan. The five permanent members of the 15-nation council since the U.N. was formed in 1945 have been the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China.

Kissinger's speech to the 28th General Assembly contained no bold U.S. initiative for breaking the impasse in the Middle East, nor any other dramatic, far-reaching proposal.

Its significance rested more in its tone, particularly in reassurances that "the United States will never be satisfied with a world of uneasy truces, of offsetting blocks, of accommodations of convenience."

Kissinger plans to spend three days in New York. While here he will meet with Foreign Ministers Andrei A. Gromyko of the Soviet Union, Sr. Alec-Douglas Home of Britain, Massayoshi Ohira of Japan and others on such matters as the prospects of maintaining momentum toward detente with Moscow and the possibility of President Nixon's visiting Europe and Japan by the end of the year.

Gov't Units Move To Secure Phnom Penh

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)-Two government units moved through light opposition to within 5-1/2 miles of a linkup Monday in a sweep designed to secure Phnom Penh's vulnerable western approaches.

Field reports confirmed by the Cambodian command said the troops were trying to join up at Thmat Pong, about 18 miles west of the capital. Elements of the government's 7th Division were moving from the north and the 13th Brigade was moving from the south near Highway 4, the reports said.

At least five battalions of government soldiers were reported involved in the operation to take Thmat Pong, which is said to be a division headquarters for Communist-led Cambodian insurgents and their North Vietnamese allies. A Cambodian batallion usually contains between 300 and 500 soldiers.

Col. Am Rong, the command's chief spokesman, said resistance was light, indicating at least some insurgent elements had perhaps left the area in advance of the government sweep.

If successful, the linkup could prove helpful in beefing up the capital's defenses. The western approach forms a natural attack route, free of the watery barriers that encirlce Phnom Penh on the east, north and south.

The South Vietnam military command announced in Saigon that North Vietnamese soldiers had apparently overrun a goverment ranger post in the central highlands Saturday night.

The assault would be the first time a government camp of such size has been overrun by Communist forces since the Jan. 28 cease-fire. The government indicated it would try to drive the North Vietnamese out. The chief South Vietnamese military spokesman, Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, told newsmen in Saigon that the Le Minh ranger base 23 miles west of Pleiku lost radio contact with headquarters after about five hours of heavy fighting. He said the post, about nine miles from the Cambodian border, was defended by about 400 rangers.

Nixon Orders Gas Price Hike

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon ordered the Cost of Living Council on Monday to clear the way this week for an increase in retail gasoline prices.

The President acted as spokesman for gasoline retailers said scattered service station shutdowns may spread unless dealers get immediate relief from Phase 4 price controls.

The Cost of Living Council and its director, John T. Dunlop, have been following a timetable which would have allowed the at-the-pump price increase to go into effect Oct. 2.

But White House spokesman Gerald L. Warren said the President "asked Dr. Dunlop to expedite this matter...and get the decision out this week."

Dunlop responded that he would, Warren added.

The presidential spokesman would not discuss how large the increase would be, but indications are that the council will allow a hike of one or two cents per gallon.

Service station operators who are staging the shutdowns contend they are unfairly squeezed by Phase 4 regulations.

Their ceiling prices are computed under a complex formula which has forced them to absorb increases in the wholesale price of gasoline.

The council, moving to allow a pass-through of higher wholesale costs, asked service station operators on Sept. 14 to submit data on their costs and profits by Sept. 25. Dunlop said Oct. 2 had been targeted as the effective date for a retail price increase.

But, according to Warren, Nixon relayed word through aides that he wanted the timetable speeded up in an effort to "clear up whatever confusion remains in the price of gasoline."

Warren skirted a question on whether Nixon wanted the service stations to stay open. "The President would not attempt to counsel dealers on how to operate their individual stations," he said.

Governor Vs. Me. Power Co.

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)- Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis accused Central Maine Power Co. Monday of waging a "saturation advertising campaign" aimed at buying votes to defeat the proposed Power Authority of Maine.

"Those of us in politics have always been told we use very questionable tactics," he said at his regular news conference. "But it's been interesting to watch private industry become involved in something like a political campaign. I think they could learn something from dirty politicians and raise the level of their own."

The Democratic governor, a strong proponent of public power, told reporters: It's always said you can't buy elections. But Central Maine has a pretty good investment in trying to buy Maine people in a saturation advertising campaign and the amount of money they've raised altogether."

The public power and state lottery issues will be decided in the Nov. 6 referendum. Curtis said a new pamphlet published by the Secretary of State's office will give voters a factual explanation of the referenda questions.

As far as the proposed state lottery is concerned, Curtis said he is unsure whether the monetary return would be worth the collection.

"It's not going to eliminate the income or sales tax, so people ought not to over estimate its effect," he said.

The governor sidestepped a press conference question on his support of the recommendations of the controversial Maine Management and Cost Survey,

Peron Wins Again

By MORT ROSENBLUM

BUENOS AIRES (AP)-Final returns issued Monday showed Juan D. Peron was elected president of Argentina by a 61.8 per cent majority, nearly the same margin he scored 22 years ago over the same opponent.

Peron's greatest strength came from the provinces, with majorities reaching 80 per cent in the north and topping 70 per cent in six provinces. But he did not reach a majority in Buenos Aires, the federal capital.

Peron, 77, will be sworn in Oct. 12 along with his third wife, Isabel, the first woman vice president in Latin-American history. It will be the former dictator's third term, following 18 years of exile.

Peron defeated Ricardo Balbin of the Radical Civic Union by winning more than 7.36 million votes to Balbin's 2.9 million. In 1951, Peron's percentage was 62.4.

The third candidate, Francisco Manrique of a center right coalition, had 1.45 million votes and Socialist contender Juan Carlos Coral tallied only 188,000.

Peron met with key members of interim President Raul Lastiri's Peronist government, apparently to discuss the future. Before going in, Peron told newsmen he was thinking of setting up a voluntary "political council" to advise his government.

Earlier, he said he would concentrate on stabilizing and straightening out Agentina's chaotic political situation, adding that the economic situation would then automatically improve.

Cool It Phone Freaks

By BRIAN COOK

Student telephone information, a service operated and funded via the work study program, relies upon the dependability and cooperation of work study students, according to a spokesman for switchboard operations over in Whitmore.

There are three lines open until midnight every day with at least two students covering them during the day and usually three at night when the lines are most busy. Problems arise when these students either don't show up for their scheduled times or are late. Since financial aid funds have been cut, the work study program only allocates eleven students to the telephone service which is the bare number needed to operate it on a regular basis.

According to sources at Whitmore, more students aren't hired because there would be no way to guarantee them a set number of hours and many times there would be no work for them at all when all of the regulars show up.

When shortages of help occur (due to exams, illness, etc.), efforts are made to contact other student employees to fill in, but since they are not allowed to work more than 15 hours a week under work-study, these efforts are not always successful. Part-time regular University help must be used sometimes to fill the gaps during extremely busy periods.

Another major problem, according to the spokesman, is that callers repeatedly ask for the same numbers instead of jotting them down for future reference.

That's the story, all of you frustrated phone freaks. For further information please dial "O".

IMF Stalls On Reforms Of World Monetary Systems

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The International Monetary Fund showed the world Monday how deeply its 126 members are divided on rebuilding the shattered international monetary system.

The fund's Committee of 20 financial ministers, a select panel named a year ago to draw up new money rules, issued a document described as an outline of reform.

But on the tough issues holding up agreement, it only stated alternatives, indicating the toughest negotiations are yet to come.

In what was perhaps a sign that the new rules remain out of reach, the fund's new chief urged member nations to support their national currencies vigorously.

The Committee of 20 has agreed to a July 31, 1974, deadline for a final monetary agreement. But as the fund and the World Bank opened their annual meetings at the Kenyatta Conference Center in Nairobi, even that deadline seemed short to many of the ministers.

The negotiators made it clear to newsmen that no real progress on reform can be expected until January, when the committee meets again.

The highly technical reform outline showed that the negotiators agreed in principle on the shape of the system, but not on how to do it. This was generally the case months ago.

The report said, for example, that the ministers agreed that nations that accumulate large amounts of surplus money should be under some kind of international pressure to revalue their currencies, a key U.S. proposal.

But there was no agreement on how the pressure would be applied, what financial indicators would be sued to trigger the international pressure or generally how the system would work.

The document also noted agreement that gold should be replaced as the chief reserve asset of nations by a new kind of international money known as Special Drawing Rights, or SDR.

But the ministers were sharply divided on how the so-called "paper gold" would be valued — in terms of gold or in terms of a measuring "basket" of different currencies.

An SDR is a bookkeeping entry valued by nations only because of mutual trust. It has value in terms of gold and is worth about $1.20. So far, it is used only by governments to settle official debts.

New Developments In Chile

Junta Burns Marxist Materials

By WILLIAM R. LONG
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP)- Chilean military authorities have launched a book burning campaign against Marxist literature, raiding private homes and ordering merchants to get rid of leftist materials.

Col. Pedro Ewing, secretary-general of government for the military junta that seized power Sept. 11, said in an interview published Monday that book stores "must eliminate Marxist texts if they don't want to be sanctioned."

On Sunday, security forces raided numerous apartments at gunpoint in central Santiago and threw Marxist books, pamphlets and posters to the street, where they were burned in bonfires.

The government also banned Marxist newspapers that supported the government of President Salvadore Allende, who died in the bloody Sept. 11 coup.

Ewing told the right-wing newspaper Tribuna: "We don't like Marxism. We want Chilean experssions. Marxism only stirs up class hate..."

But the press secretary for the junta, Federico Willoughby, indicated that the new government does not have a full-fledged policy to eliminate Marxist books.

Willoughby told a newsman: "The junta respects ideas. It doesn't believe burning books will stop ideas."

On Sunday's book burnings, he said: "Soldiers, police and students do not always react in a manner coinciding with government policy. It was something of the moment."

In Vina del Mar, 100 miles northwest of Santiago, the military authorities fired the municipal library director and ordered the shelves cleared of Marxist titles.

The junta sent a message of condolence to the widow of Chilean poet Pablo Neruda. The Nobel Prize winner, a friend of Allende, died of cancer Sunday night in a Santiago hospital.

"He was a great poet and will be missed by all Chileans," said Willoughby. But the junta said the military situation would not permit a large funeral service.

Neruda, 69, was a member of the Communist party.

Agnew Lawyers Prepare Defense

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-While his attorneys prepared to go to court to try to stop a federal investigation of him, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was proceeding Monday with his official routine as if everything were normal.

In the coming week Agnew is scheduled to fly to California where he will give a private talk to an insurance executives' convention and address a Republican women's group.

With a few days between these events the vice president probably will go to Palm Springs to play golf and relax at the resort home of his friend, singer Frank Sinatra.

This will be Agnew's third major foray from Washington since it became public knowledge that he is under investigation in a federal prove of alleged kickbacks to politicians by state contractors in Maryland.

Agnew's lawyers have said they will go to court, probably by Wednesday, to try to stop the probe.

The probability of early action in the Agnew case appeared increased Monday when Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson canceled a scheduled speech to the National Association of Chiefs of Police, citing pressing national business. He would not say so, but it seemed apparent that at least part of that business was the Agnew case.

In The Nation And The World

Official: Gas Shortage Here For Several Years

BOSTON (AP)-The oil and gas crunch will be with the United States at least another two or three years until the nation can come up with new energy sources, a federal official reported Monday.

"However, it looks like we're going to be spending more whether we buy domestic fuels or foreign," said Duke R. Ligon, director of the Office of Oil and Gas for the Interior Department.

He told the International City Manager Association his office now has "the machinery ready to put in place should Congress or the White House instruct us to administer a mandatory allocation program."

Ligon said a combination of adverse problems like cold weather or refinery breakdowns could cause the demand for imported oil to rise to over 800,000 barrels a day.

He said estimates are that oil imports could total 550,000 per day-a record high level-if Europe's weather remains stable and U.S. air quality standards are not changed.

"Conservation of fuels could reduce import needs by 100,000 barrels or more per day," Ligon said, adding communities should look hard at ways to cut fuel usage.

"I can tell you that some school systems are using excessive quantities of fuels," he said, "because in the past fuels were cheap and there was little reason to conserve energy.

"I can also say that cities should make conservation a priority item."

Ligon said the landed cost of foreign crude oil has risen to as much as $7.25 per barrel, while domestic oil costs about $4.20 or less.

"My prediction is that domestic prices will rise," he said, "providing needed economic incentive for increased exploration.

Delta Crash Blamed On Crew

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Aeronautics Commission has blamed the crash of a Delta CD-9 last July 31 at Boston's Logan Airport on failure of the crew to utilize all navigational information available to them.

The commission report was released Monday, following a week of hearings in Peabody, Mass., by the National Transportation Safety Board on the crash which killed all but one of the 89 on board.

Testimony at the NTSB hearings indicated that there has been some record of malfunctions in the flight director equipment in the DC-9's which Delta acquired when it merged with Northeast Airlines, and the cockpit voice recording indicated that the pilot did not trust his flight recorder.

"Even if the flight director was not operating properly, there were two other completely independent airborne systems to receive and interpret the ground generated localizer and glide slope paths," the report said. "Also, there were two independent barometric altimeters and a radio altimeter, any one of which, if properly set and referred to, would have informed the crew when the decision height 216 feet above the crash location had been reached." The decision height is the point at which the pilot decides whether he can see the runway well enough to land.

"The odds against all of this equipment malfunctioning without warning and at the same moment are infinitesimal," the report concluded.

The report indicated that the apparent oversight on the part of the crew might have been caused, at least partially, by erroneous information they received from the ground.

"Just a minute before the crash, the crew was informed that the runway visual range was more than 6,000 feet, way above the minimum of 2,400 feet," but by the time the plane reached the area a fog bank had apparently moved in bringing visibility below minimum.

"This must have confirmed the crew's feeling that the approach and landing would be a simple one."

The report also indicated that because the control tower was busy with other flights, Delta flight 723 was kept at a higher altitude than it should have been for the proper glidesclope.

"It is apparent that this flight crossed the outer marker a point on the Boston approach about 5.3 miles from the runway touchdown point at an altitude closer to 3,000 feet than to 1,819 feet where it should have been," the report said.

"To make up for this the airplane was descended at a higher than normal rate."

"It is probable that, expecting to break out of the clouds at any moment on the basis of the weather given to them, the crew neglected to cross check all the instruments.

Budget Reform Bill Moves In Congress

By EDMOND Le BRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Legislation designed to make Congress more efficient in shaping the national budget, launched in a gale of enthusiasm, then becalmed bby second thoughts, now is moving again to uncertain breezes.

It appears doubtful that congress can complete action on a budget reform bill this year. But at least both Senate and House units have resumed work on bills that appeared stuck a month ago.

The House Rules Committee completed off-and-on hearings on the measure Sept. 20. Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., a principal steerer of the legislation, toldha reporter he thinks there is a good chance a bill may be ready for House consideration by November - but it may not much resemble the original.

In the Senate, a government operations subcommittee has favorably reported its version. Consideration by the full Committee appeared threatened for a time because the chairman, Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., had his hands full as chairman of the special Watergate investigating committee. However, Ervin now has scheduled excecutive sessions Oct. 1, 5 and 8.

The push for reform of Congress' procedures for making appropriations and keeping an overall limit on spending came from a widespread feeling, both on and off Capitol Hill, that the present system was bogging down.

Congress routinely begins a new fiscal year without regular appropriations enacted. Overall responsibility for spending is no where centralized;different legislative committees and appropriations subcommittees go their separate ways.

With Congress poorly organized to control the budget, the initiative over total spending and priorities increasingly passed to the executive, especially one like President Nixon who showed willingness freely to impound funds voted by Congress for particular programs.

Congress created a special study committee with representation from both chambers and both parties. Early this year it proposed a reform bill that would create special budget committees in both House and Senate.

Food Prices Stable

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

It's two weeks since the beef ceiling was lifted and supermarket shoppers yesterday found that prices and supplies were back to normal. No one wanted to predict what would happen next, however.

An Associated Press survey showed most beef prices were at or below their freeze level. Increases and decreases on individual items generally balanced each other out.

Retailers reported there was no rush by shoppers to buy beef, which had been in short supply during the freeze. Some experts said people had changed their eating habits and just got used to other foods.

Cattle prices at livestock markets declined from ahigh of about 60 cents per pound to 45 cents a pound or less and the drop was reflected at the meat counter.

"The flow of the product is back to normal," said Bernie Cross, president of Cross Brothers Meat Packers Inc. of Philadelphia. "There is plenty of beef on the market, more than needed. . .

"The wholesale market, price wise, is off 15 per cent. Supply has exceeded demand. . .Retailers are buying only what they need because they're afraid what they buy today will cost less tomorrow."

Rod Kallungi, a butcher for Joe Wigley Meats of Detroit, said his store had stopped offering horsemeat for sale, a practice the store began this summer for the first time since World War II.

"We've got more than enough beef," he said, adding that sales were "running like normal" at prices averaging 30 cents per pound below their midsummer levels.

The up-and-down character of prices was reflected at Giant Food stores in the Washington, D.C. area. "Roughly, there has been a 10 per cent increase in rib sections of beef and 10 per cent decrease in chuck," a spokesman said. "There has been some increase in food prices generally, reflecting the increases in wholesale prices."

The Austin, Tex., school system found an off-beat solution to the problem of trying to plan lunch menus without knowing what foods will be plentiful. It added a "Phase 4 Sandwich," named after the administration's latest economic program. The sandwich, a spokesman explained, is made from "whatever meat is available."

Sarge: Nixon Ignoring Housing

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Monday that President Nixon is ignoring the housing problem in the nation's cities.

Although more housing is badly needed in most cities, Sargent said, "unfortunately the President chose to ignore such problems at this time."

Sargent told the annual conference of the International City Management Association that President Nixon "said no to the rental allowance program; no to ending the freeze on current housing programs; in fact, no to any new production programs...

"Put most simply, the President said no to the low income public."

The University Dance Company does an interpretation called "Lust" choreographed by Richard Jones.

University Dance Group

Guest Artist To Perform

The UMass University Dancers, and Concert Dance Group, combine with guest artist Dena Madole in concert September 27-29 at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorum, at the University.

Miss Madole is a former leading dancer with the Erick Hawkins Dance Company and for the past few years has been doing solo performances throughout the United States. Miss Madole is currently affiliated with Three Circle Arts in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Miss Madole did her first joint concert with a college group in 1967 when she performed with the University Concert Dance Group here in Bowker. Her flowing style and grace will be remembered by those who also saw her in 1966 when she performed with the Hawkins Company.

The University Dancers have just returned from 2½ weeks of performing in Rome, Italy, Tehran, Iran, and Patras, Greece. The performance in Greece marked the opening of the newly renovated ampitheatre, which was originally constucted in 200 A.C. Over 2,500 people warmly welcomed the dancers and made the performance a most memorable one.

Richard Jones joins the faculty at the University and will present two dances "Jazz Dance for seven" and "Lust", which was first performed in Corfu, Greece and takes its theme from Dionysus. Mr. Jones comes to us from New York City, where he was jazz instructor at New York University and Andre Eglevesky's School of Ballet. His busy summers include artist in residence at the Paris Academy and guest teaching in Switzerland, and Germany.

Reserved tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, Herter Hall, on the University Campus. $1.50 for Adults and $.75 for Students.

KATZ SPEAKS TONIGHT

Controversial author and former school teacher, Arthur Katz will speak in the U Mass Campus Center Auditorium on Tuesday, September 25th at 7:30, at Smith College, September 24th at 7:30, and at Mount Holyoke College, on September 25th at 12:00 noon. Locations at Smith and Mount Holyoke will be announced later.

Katz, a lecturer, world traveller, and author of the provocative book, "Ben Israel — Odyssey of a Modern Jew" challenges both Jewish and gentile audiences about the place of God in their contemporary lives.

As a youth growing up in a conventional Jewish home in Brooklyn, Katz was a rebel who viewed the world as "a place where people were making a living without living." Agitated about the situation, he dropped out of high school and became a participant in radical left wing causes.

Embraces Radical Ideologies

By the age of twenty-three he could best be described as a disillusioned Jewish man having embraced Marxism, pragmatism, existentialism and atheism as logical paths in his search for his very existence and solutions to the breakdown of Western civilization.

His moral anguish was further heightened when the Army assigned him to Germany "among my natural enemies and persecutors" where he was "jarred by exposure to the horrors of World War II which eminated from this brilliantly cultured nation of the western world."

Upon his return to the United States, he therefore attended Santa Monica City College, UCLA and the University of California at Berkeley where he received his B.A. and M.A. degrees in history.

Sets Out To Change Social Order

Setting out to prepare his students for a "Progressive" society he became a "free-wheeling" high school teacher inducing his students to be critical of American institutions, sharpening their social consciousness and promoting freer moral attitudes.

After four years of such teaching, he was made to realize that ideologies, philosophies and education were not capable of transforming human character in the lives of his students or his own which was being shattered by personal problems.

In search of an answer to his predicament, Katz set off on an odyssey of tracing Western civilization backward to its geographic birthplace ending up in Jerusalem where he made the spiritual discovery which revolutionized his life.

Saved Jewish Artifacts

In the course of these travels through Europe and the Middle East, he represented the Judah H. Magnes Memorial Museum — museum for Judaica in Berkeley. As their agent, he rescued from possible destruction valuable ancient Jewish art and religious objects in Cairo and Alexandria.

Katz's highly emotional search for truth and identity during this epic odyssey through Europe and the Arab world is described in his book "Ben Israel" published by Logos International (Plainfield, New Jersey). In recent years Katz has made several trips to Israel, with some stays being as long as three months.

Contacts Russian Jewish Community

He and his family recently returned from a year in Europe where he traveled to Leningrad make contact with the jewish community.

Katz is becoming a well-known college speaker due to his "lively confrontations" on such campuses as Harvard, UCLA, University of Ohio, University of Illinois, University of Kansas, University of Nebraska, University of California at Berkeley, Aarhus University in Denmark, and Uppsula University in Sweden.

Katz, in an expanding ministry of discipleship training and outreach to the Jewish people, has appeared on five half hour television religion specials and many radio interview programs. A major motion picture on his book is currently being planned.

Study Predicts Housing Drop, Increased Unemployment

LEXINGTON, Mass. (AP)-An economic research organization predicts a 20 per cent drop in housing starts over the next two years in Massachusetts as well as increased unemployment and inflation.

Data Resources, Inc., of Lexington said the factors are not likely to produce a recession in the state.

The study was released yesterday.

The projections were based mostly on an outlook for the national economy which Data Resources developed by using 700 national financial and industry indicators. Massachusetts is linked via computer to the national forecasts.

The increased unemployment was directly related to military base closings in the commonwealth, Data Resources said.

Unemployment will drop to 6.8 per cent before the end of the year, but climb to 7 per cent during 1974 and 7.2 per cent in 1975.

The Boston Naval Shipyard, Otis Air Force Base and some facilities in Chicopee and Bedford are to be phased out or closed during the next two years.

"Inflation measured by the Boston Consumer Price Index will not subside until 1975. The 1973 and 1974 levels will exceed the 1972 inflation rate by more than 50 per cent rising from 3½ per cent in 1972 to 5½ per cent in 1973 and 1974. In 1975, inflation is expected to moderate to about 4 per cent," the company's report said.

The report also predicted that housing starts "from the 1972 level of 48,780 housing units...will fall to about 40,000 in 1973 and about 32,000 in 1974."

A recovery in the housing industry is not anticipated until the 1975 building season.

Data Resources said business investment had the only optimistic projection for the period. It promises "to be the main source of strength against serious recession...with investment increasing over 10 per cent in both 1973 and 1974."

Legislators Oppose Open Beaches

BOSTON A(P)-A bill to open to the public all beachfront land between the high and low tide marks received solid opposition yesterday from legislators who represent the state's coastal areas.

The legislators, in testimony before the Joint Natural Resources Committee, said the bill would cause property values to decrease andmight also be the first step on the road to socialism.

"A few years ago only a few rich people owned little pieces of beach land where they could go play withtheir friends," said Rep. William Saltzman, I-New Bedford. "But today even truck drivers can own beachland.

"A lot of poor people who pull themselves up by the bootstraps buy beach land to get out of the slums," he said. "And if a man's got a beach, and it's his beach, then you should let him keep it! "If you want to divide everything up," Saltzman said, "there's another country you ought to go to-that's Russia."

Rep. Bernard Wilbur, R-Barnstable, called the bill "one more step toward socialistic government."

Sen. John Aylmer, R-Barnstable, said it would be unfair to enact the bill without providing compensation for the beachfront property owners.

"It's like creating a sidewalk along a 1,200 mile road. You have to pay some compensation to the owners of the land," Aylmer said, adding that it would cause great public safety problems.

Senator Plans Health Insurance Bill

By GARY LUHR

HARTFORD (AP)-U.S. Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., announced Monday he was preparing a health insurance bill that would have the federal government pay family medical expenses above $2,000 or after 60 days in a hospital.

Private insurance companies would continue to cover initial costs, Ribicoff said.

The bill, being co-sponsored by Sen. Russell Long, D-La., also would replace the resent Medicaid program of health protection for low-income families, he added.

Ribicoff disclosed the bill in an address to the Connecticut State Labor Council's annual convention.

"We must make sure that health care is a basic right, not just a privilege for the few," he said.

Ribicoff said he supported the basic goals of a health care bill introduced by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. But the Kennedy bill, calling for the federal government to provide total health insurance, would cost $80 billion and Congress was unlikely to approve it at that price, he said.

By contrast, he said later, the Long-Ribicoff bill would cost only $3.5 billion. He called it "a first step we can take right now."

"I am not such a purist that I am going to wait for the whole loaf when thousands of families are being financially wiped out by huge medical bills," he said.

At a news conference prior to the speech, Ribicoff criticized the federal government for directing so much of its drug law enforcement effort toward controlling heroin traffic.

The government has "failed to combat a new, more widespread drug-abuse menace involving the illicit use of billions of pills," he said.

The news conference was timed to coincide with the release of a Senate subcommittee report on drug control. Ribicoff headed the committee, which spent nine months studying the nation's drug picture.

The report said the trend among drug users was toward "polydrug" abuse-the use of cocaine, amphetamines, barbiturates, hallucinogens, methadone, marijuana and alcohol in a variety of combinations, sometimes in conjunction with heroin.

"One element of of the drug picture appears unchanged, however. Teenagers are among the principal abusers and schools are a principal marketplace," Ribicoff said.

He added that the government has failed to curb organized crime's rule in illicit narcotics traffic because, up to now, the enforcement agencies have failed to pool information or work with the FBI.

Couple Beats Fuel Shortage

CLINTON, Conn. (AP)-While some homeowners this fall are worrying about fuel-oil shortages and soaring electric prices, the Dahlquists find comfort-and economy-in their fireplace.

Emil and Lee Dahlquist recently began using their relatively small fireplace to do much of their cooking while it heats their house.

Dahlquist, 59, has invented and hopes to patent a slanted fireplace grate designed to radiate more heat into the room.

"It's like a wedding with something old and something new," he said, referring to the use of a modern development to improve an ancient cooking method.

Using a fireplace oven and rotisserie he built, the Dahlquists are able to save on cooking costs while heating their house with a wood fire.

The couple found that the fireplace did most of the work of heating their eight-room house, cutting their fuel-oil costs.

Dahlquist is cautious about saying how much fireplaces will save on fuel bills. In their case, however, he estimated that each $70 spent on wood saves $100 worth of oil.

Another $30 a year is saved because the electric stove gets such little use.

"Bread, which I make from scratch, only takes 20 minutes to bake at the fireplace while it takes one hour in a regular oven," said Mrs. Dahlquist.

The fireplace may even be an improvement over the modern stove. "A 15-pound turkey, stuffed, takes only four hours," she said. "It's juicy and self-basting."

Bulger Hits EPA Head

BOSTON (AP)-State Sen. William M. Bulger, D-Boston, said Monday that the regional director of the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is pushing contradictory proposals for offshore oil development to please his superiors in Washington.

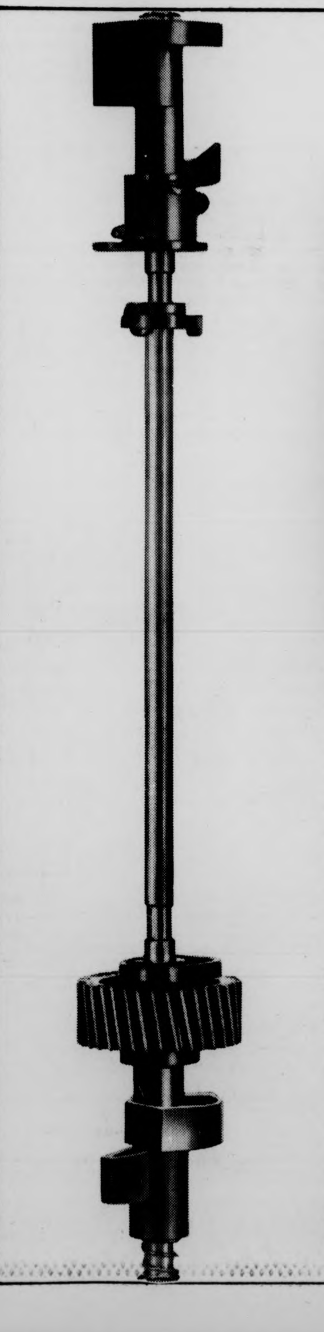
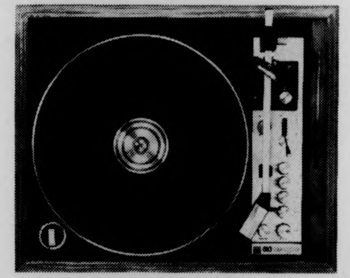
McGlennon favors oil development off the New England coast on the one hand, as well as ocean sanctuaries where development must not be allowed to take place on the other, bulger said.

This, Bulger said, demonstrates the "confusion in McGlennon's own mind resulting from his desire to please the administration in Washington."

The major oil companies "have enough friends in Washington without Mr. McGlennon appearing as an advocate," Bulger said.



Buy the BSR 710 or 810.



Either way you'll get the shaft.

The BSR 810 and 710 have their brains in their shaft. A carefully machined metal rod holding eight precision-molded cams. When the cam shaft turns, the cams make things happen. A lock is released, an arm raises and swings, a record drops, a platter starts spinning, the arm is lowered, the arm stops, the arm raises again, it swings back, another record is dropped onto the platter, the arm is lowered again, and so on, for as many hours as you like.

Deluxe turntables from other companies do much the same thing, but they use many more parts—scads of separate swinging arms, gears, plates, and springs—in an arrangement that is not nearly as mechanically elegant, or as quiet or reliable; that produces considerably more vibration, and is much more susceptible to mechanical shock than the BSR sequential cam shaft system.

Martha Talks About John

(Editor's note: Charles Camelopard was granted an interview with Martha Mitchell this week. It was time, the lady said, that she let the American public know what is going on in her life. Here is an excerpt from that interview.)

CAMELOPARD: Mrs. Mitchell, you said in your Sunday night TV interview that there is nothing wrong with you except mental torture from what you've been through. Is that all the trouble you've been having?

MRS. MITCHELL: Well no not all. You see, since John left our apartment I have had nothing to do. No one to nag, no one to irritate with phone calls, I've gotten quite bored and to combat the boredom I've been eating. Eating everything pecan pie, ice cream, salami sandwiches, watermelon. The fact is I've put on twenty pounds and my girdle is killing me. It's so tight I can't even think or talk straight.

CAMELOPARD: Is it true that your husband has urged you to see a psychiatrist?

MRS. MITCHELL: Yes, that's true but he's also told me to see a witch doctor, Josh the high-priced Jesus freak, Arnold the man who makes me my salami sandwiches at the corner deli and my family down south. I guess he's just been trying to get rid of me wouldn't you think?

CAMELOPARD: You made some mention of Mr. Mitchell being upset about you throwing his clothes around. Would you care to comment further on that statement?

MRS. MITCHELL: I certainly would. He's the one that throws his clothes around. John's a very self-conscious man and when he can't find a pair of color keyed jockey shorts in the morning he has a fit and empties his drawer all over the bedroom. I just got sick of picking up after him.

CAMELOPARD: Is it true that you tossed him out for his domestic misbehaviour rather than all the marital arguments that have been reported about you two?

MRS. MITCHELL: I didn't throw him out. I just got made one day and told him if he wanted to live like a fraternity brother and drink and make a mess of his room he should have stayed in college. The next day he took all the cards, poker chips and scotch with him and left. I never knew he took me so seriously.

CAMELOPARD: You've complained that every time you leave your apartment people speculate that you have gone to a psychiatric hospital. Where are you going, really?

MRS. MITCHELL: Oh just down to Macy's basement to hunt for bargains. I picked up a great set of Archie Bunker coasters and ashtrays the other day for $1.59. I go to the deli a lot for salami and they have great Greek olives. I can't eat too many of them. They make me think of Agnew and the rest of those hoodlums and I get indigestion.

CAMELOPARD: You stated that the reason you went to Washington was to help the country become a better place. Now that this has all happened would you like to add any other reasons why you went to the nation's capitol?

MRS. MITCHELL: Well, just one. There was a real estate agent, his name was B. Z. Rebobobo or something like that. He told John and I that the new Watergate apartment complex would eventually become one of the most famous chic apartment buildings in the world. We decided to get in on the ground floor before the rents went up.

CAMELOPARD: Mrs. Mitchell, what are your plans for the future?

MRS. MITCHELL: I haven't too many plans right now, except that I'm having my phone disconnected.

Pressure Groups In Latin America

By PEDRO HERNANDEZ

A pressure group is composed of individuals who together determine the decisions of national policy. They are a specialized society, but pressure groups do not necessarily exercise power in a formal manner. There can be functionaries and bureaucrats in public positions who belong to these groups and exercise power officially in the interests of the pressure groups.

Consequently, real power is vested in groups of this kind. This real power will be democratic in character if the pressure groups represent majorities, and will be oligarchical when these same groups represent minorities.

In Latin America, access to form part of the pressure groups is controlled by a small minority that constitutes the only real pressure group, because the really important decisions to maintain effective structures are dependent upon this group. And this small minority pressure group, by means of economic powers, whether cultural, political, bureaucratic, military or ecclesiastical.

The concentration of economic power in Latin America is obvious. Statistics concerning the bad distribution of our national income and per capita income, the deplorable division of land tenure, and so forth are widely known. To gain access to cultural power, one must first possess economic power, because of the structure of our educational institutions. The upward climb into the ranks of the political hierarchies requires conformity with those financially powerful and a cultural minimum as well.

Bureaucratic power also requires this minimum and even greater conformity, because the upward ascent through bureaucratic in Latin America depends upon the judgement and decisions of the bureaucratic higher-ups, and these men cannot maintain their own public status if they are not in comformity and agreement with those who hold economic power. Military power in our countries can only be justified as the defender and upholder of enforced structures and, in the final analysis, of the economic power. The latter repays or compensates the military men with financial, social, or even political privileges, as circumstances may require. These correspond to their comformity with the "established order."

The ecclesiastical power in our countries is united to the financial and political powers because they possess interests in common. The conformity of the ecclesiastic lends support ensuring the maintenance of these interests. The popular classes, comprising the large majorities, do not constitute pressure groups because they do not possess awareness of their common needs, nor are they united in their activity. They have no organization that is national in scope, nor even a minimum of common political objectives. If the majorities fail to obtain these requisites, Latin America will never become a real democracy.

Death In Chile

By DENNIS SIMKOWSKI

Death is visiting Chile like a thief in the night. Its name is Fascism, pogrom, extermination. Its cause is Mammon, idolatry, greed. Its Merchants--Nazis looking for investors--denounced the "Jewish Communist conspiracy" and demand "a Jew hanging on every pole." An American couple witnessed the execution of between 400 and 500 people, "30 to 40 at a time." in a Santiago soccer stadium where the authoritarians play a deadly game. Estimations range up to 25,000 killed. Thousands are interned. (Flash back...Northern Ireland...British Foreign Secretary Sir Douglas-Home has defended his government's decision to recognize the military regime. He said the British have very large interests in Chile so there are very strong practical reasons for recognizing "it"--read "Death". No doubt he supports his bloody government's role as Merchant of Belfast!)

America trained and supplied Chilean military brass and that was the extent of its aid after Allende's election in 1970. Meanwhile, Large U.S. grants and economic credits go to South Vietnam, South Korea, Brazil, Turkey, Taiwan, Greece, Iran, and the Philippines, to name a few, and they have on thing in common--military dictatorships.

Naturally, big business didn't mind the eventual overthrow, accomplished with guns, bombs, napalm and tanks "made in USA". "Think of the market", it says, "and making the world safe for democracy." Anaconda and Kennecott Copper and additional foreign interests. ITT's million dollar 17 point plan was designed to keep Allende's Unidad Popular from governance and when that failed to materialize it decided upon post-electoral disruption. And there's the Watergate connection. (The Chilean Embassy was broken into. This involved ITT people later implicated in the scandal.) Bishop Sergio Mendez Arceo of Cuernavaca, Mexico, who knew President Allende, said that "Chile under Allende was bringing hope to the Latin American peoples that they would achieve their aspirations for liberty and true democracy." But now, he added, "the military chiefs gave in to selfishness and placed themselves in the service of the Oligarchs--local and foreign." Those multinationals are

Ninety Days And Counting

To The Editor:

I suppose you could consider the following a combination farewell address and a promotional speech about a program that isn't very well known.

By a farewell address I mean a chance to say good-bye to some of my friends and to explain to them where I've disappeared to this semester. As for the promotional aspect, I hope that by explaining what I'm about to do and why, I might encourage others to do the same. You see I'm going to jail this week; not because I have to go but because I want to go!

What I've become involved in is part of a program to establish a model educational rehabilitation center for the guards as well as the inmates at the Berkshire County House of Correction. As part of this program I will spend 90 days as a prisoner of this jail. During this time I will be treated like the other inmates with the exception of receiving 15 credits from the University of Massachusetts for this learning experience.

Despite the newness of this program I will not be the first person to voluntarily spend time in jail. This past summer five graduate students lived the lives of inmates. They experienced for themselves the hardships presently existing within our correctional systems. Now they're working towards making the changes and improvements this area certainly needs. That's why I wasnt to become involved.

I believe there's a lot to be learned about the entire field of corrections. Especially concerning the facilities around the inmates and the programs being offered for the inmates. I also feel more attention should be given to the value these programs have to the inmate; both while he's in jail and more importantly when he's out. What I hope to get out of this semester is a real understanding of this situation from the inside. As a result I'll be more aware of the cotributions I can make on the outside. Obviously there's more to all of this than I can express in a letter.

If you're interested in knowing more about this program or possibly considering joining me I would like to talk with you. You can get in touch with me at this number 545-0917.

Get To Know Us

To The Editor:

We'd like to introduce ourselves. We are Gamma Sigma Sigma, and we are a Sorority-but we're not Greek and we don't have a house. We are a service sorority.

We must finished running a used book exchange at the Student Union and we are also organizing a Heart Fund Walk from this campus. Every semester we help with the Blood Drive. We also work off campus-at Belchertown, the Shriner's Hospital in Springfield, and local nursing homes. Maybe you've run into one of our fund raising drives-selling candy, baked goods or xmas notions. Or if you belong to an intramural athletic team maybe you've played against us in football or volleyball.

Now that we have been properly introduced, why would you like to know us better? We'd like to meet you! Why not drop by one of our coffee horus on Monday, Sept. 24 or Wednesday, Sept. 26 between 7:30 and 9:00 in the Colonial Lounge at the Student Union. We think you would enjoy knowing us better.

Bob And Howdy

To The Editor:

Modesty and his usual deep-seated sense of fair-play obviously kept Bob Estelle from including his own book in the list of ten books necessary for enlightenment. The book is called None Dare Call It Intelligence and what it is is two books for the price of one. The first part is an intimate biography, The Hard-Head Conspiracy, by Bob's former best friend and constant childhood companion, Howdy Doody.

As you might expect from a former birch tree, Howdy is a bit wooden in his prose style. But the story is enlightening and entertaining, especially the section covering Bob's most formative years. Unlike most normal babies, Bob's first word was not "mommie"; it was "commie" at everything he discovered, be it bug, bird, flower, reptile, or whatever.

Once Howdy and Bob cut their fingers with a dull pocket-knife and let the sap run together in a slight variation on the blood-brother ritual. Bob renounced his friend Howdy when Howdy intimated that the chip on Bob's shoulder might have come from his head.

The second part of the book, The Broad Side of a Barn, is a collection of Bob's right-handed curve-ball columns which give sobriety, common sense, and intellectual rigor a whole new dimension. Like Bob's list, his columns are a "good starter" for both liberal and conservative fireplaces alike. Bob's book is available through Kindergarten Press; the cost is one dollar three eighty-five.

Something Worthwhile

To The Editor:

There has been much speculation throughout the campus as to just who Josh is or isn't. To the girl I met in the Hatch, he is not a new soft drink; to Douglas Vicoll, he is not a hoax although he will be talking about one (Resurrection Hoax or History Mon. at 7:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium). He is not a Jesus Christ reincarnate although he will be talking about Jesus and His importance today. Also, he is not a seedless grape. However, if you still thirst I would invite you to come and find out for yourself "who's Joshing who?"

I have had the privelege to hear Josh talk and have found him to be extremely interesting and refreshing as he presents Biblical facts in relevant ways. If you are a person who has never truly resolved the issue of God, Christianity and Relgion in your life or if you are just interested in hearing Josh while he is here, come today at noon in the Campus Center Auditorium or Wednesday at 7:30 in the Student Union Ballroom. I promise that he will give you something worthwhile to think about.

Where Was The U.N. Then?

To The Editor:

In response to Mr. Goulding's letter of Sept. 23, Mr. Goulding gives several reasons for the U.N. being so ineffective. All of these reasons, seem to put the blame on us spine curving plague spreading, Zionists.

Number one, the reason why we fight terror with your so called reprisals against innocent Palestineans is because the U.N. will not do anything about these "innocent Palestineans". These innocent Palestineans are made up of people like the terrorists who sent bazooka shells into an Israeli school bus, mutilating 40 innocent children, people who go around Olympic games and torture and kill Israeli athletes. Where was the U.N. when all this was going on?

Where was your U.N. when six million of us went to the gas chamber?

No, Mr. Goulding, the government in Israel is not militeristic or even racists, we are doing something that your U.N. and your world has refused to do for two thousand years, that is to protect Jewish lives. If you think this is wrong, or immoral, stick it up your ass.

Wake Up

To The Editor:

Whoever sponsored and advertised the seminar on "Jew as Jew and Jew as Man" needs to wake up to the fact that they have a responsibility to see to it that the ad not appear if the seminar is cancelled, as I discovered only after having walked clear across campus. Too rarely are any Jewish organizations addressing themselves to issues that young people are really concerned about for them to be able to afford this kind of irresponsibility.

making the world safe for nothing more than profits and hypocrisy.

"I did not support Allende, but that's irrelevant now. I am a Chilean and a human being and these men are Nazis," said a Christian Democrat. He charged that General Augusto Pinochet, leader of the junta, was trained by "Wehrmacht officers." In deed, murder is complemented by book-burning. Deportations of political refugees will mean death for many Latin Americans. Even longhairs are being shorn, a mild example of the regime's repression.

World opinion starts with you. The responsibility is ours. We must end U.S. support to the junta, stop recognition, refuse trand and aid to the Fascists.

--Write or telegram Senator Edward Kennedy. Ask him to lead a Senate delegation to Chile to examine conditions.

--Send a mailgram, telegram or letter to Senator William Fulbright, head of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Henry Kissinger, and the lameduck. Urge no recognition and an end to U.S. intervention.

--Mailgram the Argentinian Embassy, 1600 N.H. Ave. NW, Washington; the Peruvian Embassy, 1700 Mass. Ave. NW, Washington; and the Mexican Embassy, 2829 16th St. NW, Washington. Request them to grant asylum to Brazilians, Bolivians, Uruguayans and refugees from other Latin American dictatorships.

You Are What You Eat

To The Editor:

The students return in September and find that the system has manipulated them again. This time it is our food. The students paid for a product: either the 15 meal plan or a 10 meal plan with certain specifications. The specifications are three choices of a main course and unlimited seconds. Why does the Food Services have the right to decide for the students what is best for the students?

An old adage says, "We are what we eat." To survive we must eat the proper foods. Most dining commons food consists of high concentrations of carbohydrates, fats, and certainly food that plays second fiddle at best to what good old mom cooks.

My main bitch is that we got taken. We, the students, paid for a product--the dining commons did not deliver. Therefore the students deserve no less than a rebate on the money they spent for an undelivered package. Let's face it--we are one of the most affluent societies in the world, yet we must eat a diet of soybean concentrates and bontrae substitues. Who is kidding who?

This university would not exist if it were not for its student population. The university doesn't exist for the administration, it exists because of the students. Therefore the student should be treated fairly. As another student has suggested in an earlier editorial, a return to the sixties is best. Be apathetic if you wish, but you are what you eat.

Those Silly Boys

To The Editor:

With reference to the recent crushing defeat of Bobby Riggs by Billie Jean King, I would like to comment on the behavior of the Kennedy tower boys. What initially started out as a few passing comments on the situation developed into immature, slanderous attacks upon female Coolidge spokesmen themselves. The Kennedy "gents" hurled tissue paper rolls, and flaming paper from upper stories causing hazards to those beneath. They then engaged in hurling apples, tomatoes, etc. upon the female students in the dorm adjacent to them, ignorant of the damage they caused. Having been struck myself, I can only say, "Send your fruit to Bobby; don't waste them on us. He needs the nutrition."

Polio Outbreaks Feared In Maine

By DAVE SWEARINGEN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-A state health and welfare official said Monday he is alarmed at the falling immunization levels of Maine pre-schoolers, especially for polio and Rubella German Measles.

"If these immune levels continue to drop, it's only a matter of time before Maine begins to get polio outbreaks such as occurred in Connecticut in 1972," said David Knorowski, immunization program director for the Maine Health and Welfare Department.

At last count, only 68 per cent of Maine pre-schoolers were immunized against polio, and 66 per cent against Rubella.

"These levels leave too much room for the diseases to make a comeback in the state," stated Knorowski at a news conference kicking off Immunization Action Month in Maine.

Mrs. Kenneth M. Curtis, wife of Maine's governor, will head the October education campaign.

Love Is Not Enough

"Love is not enough. You owe it to your children to see they are fully protected," Mrs. Curtis told reporters.

Knorowski said the only acceptable immunization level to him is 100 per cent, and the department's past practice of "setting a figure like 85 per cent to shoot at is gone. We're shooting for 100 per cent now-total protection."

After the introduction of the Sabin oral polio vaccine in the late 1950s, Maine's immunization level for that disease jumped to well over 90 per cent.

The rubella vaccine has been available only three years, making it difficult to set up an average immunization level.

Knorowski said he is puzzled by one aspect of the immunization problem. Despite the decline in polio vaccine use, and the low immunization level for rubella-the level for children protected against DPT-Diptheria, Pertussus-Whooping Cough-Tetanus remains about 80 per cent.

Can't Explain It

"We just can't explain it. For some reasons, kids are getting DPT vaccine, and not polio, although they're both usually available at the same time," he continued.

The Rubella vaccine is administered in one injection-good for life-between the age of one and pubetry. Oral polio vaccine requires three initial doses-as early as two months, followed by another after 6-8 weeks, and a third in 8-12 months. A booster is given just before the youngsters enter schools, making each child "set for life" unless he runs into an unusual situation such as exposure to polio while engaged in foreign travel, Knorowski stated.

Immunization Action Month

"The importance of the month is not so much to accomplish immunizations, as it is to take the opportunity to remind parents of this problem, and get them to do something about it in the coming year," he said.

Food Costs Will Decrease In '75

PORTLAND, Maine (AP)-The country will have the "largest crops in history his fall," a U.S. Cost of Living Council official predicted Monday.

Hazen F. Gale, director of the Council's Policy Analysis Division, said the farm boom will continue through 1974 and the eventual result will be a decrease in food costs, but not this year.

Addressing 240 delegates and officials at the 55th annual convention of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture, Gale said price increases will slow down through the end of this year.

"We'll turn the corner on food prices and see a turn downward in them a year from now," he said.

Setbacks in the Nixon administration's economic policies were caused by the "economic cycles in several commodities peaking at the same time," Gale said. Beef, poultry, pork and eggs were all high concurrently, with no other high-protein food at a low price "to take the pressure off."

Gale drew cheers from the agriculture officials when he said some frustrated consumers are demanding that all controls be dropped and the free market be allowed to take care of itself.

But, he said it would be "impractical" to drop all controls.

Farmers have had a chance to get back on a level where they were 20 years ago under the controls, he said.

$6.5 Million To Go For Job Placement

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Monday that Massachusetts will receive $6.5 million in federal funds to find new jobs for employes of military bases which are being phased out.

Sargent said Massachusetts will receive $3 million immediately and another $3.5 million will become available later.

The Boston Naval Yard, Oits Air Force Base in Bourne and Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee are among the defense facilities slated by the Nixon administration to be phased out.

Sargent said the money will be used for manpower training and to expand placement facilities now in operation at the bases.

He said persons not directly employed by the bases but whose jobs have depended on the facilities also will be eligible for assistance.

The governor announced several weeks ago that only $1 million would be available for Massachusetts residents affected by the base closings, even though he had requested $6.5 million.

Kelley Paralyzed

HYANNIS, Mass. (AP)-Pamela Kelley, who was injured Aug. 13 when a car driven by Joseph P. Kennedy III, 20, overturned on Nantucket Island, is to be transferred to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston at the end of the month.

Miss Kelley, 19, was the only person seriously injured in the accident. Her back was broken and her legs are paralyzed. She and Kennedy were among seven people who went to the island for a day's outing.

Miss Kelley's home is in Centerville, not far from the Kennedy Compound at Hyannis Port. Kennedy is a son of Ethel Kennedy, widow of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Ill. Farmers Form Posse To Curb Cattle Rustling

By H. F. WOLLENBERG
Associated Press Writer

MEREDOSIA, ILL. (AP) - If your car breaks down after dark on a back road in rural southern Illinois, you're apt to attract a crowd. Maybe even a posse.

When understaffed county sheriff departments were unable to stem the tide of cattle rustling, farmers took it on themselves to send out cars and pickup trucks to patrol the back roads at night. And many of the farmers, ignoring the advice of county sheriffs, say they are traveling armed.

"We're not grouches," said Eldred Ehlert, a cattle farmer who heads a patrol group of about 60 farmers. "We just want to protect what's ours."

He sat around a table with three other farmers and a grain farmer who also man the citizen patrol cars and discussed the thefts that have increased in these days of soaring food prices.

"City people will come down here on weekends and stop on the roadside to pick some corn," said Dave Hutson, a cattle farmer. "They'll get real upset if we tell them to get out of our fields, but they'd be the first ones to call the police if a farmer stopped to pick some flowers from their front yards."

Insurance industry estimates indicate the losses due to cattle rustling in 1973 will double from the $230 million lost in Illinois already".

The citizen's posse was formed with the blessing of Morgan County Sheriff Harold Wright. He doesn't approve the gun toting, for which the farmers have their own rationale.

"Now you tell me how many innocent people are going to be out on a side road at two in the morning," Hutson said. "If we find a cattle rustler, you can bet he'll have guns."

For the first six weeks of their nightly patrols, with two men in a single car covering more than 80 miles of roadways from dusk to dawn, not a single rustler has been spotted.

"Anybody who might think of rustling in this area has probably heard about our patrol," Ehlert said, "and they know they had best stay away."

Skylab Ending Record Mission

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Clean up, pack up and power down chores occupied the Skylab 2 astronauts Monday as the record-breaking spacemen prepared for their Tuesday splashdown and the end of their 59½-day voyage.

"Watch us today -we'll get this thing all put to bed," said Skylab 2 commander Alan L. Bean as the astronauts worked to close down the space station. "We're coming home tomorrow."

Bean and his crewmates, Jack R. Lousma and Owen K. Garriott, spent Monday tidying up the orbiting laboratory and preparing it for the Skylab 3 crew, which is scheduled to spend 56 days aboard the space station starting Nov. 11

The Skylab 2 splashdown target is 230 miles southwest of San Diego, Calif., in the Pacific Ocean. Officials said the target may be moved to the northwest a number of miles if Hurricane Irah, which is 500-600 miles south of the splashdown point, becomes a hazard.

Bean spotted the storm off the coast of western Mexico on Monday and told Mission Control it was "a beautiful hurricane."

Bean, Garriott and Lousma will board their Apollo command ship Tuesday morning. They will conduct a "hot fire" test of some steering rockets and undock the command module from Skylab at 3:50 p.m. EDT.

After moing away from the orbiting laboratory, the astronauts will fire the powerful service propulsion rocket on the Apollo craft. This will slow their speed, cause them to fall from orbit and streak into the atmosphere toward the ocean.

Splashdown will come at 6:20 p.m. EDT.

Re-entry will be tricky and complex for the astronauts.

Two of four steering rockets on the Apollo spacecraft are disabled. The astronauts must fly the craft with only half its steering power.

Officials are confident the spacemen can fly the crippled craft to earth safely, but a rocket is poised at Cape Kennedy for a possible rescue mission and officials said it could be ready for launch within a week

Oil Slick Farms Link To Missing Aircraft

BOSTON (AP) - Coast Guard searchers continued to scour Boston Harbor yesterday for clues to a missing twin engine aircraft that disappeared in heavy fog Sunday night on an approach to Logan International Airport.

The crew of a Coast Guard helicopter said it sighted an oil slick in the harbor and divers were dispatched to that area. However, a spokesman said even if the slick were connected with the downed plane it could have drifted several hundred yards.

The harbor surrounds the airport on the sides.

Mrs. Ripley Miller, 36, of Wilmington, Mass., was identified as the pilot and only occupant of the missing Beechcraft. She was flying for Corporate Air Inc. of Hartford, transporting cancelled checks to Boston banks, a spokesman for Butler Aviation Corp. said.

UMass Debate Team

The UMass Debate team ended last year on a very successful note with teams attending such prestigious tournaments as the Novice Nationals in Chicago and the National Debate Tournament in Annapolis Maryland at the U.S. Naval Academy.

Not leting the glories end here, the debate team is now intending to clean up any many new tournaments in this new year.

Debating the topic of the energy crisis, the teams of Paul Goslin and Howard Steinburg and John Adams and John Cross whall be matching their wits against other schools in Pennsylvania at the Washington and Jefferson College Tournament at the end of the September.

Getting an early start in October two of these teams will be going out on October 5 to meet even tougher competition at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Mass. The following week Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass. will be the scene of another tournament attended by the teams of Anne Mary DesFosses and Jill Peltin and Ken Becker and Bill Nosel.

Plans are now underway to attend more tournaments such as the Plattsburgh State University Tournament and the Wake Forest University Tournament in North Carolina.

''Laboratory In Group Dynamics''

The Division of Humanistic Applications of Social and Behavioral Sciences in Education at the School of Education is offering a course in human interaction for undergraduates.

The course, titled "Laboratory in Group Dynamics," is primarily intended to be a laboratory training experience which will focus on personal growth and group development. The major part of the classroom time will be devoted to T-Group sessions which will provide an opportunity for each participant to: develop a greater insight into himself/herself and his personal value system; develop an awareness of his/her impact on others; her; increase his/her senstivity to the feelings of others and his/her understanding of the behavior of others; examine and experience the forces that operate in a group as well as his own effectiveness in assuming roles that are needed in building and maintaining a group; and relate the small group experiences to the processes of change, motivation, leadership, organizations, and larger social systems. Outside reading and theory/skill sessions in class, hopefully will contribute to an understanding of group dynamics theory and practice as well as to individual development.

The course meets from October 4 through November 27 on Tuesday and Thursday, 4:00-6:30. A number of openings are available and can be registered for in Room 121 at the School of Education. The course is listed as EDU 386 Lex 0300. It carries 200 modular credits (2 university credits).

If you would like more information concerning the nature of the course contact the Cluster at 5-0918.

Alcoholism Funds Fight Release

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts and Wisconsin filed a class actionsuit Monday on behalf of all 50 states to seek release of $30 million in alcoholism funds frozen by the federal government, Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said.

The case was filed in U.S. District Court in Washington to force release of the funds by the Department of Health Education and Welfare.

Massachusetts would receive $700,000, if the funds are released. The money would beused for state programs for the treatment and rehabilitation of alcoholics.

Look To The Sky

Hey Babe, Let's Get Married

City and Town Clerks across the Commonwealth have been advised by State Secretary John F.X. Davoren that an opinion rendered by the office of the Attorney General establishes a new procedure for the issuance of marriage license to persons under twnety-one years of age.

Massachusetts residents, both male and female, who are 18 years of age or over no longer are required to gain parental consent to marry in this state, Secretary Davoren noted.

According to the recent decision of the Attorney General, Davoren went on to say, any person establishing residence in this state for marriage purposes is subject to the same law and may decide imdependently to enter into a marriage contract once he or she has attained the age of 18.

In instances where a Massachusetts domicile is not established, Secretary Davoren pointed out, the City or Town Clerk must be guided by the laws of the state in which the marriage license applicant claims domicile. There are presently 23 jurisdictions including the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico that require the male to attain the age of at least 19, and in some instances 20 and 21, before he can marry without parental consent, Secretary Davoren related.

Because of the numerous inquiries directed to his office by both municipal clerks and applicants for marriage licenses, Secretary Davoren sought a legal ruling by the Attorney General.

Secretary Davoren further pointed out that any applicant, 18 years of age or over, claiming domicile in a particular city or town, must be permitted to file marriage intentions in the community.

However, he added, if an applicant, regardless of age, indicates his domicile to be a city or town in Massachusetts other than the one in which he seeks to file marriage intentions, that person must be referred to the city or town of domicile for the purpose of filing intentions.

Secretary Davoren stressed that in the event an applicant filing a marriage intention is under the age of 21, and claims residency in another state, the laws of the domiciliary state must be adhered to.

The Attorney General's opinion clearly states that a male between the ages of 18 and 21, whose parents reside in a state other than Massachusetts, may establish a domicile within the Commonwealth for the purpose of contracting marriage. Secretary Davoren further pointed out that the determination whether a person between the ages of 18 and 21 has made his new Massachusetts residence his domicile for marriage purposes is a question of fact to be determined by all the circumstances of the case.

A Correspondance Course? Nope! A Newspaper Course!

Amherst, Mass.--College-accredited courses will be available to newspaper readers in Massachusetts for the first time this year through a cooperative program directed by the University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education.

The core of the project will be 20 1400-word lectures published in eight newspapers beginning Sept. 30. With supplementary materials, attendance at two seminars and other work, home study, those who enroll can earn two semester hours of credit.

The course, originating at the University of California at San Diego, is "America and the Future of Man," an interdisciplinary exploration of such current problems as population, environment and energy. The lectures are written by a group of selected scholars.

Besides the newspapers' lectures, the course includes local informal discussion groups, two regional seminars, one in December and one in February, and a packet of required supplementary materials--a textbook, self-study guide and a board game that ties the course together and involves the student in the problems.

Credit will be granted by the three participating institutions and course requirements will be determined by the institutions granting credit.

Anyone may participate in the course; those enrolling for credit must register by Nov. 23 and pay $60 tuition, which includes cost of materials. Details will be published in participating newspapers. Registration is through Courses by Newspaper, Division of Continuing Education, UMass-Amherst, 01002.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

I enjoy laughing with Gemini, holding heated discussions with Aquarius, dining with Cancer, exchanging confidences with Scorpio. It seems difficult, for me, to always make sense with Sagittarius, to go too long without bruising the feelings of Taurus, without communicating with Capricorn. I never pretend to fully understand Virgo, to always agree with Aries, to be free of envy of Leo, to have complete confidence in Libra. There is much that I have to learn about the zodiacal signs and some vociferous mail from readers never lets me forget.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your ability to charm associates comes into play. Some, who considered you overly aggressive, may now say that you merely have plenty of get-up-and-go. Display natural inventiveness. Be an individual to your fingertips. You will have backing of co-workers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Follow through on hunch. Learn by teaching. Share information. Aquarius, Leo persons are in picture. You will be dealing with those who can be just as stubborn as--you! Affair of heart may be featured. Love is here to stay.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent versatility, natural abilities. You will be trying many things, experimenting, thinking and changing--and you will feel alive! Sagittarian is in picture. You get news of property and values. You also have chance to build.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study Gemini message. You may feel there is too much, too soon. But there also is a way. You discover the way by asking. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Be what you are--you will receive backing from solid source.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are able to sell, to put ideas across, to gain from special efforts. Gemini, Virgo persons could figure prominently. Be prepared for change, variety and possible travel. Restless associate issues challenge. Sense of humor is important.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You get what you want--but you may not want what is good for you. Avoid excess. Keep peace within family. Strive to break new ground. Taurus, Libra persons could figure prominently. Money surprise is due. Don't waste!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Aura of mystery surrounds some activities. Break through clouds of obscurity. Facts are available if you seek them. Key is not to fear truth. Work in conjunction with organization, charity group, hospital.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Reward comes your way through business project, professional endeavor. Accept responsibility. You can deal from position of strength. Popularity is higher than usual. Capricorn, Cancer persons are likely to be in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Obtain hint from Scorpio message. Chips are down. Decision is made--past fades and future beckons. Know it and act like you are aware of it. Stop feeding yourself sledgehammer words like, "It should have been" or "If only. . ." Instead, maintain positive attitude.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your creative resources will surprise even you--there is change, dynamic style. You perceive, see ahead, get finger on pulse of public. What you write, say, advertise meets with healthy response. Travel, study and enlarge horizons.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The occult or what is hidden seems to command your interest. You are fascinated now by the unknown, by lost horizons, by unseen resources. Your natural capabilities are highlighted. You teach and learn. You get credit for what you do.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Forces tend to be scattered. You may be judging too quickly. Key now is to wait for others to state their cases. You do best by listening and learning. Build bridge of goodwill; highlight public relations.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, have fine imagination but tend to brood. You are drawn to films, illusions, to endeavors which permit use of creative capabilities. You are sensitive, prescient. You know when something of importance is to occur. August was one of your most significant months of this year--in October you make new start.

The "Say Hey Kid" called it quits last Thursday morning in New York. For twenty-two years, Willie Mays had excited crowds in New York with the Giants, then in San Francisco when the Giants moved in 1954, and finally back in New York with the Mets. A tremendous all-around baseball player and athlete, Mays hit over 660 home runs during his long and distinguished career. It is expected that Mays will remain with the Mets in some capacity, eigher managerial or administrative.

Willie Mays, A Living Legend

By BOB ESTELLE

Early in 1950, a young ballplayer named Willie Mays left the Birmingham Black Barons of the old Negro League and took the step by signing a minor league contract with the New York Giants' farm system. Since Jackie Robinson had made it with the old Brooklyn Dodgers, the entire major league system had been looking for Blacks who could help their clubs. Giant's owner Horace Stoneham felt he had a good one in the Alabama native, but little was he to know how good.

Mays started his career in Jersey City, New Jersey; went to Minneapolis a year later and was called up to the parent team in May of 1951. At the time, he did not want to go but Giant manager Leo Durocher needed a centerfielder very badly. Mays got the job.

Mays started off slowly but became a key man in a pennant race that terminated with the first National League playoff series ever. In those playoffs, Mays is not remembered. That year was the year Bobby Thomson's home run scored three runs in the ninth inning of the final playoff game with the rival Dodgers.

Two years in the Army followed but the "Say-Hey" kid of Coogan's Bluff came back in 1954 to win the MVP, triple crown and lead Leo Durocher's Giants to the only World Championship that Durocher has ever won. In that series, Mays will always be remembered for the catch he made on Vic Wertz in the tenth inning of the first game.

Willie went on to become the best centerfielder the game was ever seen for the New York, and later, San Francisco Giants. He lead the Giants to another pennant in 1962, getting a key single in a ninth inning rally of the third playoff game with the Dodgers. In 1969, he became the first man since Babe Ruth to hit 600 runs.

Although he was aging, the spirit was still willing. In 1971, at the age of 40, he led the Giants to a divisional title and title and starred in the playoffs against the eventual champion Pittsburgh Pirates.

By this time Mays was earning $165,000 a year. This owner Stoneham could not afford. Yet, he wanted this man who had led his franchise to have financial security. Mrs. Joan Payson, the owner of the New York Mets, was a Giant stockholder at one time. She was, and still is, a Willie Mays fan. She had always desired Willie's services as a ballplayer. So Willie became a New York Met in May 1972, twenty-one years after he had joined the Giants.

The New York fans loved it, especially since Mays hit a home run that won his first game as a Met on May 14. But it was all downhill from there. The Willie Mays that Mets fans saw was only half the ballplayer the "Say-Hey" kid of the Polo Grounds. He was embarrassed by his age which had robbed him of the skills he once possessed. As they say, the spirit was willing but the flesh...

Mays has stayed on. The Mets are now in a scramble for a division title nobody seems to want. He is 42 and had a bad shoulder which has converted him from center field to first base. He played little in the past month. Finally, he announced his retirement from baseball as a player this past week.

It was time to do so as after 660 career home runs and pl.-- a lifetime average batting average of .300. Willie Mays cannot play as he once did. This is too bad but all things must pass. Willie has given many a fan numerous thrills during his great career.

He will remain with the Mets in a coaching capacity as he has a ten year contract running through 1982 but it will not be the same without him in centerfield for the Mets, or anyone else. So thank you Willie for all you gave baseball, and good-bye. You will be missed.

Shula Not About To Panic

MIAMI (AP)-"They dominated us," Coach Don Shula said Monday of the loss that snapped Miami's streak of 18 victories in National Football regular season and playoff games.

"Their offensive line handled our defensive line and their defense handled our offense," Shula said of Miami's 12-7 loss to the Oakland Raiders Sunday.

The Dolphins set a National Football League rushing record with 2,960 yards in 14 regular season games in 1972. But they were held to just 105 yards on the ground by the Raiders Sunday and added only 90 yards in the air despite 25 pass attempts by quarterback Bob Griese.

Shula might be concerned about the failure of his team, but he isn't about to panic as he prepares his team for Sunday's home game against the New England Patriots.

The defeat kept the Dolphins from tieing the 1933-34 Chicago Bears for the most consecutive regular season victories, 17, and Shula admitted, "It was a big ball game for us. It would have put us in an area no other team had been beofre, and made us 2-0 this year.

Ruggers Open With Four Straight Wins

By WADIE BAHOU

The UMass Rugby team, coming off its first victorious season in a long while, started things off with a bang this past weekend by winning four games and losing none. The UMass "A" team, in scoring its highest point total ever, demolished Maine 57-3, while the "B's" shutout the Maine second team 16-0. In Sunday's games the "A's" relied more on a sound defense than their potent offense in nipping UNH 6-0. The "B" team, however, had less trouble, rolling over the UNH seconds 30-4.

Saturday's "A" team, despite playing two men short for most of the game, saw eight of the thirteen players score, while amassing their 57 points. Inside center Brian Kain scored 15 points, while Walter Elsmore scored two tries and set up two more with some fantastic running. Paul Greenfield also contributed with two tries.

Sunday, it was once again Brian Kain who led the Ruggers by scoring all the points on two penalty kicks, while defensively, fullback Leo Mulcahy and Captain "Piggy" Tkacik shone.

The UMass "B" team followed up the "A's" successfully both times as John Awtrey and Tony Kalinowski each scored a try on Saturday to pace the UMass offense. On Sunday, however, the story was exciting Chris Walters, who drew many a round of applause from the crowd with his brilliant running and kicking as he scored two tries and set up two more.

Riggs: Jump?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bobby Riggs has scrapped plans to leap from the London Bridge this week because the water is too shallow, his publicity agent said Monday.

Larry Lawrie said Riggs decided against the jump after finding out water under the bridge was only six feet deep. Riggs had promised to jump off a bridge if he lost his tennis match with Billie Jean King last week in Houston.

Riggs reportedly is looking for a bridge with more water under it.

Shoulder Injury Shelves Namath For Eight Weeks

By ALEX SACHARE
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Quarterback Joe Namath, the New York Jets' injury-plagued superstar who suffered a separation of his right shoulder in Sunday's game against the Baltimore Colts, will probably not have to undergo surgery but is expected to be out of action for most of the remainder of the 1973 season.

"Namath's shoulder separation has been reduced," Dr. James A. Nicholas, the Jets' orthopedic surgeon, said Monday after studying X rays of the injury taken Sunday night. "Although the final decision will not be made for two or three days, as of now there is no plan to operate."

Nicholas said Namath might be able to return to action for the Jets' final four games of the season, which means he would miss the club's next eight contests.

UMass head soccer coach Al Rufe surveys the situation. Chances are he won't be this calm this afternoon when the Minuteman booters open their season againct BC.

Rufe Faces Old Club As UM Opens vs. BC

By STEVE DECOSTA

The UMass soccer team opens its season today as it hosts the Boston College Eagles in a 2:30 tilt to be played on the fields across from Boyden.

BC has the potential to make the Minutemen's debut an exciting contest. According to UMass head coach Al Rufe, who recently scouted the Eagles, they are a "well coached team with several outstanding individual performers."

The key man in the BC attack is John Cappiello. A versatile performer, Cappiello can play both left and right wings and according to Rufe "he can do a lot of nice things with the ball."

Another man the UMass defense will have to guard closely is halfback Bob Priestly. A scoring threat from midfield, Rufe considered Priestly one of BC's better players and stated that the Minutemen will have keep an eye on him right from the outset.

Mike Perry and John Pieffer anchor the Eagle defense at fullback. Both are reported to have good, strong clearing kicks while also being fleet enough afoot to keep up with their opponents' attack men.

As a team, BC uses a 4-2-4 attack. Their fullbacks often play four abreast up near midfield, hoping to catch their foes offside.

Hoping to dent BC's four fullback defense will be Ken Banda, Tom Coburn, and Brian McKenney. Rufe has settled on this trio for his starting front line following weeks of head-to-head competition for the slots. Should any of these three falter, however, a host of others, headed by Charlie Palano, stands ready to fill in.

Depth-wise, the strongest Minuteman position is halfback. This could change, however, as several of the midfielders are plagued by nagging injuries. Mark Tyma, Bill MacDonald, Mike Nugent, and Al Long are all being bothered by various leg injuries. All are expected to play, with the possible exception of MacDonald, and, if all goes well, the starters will be Tyma, Nugent, and Jim Vollinger.

At outside fullbacks, with the tough job of containing Cappiello will be Curt Syer and Bob Merrill. The up-full will be Gary McKenna and the sweeper-back duties will be handled by Dan Ouellette. Carl Vercollone will start in the goal.

The Minutemen will stay with their basic 3-3-4 attack unless more scoring punch is needed, in which case they will switch to a 4-2-4.

KICKING IT AROUND—Al Rufe is a former head coach of the team he will face today. As a grad student at BC, Rufe led the Eagles to a 9-4 record in their first varsity season.

The Eagles already have one game behind them. BC lost its opener to Babson, 2-1 on Saturday.

Don't forget; game time is 2:30.

Expos Pirates Split

By DAVE EIBEL

The Montreal Expos and Pittsburgh both failed to gain ground on thefirst-place New York Mets, as they divided a twi-night doubleheader in Montreal. The Expos won the first game 5-4 with starter Steve Renko winning his fifteenth game, after winning only one all last season. Willie Stargell's forty-third homerun, tying him with Dave Johnson for the National League homerun leadership, couldn't bring the Bucs back far enough.

The Pirates came back in the second game to beat the Expos and Ernie MacAnally by a score of 3-0. Nelson Briles pitched the shutout, winning his fourteenth game in the process.

Reds Clinch Western Crown

CINCINNATI (AP) — Tony Perez and Andy Kosko boomed home runs Monday night and the Cincinnati Reds clinched the National League's West Division championship, defeating San Diego 2-1.

It was the third division title in four years for Cincinnati.

Baney, a 25-year-old right-hander who was cut from two minor league clubs this season, stopped the Padres on six hits until the eighth inning before being lifted. It was his second major league victory. His last start was in 1969 for the Seattle Pilots of the American League.

Perez' 26th homer, which broke a tie for team leadership, came in the fourth inning off loser Rich Troedson, 7-9. Kosco tagged Troedson for his ninth in the sixth inning.

The victory, before 16,395, clinched the Western division title with five games remaining and was the Reds' 58th triumph in a torried 81-game stretch to overcome an 11-game deficit on July 1.

King Has Last Word

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Billie Jean King got the last word in the tennis battle of the sexes:

She said Monday she would not agree to a rematch with Bobby Riggs whom she beat 6-4, 6-3, 6-3 in Houston last week to settle a women's lib score after Riggs beat Margaret Court last May.

"I didn't want to play him in the first place...," said Mrs. King. "Margaret opened the door, I closed it...There isn't any more reason to play Bobby. We proved Bobby wrong when he said he could beat any woman."

How Soon We Forget

Down Memory Lane—The ticket sellers were a bit surprised...The publicity was a bit weak...But when the event began to take shape, you had to ask yourself just what time, memory, and those line to the Southwest tunnel really meant...New York in the spring...how soon we forget...how soon we forget...how soon we forget...

It was pathetic, nearly a sin, and a time not to worry, not to cry, but to think. It was no one's fault. But if we get anything from it...just maybe, just maybe a dose of reflection and a hit of realism is the answer. But the Doctor came home...and there were not any trumpets to greet him, no Cadillac to deliver him, and with 32 points and his new club, the New York Nets,as a shield, Julius Erving came as close to home as he and his $300 suits will get...He left with but a whisper...

A thousand might have stopped by...But there was to be no pilgrimage to the Springfield Civic Center that Saturday night. Josh has flooded that market as of late. The days of the Southwest Tunnel and the 3:30 lines are long gone, baby...Dr. Julius Erving, the NIT of ol, and that tailored afro from days gone by, are lost in the memory of McAnn's bar in New York City where the original Erving stories were told. The Dr. is above all that now.

Erving no longer belongs to the University of Mass. We shouldn't try to claim him...We shouldn't try to shower him...We shouldn't pay him homage...We didn't even graduate him. There's a handful left on campus that really knew him and knew what the real Erving was all about. For most of the students just don't give a shit or really care that Erving brought the NIT's and the exposure of late to them now...How soon we forget.

Let us please leave Julius now. Sure, he's big time. So is Greg Landry. But very few know or really care that he once threw for Vic Fusia (now in Sports Promotion) in the pre-MacPherson Fenaissance. If you're BLACK and on this campus to date, then I say the Dr. is yours. MAN, you can have him. For you can appreciate the "J" in a cultural sense. For us WHITIES on campus can only accept HIM for what HE was..To a black man, the "J" is real. That's one of the reasons why very few UMies saw him the other night...Very few cared...Most forgot.

The Dr. doesn't need the University of Massachusetts. Give him Jack Leaman, give him Ray Wilson...and the rest of the University of Massachusetts...the crowds that gave the Cage and Erving a personna...those that brag that he went here...and thos that say they saw him...can stuff it. Erving is gone. Let the man chase his epitaph...But if you're BLACK, be proud...And if you're enrolled at Mass Aggie, then you can claim the Doctor...For maybe you, and only you-you who slap your hand and clasp your thumb and jive to the rhapsody of the Doctor, can call him your own...How soon the rest forget.

So the Doctor looked at a frustrated Larry Kenon in the Net lockeroom afterwards..."Hey, Dr. K...I got a wrap for you man"...Kenon...(feeling a bit warmer as the MAN gave him a glance..."Solid, J...real solid"...

The autograph seekers were few. Stockton and the CBS cameras were long gone. The abbreviated afro was now a full fro...He no longer sported a Redman blazer...The outfit was a bit much...Madison Ave. for sure...

It was on to North Carolina for Dr. Don't bother calling him back. A very charming black girl gave him a smile and off they went into their world...A world that the "J" has made, has challenged, and mastered...You have to be pretty black to appreciate it...How soon we all forget...

Agnew Denies Charges: Looks Toward Congress

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Vice President Spiro T. Agnew asked the House of Representatives Tuesday to investigate accusations that he was involved in political corruption.

Agnew denied wrongdoing in a man-to-man meeting with President Nixon, then took his case to Congress.

The vice president acted after Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson announced he had authorized federal prosecutors to take their evidence against Agnew before a grand jury in Baltimore Thursday.

Agnew made his request of the House in a letter to Speaker Carl Albert. Agnew personally took his letter to Capitol Hill, where he met for more than an hour with Albert and other House leaders.

In the letter, the vice president said his lawyers had advised him the Constitution bars criminal proceedings against a vice president while he holds office.

He said he therefore could not acquiesce in any criminal proceedings, or look to them for vindication.

"In these circumstances, I believe, it is the right and duty of the vice president to turn to the House," he said.

Agnew's letter did not mention impeachment proceedings as a forum for the full inquiry he requested. Nor, said Albert, did Agnew mention that possibility during the meeting.

The request caught congressional leaders by surprise, and there was no immediate word as to what the House might do about it.

Albert, asked whether impeachment had been ruled out, replied simply: "Nothing has been ruled out."

A spokesman for Richardson said the attorney general stood by his decision to have the evidence against Agnew presented to the grand jury.

Nixon said Agnew had personally assured him of his innocence. He said the vice president, like any citizen, is entitled to the presumption of innocence. And he praised Agnew's performance as his vice president.

Agnew was informed by federal prosecutors last month that he was under investigation for possible criminal violations of tax, bribery, extortion and conspiracy laws.

Agnew left the Capitol declining comment. "The letter speaks for itself," he said. But he added he might have something further to say in a few days.

He left behind an instant debate on his request, his motives, and the possible courses of action open to the House.

Agnew's letter was read to the House, after Albert and the other leaders trooped back to the chamber from their meeting with the vice president.

While Agnew cited legal arguments against criminal proceedings against him, his request for a House inquiry also appeared aimed at getting the whole matter into a forum less restricted than the secrecy of a grand jury.

Any House panel investigating the case would have a Republican minority, and members who might offer a defense and, in effect, cross-examine Agnew's accusers.

In his letter, Agnew discussed the precedent of a House investigation of Vice President John C. Calhoun nearly 150 years ago. Calhoun, accused of war profiteering, was investigated by a House committee and cleared.

Later, in a different dispute, Calhoun resigned.

Among the possible forums, should the House decide on an inquiry, would be the judiciary committee or a committee created specifically to handle the Agnew case.

Agnew said he was confident that if the inquiry is granted "I shall be vindicated by the House."

Some Democrats suggested Agnew was trying to fend off the criminal proceedings by turning to the House. One of them, Rep. Charles Vanik, D-Ohio, called it "a dilatory action."

Bromery Interview

Integration Of Interests A Must

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

Discussions between University officials and members of Local 1776 are beginning to broaden in scope beyond the specifics of the parking proposal which prompted recent union strike, said university Chancellor Randolph Bromery in a Collegian interview.

"There is no sense treating the symptoms and not the disease," The roots of the problem, according to Bromery, is the "aggrevation and frustration" of the rank and file union members who have felt "historically and with good reason" that they were not an integral part of the university community. Yet, we are dependent on them to provide needed services.

Bromery cited the recent confrontation between the union and the university over the new parking plan as an outgrowth of this feeling of frustration.

Briefly outlining the history of the present plan, Bromery explained that a transportation and parking commission composed of students, faculty, and members of labor unions was set up to study the parking situation on campus and to suggest proposals for a new parking plan. The labor representatives on the commission later withdrew. It was the same commission, without representatives, form labor, that eventually devised the parking plan announced at the end of last semester. When this proposal met with widespread opposition, it was simplified and revised over the summer. The present plan prompted a strike of employees of Local 1776, and is at the center of continuing negotiations between union representatives and university officials.

Bromery said that he felt the failure of the transportation and parking commission was that it did not integrate the interests of three segments of the university community-students, faculty, and labor-or establish interrelationships necessary for discussion, negotiation, and compromise.

It is important, and vital, said Bromery, that we seek to create a relationship and an environment where these people and all segments of the community can be happy.

"Through consultation with governance units and, in addition, using the expertise and intellectual resources of the university, we may work out better labor relations, residential hall environments, and parking and transportation policies in the university in the same way we work out better academic programs."

Bromery cited implementation of the new governance plan a priority. The plan defines the relationship between the various levels of university governance and "clearly defined the path followed by a proposal through the offices of the Chancellor, the President, and the Board of Trustees before it is implemented." Prior to the adoption of the governance plan, these procedures were not formally spelled out.

A common misunderstanding of the governance plan, said Bromery, is that it is not designed to talk about the internal matters of the campus. It concerns only university wide matters. "While the number of matters involved will not be large," said Bromery, "the issues involved will be major importance."

Also to help the implementation of the new governance document, Bromery said he is calling together the top representatives of various governance groups "to advise me on those areas where there is a conflict of who has primary responsibility."

Building good relationships between the various governance bodies will be the most difficult aspect of implementing the new plan, said Bromery. "If we are unable to work together, the new document won't mean a thing."

Lesbianism Is The Feminist Solution

Jill Johnson Speaks Out

"There are two classes of people-- one boys one women"

By DANA IRLBACHER

"Lesbianism is THE feminist solution," said Jill Johnston to an audience of 300 last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Ms. Johnston, columnist and author of two books, Marmalade Me and Lesbian Nation, was guest speaker for the Distinguished Visitors Program.

The problem with the feminist movement, she continued, was that it pointed out many problems but offered no solutions to women. Feminist complaints outline the difficulties of women relating to men, not women relating to women.

"Until all women are convinced that lesbians are women, there will be no political revolution."

Ms. Johnston read from her latest book, Lesbian Nation, concerning her fears and frustrations during earlier years in college, where she met her second lover. "I could never mention it to my college - mates," she added.

Due to societal pressures later in life she, twice, "gave up and married." She is now divorced.

Ms. Johnston received some criticism during a question-answer period with the audience, but maintained that a woman must discover and accept a common principle before the lesbian solution is to be understood:

"There are two classes of people--one boys, one women," she said. Boys constitute the "ruling class", and women must "remove themselves from the oppressor."

During one point of audience questioning, a male student asked her, amid boos, what her problem was in relating to a "real" man, refering to a sexual relationship she had had with an English teacher. Whom she described as "short and decrepit."

There was no problem, she answered. "He got it up, didn't he?"

Another audience member, female, disagreed with the speaker's criticism of the feminist movement, adding that going to bed has nothing to do with the oppressing situation.

On homosexuality, Ms. Johnston spoke of it affirmatively. "That leaves more women for us women," she said.

'I'm Getting Back To Being An Individual Instead Of A Militant Lesbian'

By CINDY GONET
and SHARON HUGHES

Like a fine German wine, Jill Johnston has mellowed and become more distinctive with age.

In Lesbian Nation, Jill speaks of revolution by lesbians, "Until all women are lesbians there will be no true political revolution. No feminist per se has advanced a solution outside of accommodation to the man."

"I've now given up on the revolution because of "class trashing": the dividing up of women into opposing groups." The long range revolutionary goal is the combination of the two groups into one in which all are equal, economically, politically or socially.

"It is the sameness of this theory that I reject. I'm getting back to being an individual instead of a militant lesbian," Jill explained yesterday to a small group of women at Everywoman's Center.

She seems to have become more of an individual herself, feeling and doing what feels good and looks good, "like shaving my legs. Feminists ask me why I shave my legs and I answer...It feels good".

She's wearing long woolen socks, the kind you use to go skating. They're pulled up over her worn out jeans and inside her work boots. Her faded jacket is hanging from her chair onto the floor.

Jill wears her memories around her neck in the form of medalions from the bullfights in Spain, an old key chain from a broken-down jalopy and St. Theresa. She laughs, smiles and grimaces to the questions put to her. She's encircled by women with their hands on their chins, attentively listening and occasionally nodding in agreement.

"Individualism to me is to do what you feel like doing. Within the privacy of a supportive group, I don't want to get into arguments. But," she added, "I do enjoy taking on a negative trip in public."

"Like the panel discussion I was on in Philadelphia. They had a woman there who was like the perfect "woman-mother". She had a nice round face, three little children and was happily married (or so she said)."

"Did you try to talk to her after the show?" asked a woman.

"No, what could I say. She was into her own trip and I was into mine. If feminism is not about affirming other women I don't know what it's about," Jill answered.

The question of supporting women has always been a central issue in the women's movement as a whole. For example, some women insist they enjoy their role as mother or housewife, or secretary and do not recognize their lives the oppression feminists are fighting.

Should the women's movement attempt to persuade them that in fact they are oppressed? If so, won't the movement alienate moderate women?

Or as Jill put it, "How do you challenge a sexist woman and not negate her at the same time?"

The conclusion that many women (including Jill) have reached is that the movement can effectively deal with many of the broad issues of sexism. However, women must have an element of free choice to deal with the circumstances of their own lives. For that reason, individuality must be respected and women supportive of other women.

Senate Upholds Sarge's Veto Of Racial Inbalance

BOSTON (AP) - On a 22-12 vote, the Senate has upheld a veto by Gov. Francis W. Sargent of a bill that would have suspended the state's unique racial imbalance law for a year.

However another measure, that would undercut the law in Boston by requiring a referendum vote on any change in the city's school districts, received initial approval Monday on a 21-14 vote.

The suspension of the racial imbalance law would primarily have affected Springfield, which has begun its fall sessions, without bringing its schools into compliance as directed.

"To suspend the racial imbalance law at this time is not only to condone this action by the city but also to encourage such action in the future there and elsewhere," Sargent said in his veto message.

The governor said, "The time has come to see that equal education becomes a reality, not trying to preserve our present system of quality education only for some."

Dilemma Seen In Married Housing

By BUFFY SPENCER

Last spring, there were 4,097 married students enrolled at UMass. This year's figure is not compiled yet, but will be at least as high. For these students, the problem of low-cost housing is perhaps more acute than for single students, for whom the problem is often staggering. Many married students suffer for the same reason dorm students do, because Married Student Housing is caught in the same vicious circle as the dorms-low vacancy because of high rates, rate increases because of low vacancies.

There are three projects for married students at UMass. Lincoln and University apartments, the older two, are always full. A 1 bedroom apartment at Lincoln runs about $108 per month, at University, about $113. The problem comes with the newer complex, North Village.

Mr. Donald Pelkey, Director of Married Student Housing at Whitmore, admits "rents at North Village are unfortunately high." One bedroom is $165 per month. North Village, like the dorms, is self-liquidating which means that the rent has to cover the bonds. Because everyone wants Lincoln and University Apartments, North Village has a vacancy problem. At the beginning of this semester North Village was faced with 12-13 vacancies.

Compounding the problem is the Married Student Housing policy that leases may be terminated at any time with a sixty day notice. Last spring brought a 62 per cent turnover in North Village. This leaves the apartments vacant in May, June, July, and August. Renting them is almost impossible. This, plus debt service payment, electricity (North Village is all electric), and maintenance costs make it, in the words of Mr. Pelkey, "a significant problem just to break even."

Married Student Housing has a waiting list on computer printout. Offers are first sent out to graduate students, then the rest of the list is gone through twice, then new students are contacted. Still, the vacancies.

Efforts to combat costs are always being sought. MSH is putting out and distributing a handbook on conserving electricity. For policy must be that "if one person wants to keep his door open in the winter to cool it down, then everybody must pay".

The newest scheme has brought a few complaints from some married students. When the fall semester began 100 single students were living in the Campus Center, with no space in the dorms for them. Mr. Corcoran of Student Housing suggested utilizing vacant North Village apartments. The Director of Married Student Housing was admittedly reluctant, feeling that it might be a bad environment for single students. But outweighing this was the chance to prevent further loss of revenue.

So 29 students were moved to North Village under a one semester commitment. They are paying what they would for a dorm and are exempted from purchasing a meal ticket. This money is transferred from the dorm account to Married Student Housing. Mr. Pelkey stressed that this will not make up for revenue lost during the vacant summer months, it will just prevent new losses.

Pelkey mentions a few complaints from the married students about the behavior of the single students but no real problems. MSH aims to keep rents at North Village stable this year and next, in hopes that when competing apartments go up North Village may look more inviting.

CC Hotel

Nakedness Is No Problem

By M. G. COLLINS

Doubtless if you and twenty of your friends went careening about the Campus Center Hotel naked and hysterical, you would attract attention. But people running naked through the corridors does not seem to be a daily occurance at the hotel. Life is quiet and serene on the upper levels of the Campus Center even though many of the rooms at the hotel are being occupied by students.

With the initiation of the $9.75 student room rate student use of hotel space has been moderate. According to Mr. Don Witkoski, manager of the hotel, most of the business from the student body comes from people who are stranded on campus after the bus service cutback, people who are to wasted to find their way home at night and, perennially, people with girlfriends. Now that football has opened up a seasonal phenomenon has developed; students renting rooms to utilize the color television privledges that are included with each. Student occupancy is a shade heavier on football weekends and good t.v. movie nights.

The Campus Center Hotel also provides a reasonable alternative to the sensory bombardment and brain fatigue incurred through living in the dorm. The place is noise free and locked up in a single you can achieve that degreee of isolation conducive to studying without fleeing campus all together.

The hotel maintains a hassel free attitude about its student guests. So long as nothing overt happens the hotel management maintains a low profile. Most of the problems that occur with the rooms the management racks up to the "general wear and tear" category. Since students have to present their ID's when registering most of the damage done to the rooms is easily traceable. Noise complaints, Mr. Witkoski says, can usually be handled by a phone call and a polite request to turn the din down. Orgiastic activity and heavy damage to the premises, such as folks kicking the televisions in and lighting the drapes on fire, is not a problem. Mr. Witkoski refuses to generalize about his student guests. Some guy barfing on the rug, he feels, is not representative of the entire student population.

REFLECTIONS ON YOUR MIND—How do you like the Campus Center backwards? Almost as good as forwards, heh? (Or almost as bad depending on what you think of our concrete waffle.) Take it any way you like it, because it's yours, and you'll be dishing it out through the nose whether you use it or not.

Just One O' Them Days

By MIKE KNEELAND

Things usually go better for J. Edgar Slinky, a rather shy student who asked not to be identified by his real name.

It started last night when the studious-Medical Technology major decided to study for a math exam until 4 a.m.

Before going to sleep, J. Edgar set his music alarm. But the radio failed to wake him in the morning. He had set the radio to a New York City station and the radio lost the reception by morning.

So J. Edgar awoke, on his own, at 8:15 for his 8:00 exam.

Speeding to school in his '73 Volkswagon he almost hit a truck. The driver gave him the finger and some choice comments.

When he finally got to his class there were 10 minutes left for him to do his 30-minute exam. He flunked.

He walked back to his car after the class. There was a $5 ticket attached to his wiper. He had parked for the 10 minutes in lot 6, next to his class, rather than his assigned lot, #26.

Returning to his apartment he paid off a bet to his room-mate. He had bet on the New Orleans Saints who lost to Dallas 40-3 Monday night.

Kennedy Hits Postal Hikes

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy urged the Cost of Living Council Tuesday to ensure that Phase 4 regulations are strictly applied to proposed postal-rate increases.

In a letter to John T. Dunlop, director of the council, Kennedy called the proposed hikes, including a first-class rate of 10 cents, exhorbitant and inflationary.

Boyle Attempts Suicide Hours Before Court Time

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Former United Mine Workers boss W.A. "Tony" Boyle lay near death yesterday after a suspected suicide attempt within hours of a scheduled court appearance on murder conspiracy charges.

Dr. Milton Gusack, said blood drawn from the comatose Boyle showed large amounts of sodium amytal, a strong barbiturate, and that chances for survival were poor.

Boyle was rushed to the intensive care unit of the George Washington University Medical Center Monday night. Hospital spokesman said they thought at first that he had suffered a stroke.

But Gusack told newsmen at midafternoon that "It was an apparent effort at self-destruction."

The hospital listed Boyle in critical condition in a deep coma, his breathing aided by an automatic ventilating machine. "He would die immediately," without the device, Gusack said.

The 71-year-old Boyle suffers from heart disease, emphysema and hypertension and Gusack said he had been "very depressed over the prospect of his indictment and trial."

A hearing had been scheduled for Tuesday before a U.S. magistrate on Boyle's removal to Pennsylvania to face state murder charges in the 1969 slaying of insurgent union leader Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski and Yablonski's wife and daughter. It was continued until Oct. 24 following word of Boyle's hospitalization.

Gusack, Boyle's personal physician since 1965, said the former union leader came to his office Saturday and that the condition of his heart at that time was such that the court appearance could have been delayed on medical grounds.

But the doctor said that Boyle wanted to pursue his case and not hide behind medical excuses.

"I don't think this was premeditated," Gusack said of the apparent suicide attempt "It was on the spur of the moment."

Gusack said Boyle originally displayed the symptoms of a possible stroke. However, tests were ordered, which is a routine step for treatment. An analysis of Boyle's stomach contents, urine and blood revealed the barbiturate. Gusack said Boyle had been taking the sodium amythal under prescription to make him sleep easier.

Boyle's attorney, Plato Cacheris, said Boyle was in bed when his wife, Ethel, noticed him breathing heavy and called Gusack.

FBI agents arrested Boyle Sept. 6, climaxing a 3 and one-half year investigation by state and federal authorities.

Senate Adds Funds For F-14 Fighters

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

..WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate added $495.5 million to its weapons procurement bill today for purchase of 50 F14 fighter planes for the Navy Marine Corps. The vote was 66 to 26.

The amendment by Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., was based on a new Navy contract with Grumman Corp., the airframe manufacturer which refused to produce the planes under a 1969 contract because of excessive losses.

The Senate Armed Services Committee had recommended $197.6 million authorization while contract negotiations proceeded to carry production through December.

Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., opposed the additional authorization for 50 planes on the grounds that the new Navy-Grumman contract agreement "looks more and more like a bailout."

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., supported the $495.5 million increase. He said the Navy and Marine Corps need the planes and the new agreement "is as good as we are going to reach."

As the Senate prepared to go into an afternoon closed door session on the Trident submarine, two senators said the Navy was engaging in a lobbying campaign to prevent a production slowdown.

Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H., told a news conference the Navy testified in private that the existing Poseidon submarine fleet would last 25 years, but now is "shifting gears" and tell senators that 20 years is the limit.

Sen. Peter H. Dominick, R-Colo., said nobody wants to stop production of the Trident, only to slow it down by two years at a first year saving of $885.4 million.

The rare closed door session of the Senate was requested by Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., to discuss military strategy in opposing the Trident slowdown.

The slowdown, which would delay completion of the first vessel from 1978 to 1980, was proposed by McIntyre and a seven-member minority of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Hunt Reaffirms His Innocence

By DICK BARNES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt concluded two days of Senate testimony with a declaration Tuesday that he acted "with the knowledge and approval and under the direction of high officials of the government."

Accordingly," he said of the Watergate and Ellsberg breakins, "I was engaged in lawful acts."

His eight-hour appearance before the Senate Watergate Committee was delayed once in the afternoon so the obviously worn Hunt could rest briefly.

Hunt acknowledged he was responsible for one group of Cuban-Americans he recruited thinking it acted legally when it helped in the Watergate breakin and another such group believing the same when it broke into the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., asked Hunt who should be quizzed to determine whether Hunt, in turn, had himself acted reasonably in believing the two break-ins were legal as he followed orders to help plan and execute them.

Former presidential aide John D. Ehrlichman and former White House aide Egil Bud Krogh, said Hunt in reference to the Ellsberg break-in.

For the Watergate break-in, he named former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, former White House counsel John W. Dean III, former Nixon deputy campaign chief Jeb S. Magruder, convicted Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy, and "perhaps" former White House special counsel Charles W. Colson.

Hunt finished up his day of mostly fine-point testimony by saying: "I regret my participation but I do not think it justifies my conviction or the punishment which has been imposed upon me."

Dotted through the committee's exploration of many oft-related incidents were these comments from Hunt:

-He has no evidence that President Nixon personally authorized the Watergate Breakin.

"I was questioned very little by the FBI" in its investigation of the break-in.

-Information that Pentagon Papers figure Ellsberg had in fact consulted a psychiatrist came from an FBI report which Hunt presumed was based on wiretap.

-He does not suspect foul play in the death of his wife last December. A commercial airliner she was aboard crashed in Chicago.

Hunt tossed the Senate committee a quickly questioned theory of betrayal by a double agent. And, he threw out broad hints of CIA domestic activity and other planned political operations, which the committee did not immediatley pursue.

Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., after reciting assistance Hunt had received from the Central Intelligence Agency, asked whether Hunt, a longtime CIA operative and later White House consultant, could say the agency had stayed out of domestic activity as required by law.

"No, I can't," said Hunt, "nor can I ever say the CIA has stayed out of domestic activities."

When Baker asked for elaboration, Hunt asked for time to consult his attorney on national security aspects of Baker's inquiry. The senator withdrew his question for later pursuit in a closed committee session.

Moments later, Baker asked Hunt what was so sensitive about two notebooks Hunt says were taken from his White House safe soon after the June 17, 1972, Watergate break-in.

"They would provide a ready handbook by which any investigator could determine the parameters of the Gemstone operation of which Watergate was a part and other operations in which I was involved and contemplated," Hunt replied.

Hunt wasn't asked about the other contemplated operations.

Hunt, who faces a possible 30-year jail sentence which may be reduced if he cooperates with Watergate investigators, presented his double agent theory under questioning by Sen. Edward J. Gurney, R-Fla.

Kissinger Woos Arab Leaders

Five States Boycott Meeting

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - A boycott by five states undercut Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's bid Tuesday for conciliation with the Arab world. But he made a sizeable advance on contacts with European nations.

Iraq, Syria, Libya, Algeria and South Yemen sent their regrets and in a gesture against U.S. Mideast policy passed up a luncheon given by Kissinger at the U.S. mission across the street from the United Nations.

All five boycotters have supported the Palestinian position against recognition of Israel. Libya has an additional quarrel with the United States: Its objections to the presence of the U.S. 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean.

However, 13 other Arab diplomats and a representative of the Arab League showed up for the lunch and joined the new secretary, a Jew, in a toast to peace and friendship.

The snub marred a busy day of diplomacy for Kissinger, topped by an agreement with the European Common market countries to meet within a week to begin formulation of new declarations on economic and political cooperation.

The session, possibly in Washington, may point the way to a trip to Europe by President Nixon for signing by the end of the year.

Several major obstacles remain to be cleared, however, including the role to be played by Japan in the refurbished relationship between the United States and its friends across the Atlantic.

The process was speeded during a 1½-hour meeting between Kissinger and Foreign Minister K. B. Andersen of Denmark representing the nine-member European community.

On a third front, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko warned in an address to the General Assembly that Moscow "shall allow nobody to interfere in our internal affairs."

Soviets Urge Defense Cuts

By GENE KRAMER
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - The Soviet Union today proposed that the five great powers cut their military budgets by 10 per cent and use part of the savings to help developing countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko made the proposal in his annual speech to the U.N. General Assembly. It would apply to the five countries with permanent seats in the Security Council - Russia, the United States, Britain, France and China.

These countries, Gromyko said, spent the most on arms, but "it is also desirable that other states possessing big economic and military potentials should reduce their military potentials, too."

Gromyko told the assembly that achievement of "durable peace on earth" has become "a feasible goal of practical policy."

"The danger of a global confrontation between the two world social systems, which would inevitably result in a dreadful catastrophe for the whole of mankind, is diminishing," he declared.

In connection with the U.N. session, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met for 40 minutes with Canadian Foreign Secretary Mitchell Sharp.

Sharp told Kissinger his country needed to be consulted more often on any new concept for the Atlantic alliance. Kissinger was reported by a Canadian official to have responded that he was aware of and understood Sharp's concern in the matter.

Gromyko, 64-year-old veteran of the diplomatic wars, had at least three more reasons to smile than he did when he blasted the United States at the General Assembly a year ago:

-The Vietnam war, a major roadblock to better relations between Washington and Moscow, has ended.

-East-West and U.S.-Soviet cooperation got the green light after Gromyko and his boss, Soviet Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, visited the United States earlier this year.

Astronauts Back Home After Record Mission

By RICHARD SALTUS
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD USS NEW ORLEANS (AP)-The men of Skylab 2 returned to earth Tuesday from history's longest space mission, a 59½-day odyssey of science.

Officials said astronauts Alan L. Bean, Jack R. Lousma and Owen K. Garriott appeared "in excellent condition" after splashing down in the Pacific Ocean to complete a space voyage of more than 24 million miles.

The spacemen guided their partially crippled Apollo command ship to a 6:20 p.m. EDT landing in a sea laced with whitecaps 225 miles southwest of San Diego, Calif.

"Man, that was a spectacular entry," said Lousma through a special communications hookup after the spacecraft was on the water. "I'd like to do it again."

All three astronauts were able to climb out of their space-craft after it was lifted onto the deck of this prime recovery ship.

They walked to chairs on a nearby platform with unsteady, hesitant gaits, but smiled and waved at sailors crowded nearby for a look at America's newest space heroes.

Doctors had warned that they could suffer from dizziness and possibly nausea because of their long exposure to the weightlessness of space. But the three men, other than an unsteady walk, appeared healthy, in better shape than the Skylab 2 men that ended a 28-day mission June 22.

Each man donned a baseball-style cap as they left the space-craft. They also wore air-inflated suits that helped their hearts, weakened by the long space mission, to pump blood through their legs.

Bean, Garriott and Lousma remained in the chairs on the platform as a forklift transported them 50 feet to a medical laboratory. They were helped inside the lab where doctors immediatley began long physical examinations.

The return to earth went smoothly despite a communications failure which prevented the astronauts from hearing radio calls from Mission Control after their spacecraft was descending via parachute.

Bean, Garriott and Lousma, unable to hear Mission Control, radioed "in the blind" that they were feeling fine. Their microphone stuck and, unknown to them, their conversations were broadcast to the carrier.

They talked of "feeling heavy" as their bodies reacted to their return to earth's gravity.

"Why is this book so heavy?" one asked.

"I feel lighter than when we first landed," Lousma said at one point. "But my feet feel kind of heavy."

Bean and Lousma also talked excitedly of the fireball their spacecraft created as it smashed into the atmosphere at a high speed.

"You should have seen the swirl in that fireball," said Lousma.

"Yeah,' said Bean, "it was so bright I couldn't read" some of the spacecraft instruments.

All three of the men could be heard laughing happily as they waited for the USS New Orleans to pull alongside. They had landed on target but six miles from this recovery carrier.

15 Indicted In Stock Case

NEW YORK (AP) - Fifteen men were accused in a federal indictment Tuesday of a scheme to inflate the price of a Massachusetts firm's stock at a cost of $300,000 to investors.

The conspiracy was said to have been begun in November 1970, and to have involved the stock of Automated Information Systems, Inc., of Needham, Mass.

The firm's stock opened over-the-counter at $1 a share, rose in two months to $5.50 and then plummeted.

The defendants were accused of making illegal payoffs to brokers in pushing the stock on the one hand, while at the same time selling off their holdings at the inflated price.

Named a co-conspirator but not a defendant by the grand jury was Michael Hellerman, who has been cooperating with the government since his involvement in a 1971 stock fraud case.

Journey Means Life To Four Year Old

By RODNEY PINDER
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Claire Puzey has been chosen "Miss British Rail Commuter 1973." The 4-year-old girl must travel 600 miles a week or die.

Claire has no kidneys and makes a 200-mile round trip three times a week from her home in rural Hampshire to be treated on a kidney machine at Guy's Hospital in London.

She has been commuting for three months since her diseased kidneys were removed. Last week her fellow travelers on the 6:26 to London were told why the little girl with the bubbling laugh was making the trip.

They got together and decided to give her a day to remember.

British Rail area manager Harold Ward greeted her Monday at her home station of Christ Church and said: "You have become the sweetheart of the Southern Region."

He gave her a special train badge and handed over the passengers' gift, an inscribed copy of Kenneth Grahame's classic "The Wind in the Willows".

Harry Staff, a publisher, sat Claire on his knee as the train set off and read her the inscription: "Presented to Miss British Rail Commuter 1973, with all good wishes from British Rail staff and 60 commuting companions."

Claire's mother, 30-year-old Pam Puzey, said: "Our only real hope is for Claire to have a kidney transplant. We are anxiously waiting for the hospital to tell us they have found a suitable donor."

Claire later sat on a hospital bed, beside the kidney machine she must be connected to for 30 hours a week, while a nurse read from her new book.

Jill doesn't even hate men..."-No...generally I can tolerate them...individually, some of them suck. My opinion of them varies directly with their manner."

Jill's intense blue eyes flash as she recalls an anecdote about a funny sexist she met..."It was the last plane trip I took and the guy next to me kind of glanced at me sideways when I said that the seat belt felt good; he seemed pretty uptight about feeling and I, well, I'm into feeling good; he finally admitted I was a far out "chick"...I guess it was a compliment."

"It was a different sort of trip that I haven't been into for about four years, like just sitting with a strange guy and talking about everything. He was a very enthusiastic individual," she said.

The rap was humorous at times and heavy at others. Motherhood as women's role in the family was discussed for a while. Motherhood as specifically being the responsibility of the woman to be the prime socializer in the family; to teach the concepts of responsibility, in the good 'ole middle class tradition.

"There's not going to be a mother anymore," remarked one woman wryly.

She was speaking figuratively-women will not accept prime responsibility for the socialization of children while father is away at work. Rather child-rearing will become the responsibility of both parents.

And as the afternoon went on we talked about many more things. Like how children are treated like a species apart from humans; coddled and fussed over instead of making decisions for themselves...and animals, they think too and people can relate to them...and journalism...and law...and society...and change.

Finally, Jill picked her faded blue jean jacket up from the floor, and threw it around her shoulders to the jingle of the long dangling medallions...nice to meet you...goodbye...and left to continue her obligations as a distinguished visitor.

Schultz-Strength Foreseen Dollar, Balance Of Payments

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)-U.S. Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz told the world's financial leaders that the dollar will strengthen and the American balance of payments will move into the black next year.

Finance ministers and central bankers attending the joint annual meeting here of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank welcomed the forecast, saying it brightened chances of monetary reform.

If Shultz's prediction pans out it will mean the first surplus in the U.S. basic balance of payments since 1964.

The basic balance of payments, including trade and long-term investments, is one of three key yardsticks for measuring the outflow of dollars from the United States. It is the measurement most closely watched by economists, since it tends to show longer-term trends.

The postwar international monetary system collapsed two years ago after years of heavy U.S. payments deficits pumped billions of dollars into Western Europe and Japan, eroding the value of the U.S. currency. Shultz' prediction would signal a reversal of that trend.

Shultz said America's trade balance, in deficit for two years in a row, also would show a surplus next year. That means Americans will export more than they import.

REPORTED BECOMING ENGAGED--Prince Charles in the uniform of colonel of the Royal Regiment of Wales, is shown with Lady Jane Wellesley in London in 1972. A London newspaper said Sunday that the 24-year-old prince, heir to the British throne, is on the brink of becoming engaged to Lady Jane, 22, only daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Wellington. Buckingham Palace dismissed the report as "pure newspaper speculation."

Providence Paper Strike

Judge Bans Picketing

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - A temporary injunction was issued Tuesday to ban mass picketing and maintain order outside the strike-bound Providence Journal-Bulletin newspaper plant.

Judge Christopher Del Sesto issued the order at the request of the Providence Journal Co. after days of testimony in the case. "The evidence is clear that persons attempting to enter the Journal building since the strike started have been struck, puched, shoved and kicked," Del Sesto said.

"I don't think it is necessary for the court to wait until someone is seriously injured or killed," he added.

Del Sesto's order was issued against The Newspaper Guild, Local 41, and its president, Frank Keane. The Guild went on strike against the Journal Co. Sept. 13 in a dispute over retroactive wages.

Milton Stanzler, Guild attorney,. said he would seek a stay of Del Sesto's ruling Wednesday and appeal the decision to the state Supreme Court.

The temporary injuncion was expected to clear the way for four craft unions at the paper to begin crossing the Guild's picket lines. Citing fears of injury in crossing the lines, the craft unions have remained off the job since the start of the strike.

Del Sesto's order limited the Guild to 10 pickets at the newspaper's main entrance and a total of 33 at the seven entrances to the building. He said pickets must be three feet apart and walking.

In addition, Del Sesto enjoined the Guild from intimidating, threatening or molesting non-strikers or other persons trying to enter the building. The Guild also was enjoined from interfering with deliveries of newsprint or attacking deivers of newspaper trucks.

The injunction, Del Sesto said, will require the Guild "to stop the illegal acts and obey the law. It will not compel them to go back to work."

Noting that Col. Walter McQueeney, Providence police chief, had testified that about 10 to 15 per cent of the pickets were responsible for picket line disorders, Del Sesto said, "Unfortunately, it is the small minority which has given the Guild a bad eye."

Detectives Report Mob Using Conn. Lottery

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. (AP) - The underworld is borrowing Connecticut's legal lottery number to run an illegal numbers racket, two police detectives say.

Intelligence units indicate that at least five numbers operations are using the weekly state lottery number, the Bridgeport Post reported Tuesday.

Det. Bruce Haines of the state police gambling division believes four of the rackets are controlled by organized crime but he says he has no conclusive evidence.

A fifth, smaller operation is known to be operating in Bridgeport, according to Lt. John Sember of the Bridgeport Special Services Division.

Lt. Sember said that in the local game, slips numbered from 000 to 999 are sold for $1 each. If the slip matches the last three nubbers of the weekly lottery number, the payoff is $500, he said.

Det. Haines said another system allows the purchaser to select his own three-digit combination. In other systems, players must match four or five digits in the lottery number.

Det. Haines said policy operators use the state's lottery number because it is above suspicion and because it is widely publicized.

The only disadvantage, he said, is that the state lottery is only drawn on Thrrsday while most number operations operate six days a week.

"If the state police know about it, they should close it up," reacted state gaming secretary Joseph Burns, contacted by telephone.

Restaurant Prices Up - What Else Is New?

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The next time President Nixon drops in at the Hasta, a restaurant he frequents when he's staying at the Florida White House, he'll find the prices are higher.

Many restaurants across the country have boosted prices following the end of the price freeze and the Hasta is no exception.

"During the freeze, the cost of supplies went up seven per cent," said John Liepe, manager of the Miami eating place. "We lost a lot of money because of the freeze, and had no alternative but to hike prices."

Liepe said the prices on all items-including the Florida snapper Nixon is partial to have been increased 30 cents. As for the President, Liepe said: "He'll have to pay more just like everyone else."

Some restaurants simply put stickers over the old prices announcing the new tab; others printed up whole new menus.

One French restaurant in New York City, where dinner averages about $9 per person, put a handwritten notice on the menu several weeks ago telling diners to add 35 cents to each price. New menus incorporated the price change, but another handwritten notice appeared this week, adding another 50 cents to the tab.

The price increases affected almost every type of restaurant. A Chinese restaurant in Salt Lake City raised the price of the combination special from $2.95 to $3.50- a jump of almost 20 per cent. A Mexican restaurant in the same city said there was a 10 per cent increase on almost all dishes.

Mike Mianulis, part owner of 'the Ideal Cafe, a moderately priced restaurant in Montgomery, Ala., said he upped the bill abut 10 to 15 per cent, but said the prices "haven't gone up as much as wholesalers have gone up on us."

Customers haven't been complaining too much. "People understand. The price of everything went up," said Howard Kalt, the owner of a Milwaukee restaurant frequented by college students.

Pete Carter, the owner of the Cork and Fiddle in Kansas City, said he hadn't had many complaints either, but added that his business was off since he upped the price of a 10-ounce sirloin from $4.50 to $5.25.

Carter said that if costs go up again, he will have to cut portions although he doesn't want to. "It's got to look good on the platter," he said. "Most customers eat with their eyes too."

Serious Athletes

By MARGIE COMBS

Upon entering my 9:05 class last Friday, I was confronted by a fellow classmate who asked, "What do you think Billie Jean's victory will mean to women athletes?"

Being both an women and an athlete, I had been asking myself the same question since the moment Billie Jean King scored her winning point against Bobby Riggs. No doubt about it, my initial pride at her victory arose from being a fellow female, but I've since realized that a great satisfaction comes from the fact that she is a dedicated athlete.

Bobby Riggs set out to disgrace women, but through his choice of attitude and tactics, he also ridiculed loyal atheletes who have dedicated their time and efforts to sports. It is safe to say that an important goal for all athletes is to improve their knowledge and skill of a sport to the best of their individual ability through disciplined mental and physical conditioning. This holds true for every athelete, whether they be male or female, amateur or professional, and Bobby Riggs disgraces all of them. His reasons for being on the court have nothing to do with the betterment of atheletics, but are colored with egotism, human oppression, and dollar signs.

Rather than acknowledging the alertness and preparation vital to any sports competition, Mr. Riggs chose to party, ignore rest, and loudmouth his way to the astrodome. In effect, he was laughing at every athelete who has seriously and respectfully dieted, conditioned, or disciplined his or herself for competition. Even if I were not female, my relief at his defeat would be immense. As it is, my belief that long hours of hard work are worth it has been renewed.

The Bobby Riggs versus Billie Jean King tennis match primarily seeded man against woman, but also pitted dedicated atheletics against they're abuse. By emerging winner of both challenges, Billie Jean has not only excited new admiration and support for women, but also restored faith and respect in serious atheletics.

Josh Is A Joke

After one of the most massive publicity campaigns in UMass history, JOSH finally came. It all began on Monday night at 7:30 when the Campus Crusade for Christ presented their long-awaited speaker, Josh McDowell, who was in the Campus Center Auditorium to deliver the first of a series of three speeches - this one entitled, "Resurrection: Hoax or History".

Now it was fairly obvious ahead of time which side of the issue Mr. McDowell was going to present, but the main question at hand was how he was going to attack this issue. Well,as the speech began, that also became quite obvious as he worked between one anecdote and another to make it perfectly clear (to borrow a phrase) that Jesus Christ was in truth resurrected from the dead. McDowell rattled off names and quotes faster than a fly goes from pile to pile, and even, at times, subjected the audience to his apparently first-hand knowledge of how the whole event took place by acting out various segments of the resurrection and its interpretations.

He continually used such broad generalizations as "archaeology has confirmed. . ." and "built upon historical event. . .". He toyed with semantics as well as emotions as he worked feverishly to establish his point while occasionally throwing in a brief plug for his book.

Then he finally got to the point as he turned and dramatically stated, "I am a walking example that Jesus Christ is alive today."

The fact of the matter is that Josh McDowell is living example that evangelism is alive and well and thriving at UMass. He directed and manipulated the audience in the style of a Marjoe or an Elmer Gantry, as he presented himself as a man who was filled with hatred and plagued by problems with no solutions - until Christ changed his life. Then Christ changed his father's life (the life of a hateful alcoholic), and then Christ changed the lives of almost everybody in McDowell's home town. In fact, as Mr. McDowell put it, "Christ is in the business of changing lives."

If this is the case, then it seems that McDowell is the business of making speeches, and towards the end of his performance, it was obvious that he could have told the audience that Guru Maharah Ji is Jesus Christ's brother, and many would have believed him.

In short, whatever argument McDowell has to offer cannot be soundly argued by myself or any other non-authority on religion, but his method of presentation is as loose and livid as the law will allow. Manipulation and demagoguery have no place in society and even less of a place at a university. It is up to each individual to weigh the evidence and reach a decision before running out to follow an individual or a movement, and a dream can often be shot down at the realization that one's a hero or heroine is nothing more than a man or woman with a good vocabulary.

Boycott UMass

Certain members of this university have gotten down on me for not taking a stand in political affairs. Many of my placarding friends have asked me to editorialize on their particular cause and I just haven't done it. It's not that I'm politically unaware of what's going on, it's just that I haven't found a cause worthy of my somewhat dimwitted attentions, until now.

It seems that whenever the ills of society make their mark upon the oppressed of society, someone starts a movement around this area and a boycott begins.

Last week I made a big mistake. I advocated the use of DC salad eating without realizing what I was doing. I'm sorry. I promise to boycott DC lettuce from now on. I can promise this mainly because I don't even eat in the Dining Commons, but no one has to know this. I can now be considered dedicated to the cause. Boycott DC lettuce.

I refuse to pay the increased parking fees. I don't have qualms about telling the university to go fuck themselves. I don't have a car, either, but that's irrelevant. Boycott increased parking fees.

Meat prices are soaring. The cost of feeding steak to the family is exhorbitant. Enough meat for a family of four will leave little change out of a ten dollar bill (except at the Golden Arches. How do they maintain their low prices? It couldn't have anything to do with the chairman of the board giving a little pocket money to the re-election campaign could it? Anyway...) The fact that I'm a vegetarian has nothing to do with it. Boycott meat.

I could go on and on and on about the grave injustices present in our everyday lives. Instead of taking upon ourselves to empathize with the picky little organizations, why don't we combine our efforts and energies and just boycott UMass? Yeah, why not blame the University for everything that goes wrong? We could send out flyers to the five colleges saying "Boycott your local University!" Get them to sympathize with the cause. Don't support this school. Don't go to classes. Boycott UMass.

Today UMass, tomorrow the world.

The Pinball Curse

By BOB ROSSMAN

When all the trivia of classes is out of the way, the time arrives for something really important - PINBALL!!! It's amazing how many people use this method to unwind. On the average day there will usually be two or three people to a machine. That's during class. Between classes add a few friends, observers, vultures, and people standing there for the lack of any place else to go.

One of the above terms needs explaining. A vulture is a person who breathes down your neck waiting for you to finish, so that he can have the machine when you're done. There are a lot of reasons for calling him a vulture. First, he stands there drooling when you get down to your last game. That's the place in time when the Satanic powers come out. Every whammy, curse, and evil imaginable is projected to you, in the hopes that you'll choke. The other wish is that you will be stricken suddenly with a massive case of bursitis of the fingers and be unable to continue. If one of these methods is successful, and you still feel like playing, forget it. The vulture turns into a poor pathetic creature that will probably wilt if you ever even reach into your pocket for the next quarter.

Courage prevails, the last quarter comes out of the pocket and is deposited into the slot that leads into never-never land. Suddenly you're back in form and the free games flow like drops in the Chinese water toture. This isn't luck, it's just that the other seven quarters were a warm-up. It's a good thing all the afternoon classes aren't important because your fingers are going to stick to that machine for the next four hours-oh-with the possible exception of lighting up one of the many cigarettes that mysteriously find their way from your pocket to the floor without remembering a single one of them.

Pinball has gotten a lot of people I know into a lot of trouble the past few years. Many classes have been missed because, "WEll, I'll just finish up these last six games and then hit class a few minutes late." It's okay once, but three days a week is just a little too much. I once almost flunked Rhetoric 110 because I did a speech comparing pinball to sex, and my feminist teacher laughed and laughed and gave me an F.

Why do people play pinball? A psych major told me that pinball is a perfect example of partial reinforcement encouraging a specific behavior. Could be. But other explanations seem better, like it's a nice safe way to relieve your frustrations (or get some) or maybe it's just a lot of fun. Or maybe sometimes a pinball machine is the only friend you have.

Israel, Vietnam: An Absured Analogy

To The Editor:

In 1948 most of the nations of the world felt they owed something to the Jews. The Soviet Union was the first to recognize the old-new Land of Israel as a modern state. All the major powers of that day followed suit, including the United States. Nothing has changed since that time to alter the justification for a Jewish State.

The equation is simple. Jews were pariahs in Europe. They were abused and persecuted throughout their history on that continent. Prior to World War II the very fact of their humanity was called into question by many of the intellectuals of that era. This laid the groundwork for the systematic murder of over one-third of the world's Jewish population as "sub-humans" during the war years.

Many of those who escaped death managed to reach safety in Israel. There, for the first time in modern history, Jews controlled their own destiny in an autonomous Jewish State.

I cite these facts in response to Dan Goulding's absurd analogy of Israel and Vietnam. The State of Israel is not in a civil war situation as was the case in Vietnam. Israel is threatened from outside her borders by terrorist groups who are funded by Arab governments and who launch their attacks on Israel from the soil of neighboring Arab states. Israel has the same right to protect its citizens as any other nation faced with such a threat. To ask her to do otherwise is to invite national suicide.

Certainly the Palestinians have suffered, and must be helped, but not at the expense of further Jewish suffering. The Israelis are not about to shout "mea culpa" and jump into the Mediterranean, as Dan Goulding might hope. Nor are they about to reassume the role of Wandering Jew in your world-wide passion play.

Glib New-Left cliches, besides being unoriginal. Mr. Goulding, do more to obscure than to enlighten. The fact is, Israel is a stable democracy that supports every shade of political opinion from conservative to Communist, and has managed to maintain a level of humanitarianism remarkable for a nation under the constant threat of war.

Dry Throats And Cracked Lips

To The Editor:

Last week on Tuesday night they turned on the heat. One couldn't help but think "My, the Physical Plant has finally done it-they turned the heat on at the proper time not as they have done in the past". At first it was nice then, however, one found upon awakening something that seems to occur everytime one wakes up in a UMass dorm room-oppresive heat and a throat so dry and sore, lips so parched and cracked it felt as if one was treking across the Sahara.

Now, as it appears, there is a shortage of fuels, (i.e. gas, oil, etc.) Also that, as it appears, the Physical Plant, from its seemingly unregulated use of these feuls (i.e. over heating every building on campus), is doing its best to try and use up this rapidly dwindling supply.

But, of course, being only a lowly student who has neither the proper skill or knowledge to tell the Physical Plant how to heat the buildings on this campus one feels almost as if one is at fault by saying to the well informed, knowledgeable men (who are, afterall, doing this for a living) "It appears as if you should if at all possible turndown the heat, or at least regulate it more closely. That is if its not to much trouble".

Yet for the good it would and will do even remotely suggest to them that perhaps they could more efficiently heat the buildings at UMass, and hence waste less money, fuel and help the earth a little more by polluting a little less, well, perhaps it would be better to attack windmills.

Communist Hypocrisy

To The Editor:

I find the current wave of indignation over the military takeover in Chile to be highly dishonest. We see scores of frantic Allende supporters parading, rallying and leafletting their disapproval of the Coup which toppled the corrupt Marxist regime. Are they really so concerned with the alleged atrocities perpetrated by the military? I sincerely doubt it.

Atrocities accompany virtually every forcible governmental takeover, regardless of the idealogy of the victors. Those who sympathize with Communism will scream their heads off over what happens to leaftists when they're on the losing side of a "putsch," but will at the same time proclaim the glories of the Soviet takeover of Russia and Eastern Europe, which was achieved by means of mass executions, arrests, deportations, and brutal repression; or Mao's takeover of China, which was achieved with the liquidation of millions of Mainland Chinese in the first two years of the regime; or of Castro's firing squads, which made Batista look like a Boy Scout when it came to matters of repression; or the heroism of Guerilla warriors such as Fatah, the IRA, or the Tupamaros, who specialize in such courageous acts as mailing letter bombs, tossing grenades into school busses, kidnapping unarmed diplomats, or holding elderly tourists as hostages.

When confronted with evidence that their heroes can be savage as Nazis or Fascists, the Communists and their sympathizers will tell you that revolutions cannot be made with creampuffs, or that those who are the victims of Communist slaughter were mere bourgeois parasits or exploiters.

Bishop Fulton J. Sheen once said that if there had never been any significant communist movement in Europe, the world would probably have never experienced fascism. Communism and Fascism feed each other, and the closer you look at the two systems, the more they look the same. When the Fascists start eliminating the Communists, or vice versa, I really find it hard to get upset. It's just that Democracy and individual rights suffer while the savages devour each other.

If you're going to be a true anti-fascist, then you're going to have to proclaim war on its kissin' cousin, Communism, at the same time. The two systems are equally barbarous.

Recreation Society

To The Editor:

The Recreation Society is open to all members of the University Community. There is no membership fee required, only an interest in the field of Leisure Studies and Services. This field encompasses such areas as Community and Municipal Recreation, Voluntary Organizations, Inner City, Therapeutic, and Outdoor Recreation.

The Recreation Society is basically composed of students. Our purposes are to meet others with similar interests, to sponsor guest speakers concerned with the field, and to further our education in the area.

Presently we are holding a Bike Raffle to raise the necessary funds to bring about these events. If you have an interest in this area, why not help. The table is located on the concourse level of the campus center.

Also, if you are interested in attending the 1973 Congress for Recreation and Parks in Washington D.C., September 29-October 4, leave your name. We are attempting to form a car pool.

Wounded Male Fascism

To The Editor:

How much longer must we hear the pathetic moans of Bill Ballou's wounded male fascism? In the past few days his relentless attacks upon women have perverted the sports page of the Collegian. (Don't mind for now the rest of our "responsible press.") Fortunately, the nauseating absurdity of his comments precludes the need for a point-by-point reply here. Suffice it to say that he would do all of us a favor by putting away his sick pen which is indicating UMass men as inhuman and insecure oppressors.

Victims Of The Cure

By KEVIN MACK

The beneficent firm of Ciba Pharmeceutical has discovered and is currently marketing a drug which seems to be successful in curing the dreaded disease, Minimal Brain Dysfunction (MBD). The drug is called Ritalin and most of the victims are children, usually boys. Perhaps you have never heard of MBD, or realized the threat it poses to the national health. That is not suprising, because MBD did not exist until the drug to cure it was developed.

Minimal Brain Dysfunction is a difficult disease to diagnose. There are no known physiological symptoms. In fact it is only hypothetically located in the brain. The only symptom of this "disease" is the behavior which it is suppose to induce. The victims are hyperactive children. Hyperactivity is the only symptom of the disease. By hyperactivity, doctors mean anything from being unable to sit in one place for more than a few minutes to being simply a problem child. Ciba Pharmeceutical estimates that ten percent of the boys between seven and thirteen in this country would benefit from their product. MBD is almost never found in girls.

If you think back to your childhood, you will recall people who could have been given the drug all the kids who were trouble-makers and used to give the teacher shit, the kids who hated school because of all the stupid things that adults made them do there.

According to the Physician's Desk Reference: "Sufficient data on long term effects of Ritalin are not available." One strange thing about the drug is that it is a type of speed chemically, methylphenidate hydrochloride.

It is not technically an amphetamine, but produces similar results in adults. When it is given to children, however, the effect is reversed. No one is quite sure why this happens, but there are a bunch of formerly hyperactive, presently downed out children around to attest to its effectiveness.

"I've seen it work wonders", one third grade teacher has said. The actual prescribed dosages of the drug are fairly small--25--30 mg. a day to start barely enough to give an adult a good buzz) but it can lead up to dosages of 60 mg. per day. Usage is generally prescribed until the patient reaches puberty, never beyond, because at puberty the effects of the drug change. This can be a period of five years or more if Riatalin is first prescribed at an early enough age.

Clearly then, Ritalin is a behavior modifying drug. Its use is already widespread, as any third grade teacher can tell you. It's being pushed as a cure for a phony physiological disease called Minimal Brain Dysfunction which may fool the child's parents, but the kids know better. And those that really know about the drug are too downed out to give a shit.

Women's Caucus Seeks Political Support

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-The first fund-raiser for the Maine Women's Political Caucus Friday night is seen as something of a credibility test by leaders of the fledging organization, spawned after defeat of the Equal Rights Amendment.

All of the state's prominent politicians have been invited to the champagne cocktail party in Portland, and their participation could give the caucus a stamp of approval as well as a morale boost.

Barbara McGough of Falmouth, coordinator of the multi-partisan caucus, said: "I think that in a way, the fund-raising party could be viewed as a test of our credibility with some politicians.

"I know there are state legislators who don't take us seriously or believe that we could have an impact on future elections," she said in an interview.

"But if the leading officeholders of the state show up-and a number of them have promised to do so-then it will be hard for anyone to write us off as radicals or simply frustrated women with not much to do.

"The caucus is the first time an effort has been made state-wide to pull together all the resources of women to try to make changes at the state and local levels," she said. "To do it we need money, and we expect substantial aid from the men we women have already helped put into office."

Democratic Sen. and Mrs. Edmund S. Muskie and first district Congressman Peter Kyros, also a Democrat, plan to attend the 6-8 p.m. party, as well as a number of 1974 gubernatorial candidates.

Senate President Kenneth P. MacLeed, R-Brewer, who figured strongly in the defeat of the ERA last March, got a special invitation to the fund-raiser, but he declined.

Ms. McGough said a special invitation also went out to Burton A. MacDonald of West Peru, the Democratic nominee for the Senate seat vacated by Norway Democrat David F. Aldrich, who was appointed to a District Court judgship.

The Republicans haven't chosen a candidate yet for the Nov. 6 election, but he will also be asked to attend the fund-raiser.

The Aldrich seat could be a crucial one for ERA supporters when the amendment to the federal constitution is voted on again during the 1974 special legislative session convening in January.

Aldrich favored the ERA, which lost in the Senate by one vote.

Logan Crash Investigation

Delta, MAC At Odds On Cause

WASHINGTON (AP) - A lawyer for Delta Airlines said Tuesday the crew of a DC9 jetliner was given an incorrect visibility reading just seconds before the plane crashed, killing 88 persons, at Boston's Logan Airport last July 31.

The claim by attorney Frank F. Rex followed by one day a report from the Massachusetts Aeronautical Commission blaming the tragedy on pilot error. Rex based his report to federal examiners on a comparison of the transcript of air-to-ground conversations between the plane and the control tower with instrument readings of runway visibility of 6,000 feet. At the same time, Delta said, a Weather Service computer in a building half a mile away recorded a visibility of 1,600 feet.

The transcript shows also that immediately after reporting the 6,000-foot visibility the tower informed the crew that "a fog bank's movin' in, it's pretty heavy across the approach end."

Twenty seconds later Delta flight 723 crashed into a sea wall 3,000 feet short of the runway.

Both the transcript and the Weather Service visibility readings have been entered as evidence in the National Transportation Safety Board proceedings. However, it was not immediately decided whether the comparison of the two documents prepared by Delta would be admitted as evidence.

Expert testimony indicated that the discrepancy between the Weather Service reading of 1,6000 feet was a result of the difference in recording instruments.

According to Alcott J. Larsson, chief of the Federal Aviation Administration's Weather Section, the tower relied on a digital readout which lagged as much as 48 seconds behind the actual visibility conditions as recorded on a graph in the Weather Service offices.

FOL Book Sale

Before The Dust Collects...

Donations are still needed for a book and record sale to be conducted by the Friends of the Library. Please address your contributions to the F.O.L. Book Sale, UMass Library, Amherst, Ma 01002; or drop them off in the Library (Room 11). Heavy loads can be delivered by vehicle to the loading platform behind South College. Any suitable materials in reasonably good condition will be gratefully accepted (including paperbacks, LP records, etc.), and all donations will be acknowledged if donor's name and address are included.

The sale is scheduled to be held on Friday, October 12, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; any items remaining will be offered on Saturday, October 13, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at "Two for the Price of One." Weather permitting, sale tables will be set up along the east perimeter of the Library courtyard, accessible through the doors on the same side of the building, Main Floor. In case of rain, the tables will be set up in the same location, but inside the glass wall.

All purchases will be cash and carry, with no "holds" or "layaways allowed. Proceeds will be deposited to the Friends of the Library Trust Fund, and will be used to purchase materials needed for the Library's collections. For further information about the sale or the Friends organization, telephone Siegfried Feller, 545-0058.

Why Hire Researchers?

By SHELLY COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-The state Department of Public Health apparently ignored the predictions of its own researchers who forecast a possible outbreak of Eastern Equine Encephalitis last June.

It cost the state $835,000 to fight the disease with massive spraying operations, including the cost of airplane rentals and related expenses.

The $815,000 item is included in the supplementary budget submitted by the governors last week.

Last June Herbert Maxfield, a researcher at the Lakeville Research Center in Plymouth County, in a memo to Department of Public Health officials, warned of a possible equine encephalitis outbreak. The center which monitors mosquitos for encephalitis, found an unusually high population of a particular species of mosquitos.

"With that kind of advanced warning the health department should have initiated a program of innoculation, Sen. Chester G. Atkins, D-Acton, said.

Atkins favors stepped up research efforts to combat encephalitis of all types rather than the kind of crisis reaction which he said seems to be the pattern.

"It makes more sense to put on one or two extra staffers and some seasonal people and study what we can do about the disease, rather than put out $815,000 for one outbreak," he added.

Belknap Closes

Belknap College, financially troubled throughout its 10-year history, announced Tuesday it was closing effective Dec. 14.

The college of some 450 students had said last summer it was in bad shape financially but last-minute contributions enable it to remain open.

Founded by a group of professors who wanted to emphasize scientific education, the college was particularly proud of its major in meterology, the only one in New England.

Energy - Consumers Key

HARTFORD (AP) - The Connecticut Public Utilities Commission PUC said Tuesday it was "cautiously optimistic" about New England's electric energy reserves for the coming winter.

The PUC said the New England area had a total energy capacity of around 18,000 megawatts or around 3,000 more than its anticipated peak requirement. A PUC spokesman added that the reserve estimate of roughly 20 per cent was "conservative."

The commission, however, cautioned that several factors could affect the region's energy picture. It said:

"New England has installed many nuclear plants in recent years that are still in the maturing stages thus subject to unexpected breakdowns.

"Secondly, if the Nixon administration orders mandatory allocation of boiler fuel this action would curtail supply and jeopardize electrical service.

"If home heating oil is rationed or temporarily unavailable residential customers might turn to electric heating devices that would increase New England's total electric peak.

"Moreover it is dangerous to look at New England in isolation without considering possible difficulties that may arise in New York that would require New England Power."

An unusually severe winter also would increase the energy demand, the commission said.

The PUC said in the final analysis the solution to a possible energy crisis rests with consumers, who must exercise care in their use of electricity.

Candi Sings For Women

Candi Lowe, a young singer who presents her own brand of women's liberation, will perform today at noon, in the Student Union Ballroom.

Candi who has been composing since age 13, was formerly a member of "The New Folk", a folk-rock group, which toured college campuses across the country. Singing alone now, Candi performs primarily for college students and women's groups. Her songs drawn from personal experience have a wide appeal. Her tone is full and rich as her lyrics bounce out or simply coze her thoughts.

Candi's performance is sponsored by the Christian Service Coalition in the five-college area. The program is free and open to the public.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

If someone tells me that Gemini is easy to fathom, I know I am talking to a naive person. Each individual views the zodiacal signs form a personal point of view. For some, Cancer is not possessive. For some, Leo is subdued. For some, Capricorn is always happy. For some, Aries follows rather than leads. For some, Pisces lacks sensitivity. For some, Taurus is flexible. For some, Virgo cares nothing about neatness or cleanliness. For some, Libra has no concern for the arts. For some, Scorpio is as easy to read as a book. For some, Sagittarius is modest. For some, Aquarius is conventional. For some, there is little to be gained from astrology. Yes, for some, life is little and mean and the sun and moon merely represent lights in the sky.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): New moon and aspects show concern in areas of marriage, partnership, legal commitments. Shore up efforts. Consolidate, cooperate with those whose views might not coincide with your own. Be grown up. You won't have everything your way. But you can be happy!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some around you may make unreasonable demands. Maintain balance, self-esteem. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could figure prominently. Relative could be seeking argument. Don't accommodate. Sense of humor proves most valuable.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Have fun without being extravagant. Affair of heart could dominate. Need for affection, understanding underlines actions. You may be in mood for tearing down in order to rebuild. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio probably are involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study Gemini message. Be ready for change, travel, variety. Analyze needs. Realize you won't get something for nothing. But you can earn what is needed. Prepare for additional responsibility. Home area is spotlighted.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent is on need for greater family harmony. Make intelligent concession. If diplomatic, you gain. Otherwise, you invite conflict. Accent is on relatives, neighbors, persons close to you who confide problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Promises are not enough--you should insist on proof, backing, writing, collateral. Someone appears to want something or nothing--from you. Remain alert. Guard valuables. Collect what you need. Dealings indicated with Pisces.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New start, added responsibility, promotion--these are featured. You make headway both professionally and in personal life. Nothing now is apt to be lukewarm--it is all or nothing. Have confidence in your plans and potential.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are able to see completion, finished product. Key now is to find ways to bringing efforts to attention of greater numbers of people. Distribute and publicize. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What you desired may have been radically changed. Make this a time of adjustment. Get used to idea that you can start over--fresh, original and creative. Love is very much in picture. But first "love yourself." Then almost all else will fall into place.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may be pulling against yourself. Take stock. Wait. Get second wind. One close to you is carrying burden. Know it and be understanding, compassionate. Cancer individual figures in important way. Build for future security.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Direct approach now may not be wise. Take ring road. Reach objective in subtle way. Sagittarius, Gemini persons are likely to be in picture. Accent is on communication, writing, being "in touch" with public needs.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Intensity is featured. Emotions run gamut. You feel. You come alive. You tear down in order to rebuild. You break from restrictions. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons figure prominently. Be aware of subtle nuances.

Southern Cal Still On Top

Nebraska, which rallied for three touchdowns in the final quarter to overcome North Carolina State last weekend, gained some ground on Southern California Tuesday in the weekly Associated Press college football poll.

But toppling the Trojans, who have been soldered to the No. 1 spot since the first week of last season, seems about as futile as trying to depose UCLA as king of college basketball.

Southern Cal, which puts its 2-0 record on the line against eighth-ranked Oklahoma this weekend, received 36 first-place votes and 1,120 points from the 61 sports writers and broadcasters who voted in the nationwide poll. The Cornhuskers, also 2-0, received 12 first-place votes and trailed by only 98 points with 1,022. The margin the week before was 111 points.

Ohio State, taking a breather after 56-7 triumph over Big Ten rival Minnesota in a season opener, remained third with eight No. 1 votes and 955 points, 11 more than the previous week.

Sixth-ranked Penn State received two first-place votes while No. 4 Michigan, No. 5 Alabama and No. 8 Oklahoma received one each.

The only change in the Top five occurred when Michigan and Alabama switched positions, but the ouster of Texas from the Top ten after the Longhorns-ranked sixth a week ago-were upset by Miami of Florida, allowed Penn State, Notre Dame, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Louisiana State to move up one notch.

Southern Cal beat Georgia Tech 23-6 last weekend, Michigan upended Stanford 47-10, Alabama rallied from 14-0 at halftime for a 28-14 decision over Kentucky, Penn State romped over Navy 39-0, Notre Dame humbled Northwestern 44-0, Oklahoma was idle, Tennessee defeated Army 37-18 and LSU edged Texas A and M 28-23.

Auburn moved up from 12th to 11th after a 31-0 rout of UT-Chattanooga and Oklahoma State vaulted five spots to No. 12 after thumping Arkansas 386.

Rounding out the Second Ten are Arizona State, Taxas, Houston, Florida, UCLA, Miami, North Carolina State and Missouri. The only team missing from last week's poll is Colorado, which lost its opener to LSU and nipped Wisconsin 28-25.

Cepeda, Moret Lead Sox, 3-2

CLEVELAND (AP) - Orlando Cepeda drilled a three-run homer after an intentional walk to Carl Yastrzemski in the first inning, giving the Boston Red Sox a 3-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians Tuesday night.

Tommy Harper started Boston's winning rally off loser Tom Timmerman, 8-8, with a single. He stole second and moved to third on a groundout.

Yastrzemski was then given first base after going to a 3-0 count, setting the stage for Cepeda's game-winning blast, the 20th homer this baseball season for the Red Sox' designated hitter.

Celts Make Final Cut

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. (AP) - Clarence Glover, the Boston Celtics' No. 1 draft choice three years ago, was cut by the National Basketball Association team Tuesday, along with four other players.

However, two rookies, Steve Downing of the University of Indiana and Phil Hankinson of Pennsylvania, survived the cut as the Celtics got down to their regular lead of 12 players. Downing and Hankinson were the team's first and second draft choices this year.

Also cut Tuesday were Martinez 'denmon of Iowa State, Byron Jones of the University of San Francisco, Wayne Grabeic of Michigan and Sam McCamey of Oral Roberts.

Glover played with the Celtics for a year after he was drafted, but last year he was sent to Hartford of the Eastern League. He tried out this year as a free agent.

Booters Bombard BC, 5-3

By STEVE DECOSTA

The UMass soccer team brought home that first big win yesterday as they overcame a two-goal deficit to defeat Boston College in their opening game.

Tom Coburn was the man of the hour as he tallied four goals in leading the Minutemen to a 5-3 victory.

The game was not as close as the final score indicated. The Minutemen dominated play, especially in the second half, and collected a total of 46 shots on goal (27 in the second half) as opposed to only 16 for BC.

Charlie Palano opened the scoring as he took a pass from Mike Nugent, dribbled around the defending fullback, and beat the BC goalie with a scorching shot to the opposite courner to put UMass ahead 1-0.

The next ten minutes were all BC, as they tallied all three of their scores within that span.

BC's first score came at the 7:04 mark as John Lojek caught UMass goalie Carl Vercollone out of position. The goal was set up as a result of a missed trap by one of the Minutemen fullbacks. Mark McGuire was given an assist on the play.

Lojek tallied his second marker of the day at 16:37 after UMass fullback Dan Ouellette allowed an errant BC pass to dribble through his legs. Lojek gathered up the loose ball and popped it home to put BC up 2-0.

The Eagles scored another tainted goal just 23 seconds later. Bill Frazier was given credit for the score when a mix-up in front of the UMass goal somehow ended with ball resting safely in the net.

BC seemed to relax after grabbing their quick two-goal lead and the UMass booters took the play completely away from the Eagles. Following numerous scoring threats, Coburn netted his first of four goals as he single handedly picked up a loose ball, dribbled around two defenders, and slammed a hard shot into the near corner. The tally came at 37:43 and made the score 3-2, which is the way it stayed until the half.

The second half was all UMass, or, more appropriately, all Coburn, as he scored three times in eleven minutes.

With only 1:32 gone, Ken Banda lofted a high pass into the middle. Writer D'Elea, the BC goaltender, came out to make the save and was flattened, legally of course, by Coburn. Tom then rolled a soft bouncer toward the net which was fanned on by two BC defenders before settling in for the score.

Only two minutes later Coburn converted a set-up by Jim Vollinger to make the score 5-3, where it stayed for the final.

The game was marked by a complete reversal of form by the entire UMass team. The first half was marred by numerous errors, including missed traps, errant passes, and long clearing kicks that went everywhere except where they were supposed to go. Except for the score by Palano, the entire UMass offense consisted of Coburn or Nugent carrying the ball toward the goal until a BC defender took it away from them.

The second half was an entirely different story. The team seemed to become more aggressive and the basic mistakes were eliminated. The passing became more fluid, leading to the three scores and numerous other threats that went by the boards.

The defense also tightened considerably in the second half. Dan Ouellette, who had shown those first-varsity-game jitters in the first half, settled down to thwart any possible BC threat late in the game. The defensive performer of the day, though, had to be Mark Tyma who was all over the field picking off some passes, blocking others, and just making himself a general nuisance in the eyes of the BC attackmen.

The three BC goals should in no way tarnish the image of UMass goalie Carl Vercollone, who is still one of the finest goaltenders in New England. He hd no chance to stop any of the scores which all resulted from mix-ups in his fullback line.

KICKING IT AROUND—Writer D'Elea, the Eagle goaltender, succumbed to the UMass barrage and took himself out of the game midway through the second half. His replacement, John Kirby, played flawlessly, but by then it was too late.

Tom Coburn's four goals came within one of the Umass record for goals in one game.

Bucs Lose...

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Mike Anderson and Bill Robinson rapped solo home runs to back the five-hit pitching of Steve Carlton and give the Philadelphia Phillies a 2-1 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Tuesday night.

Pittsburgh has now lost 10 of it's last 21 games under new manager Danny Murtaugh.

Rooker, who fell to 9-6 with the loss, also surrendered a solo homer to left in the sixth by Robinson, his 25th.

The victory boosted Carlton's record to a meager 13-19, well off the 27-10 mark that brought him the Cy Young Award last season.

...Mets Win

Powered by Cleon Jones tie-breaking home-run in the seventh inning the New York Mets squeezed by the Montreal Expos 2-1 in a game played last night at Shea Stadium.

The win increased the Mets lead over Pittsburgh (who were defeated earlier in the night) to 1 1/2 games.

Jerry Koosman was the starter and winner for New York. He needed relief help in the eighth from Tug McGraw who collected his 23rd save. Steve Rogers was the loser for the Expos, who now drop to 4 1/2 games behind the pace-setting Mets.

Berra Player Of The Week

AMHERST, Mass. (AP)-Massachusetts wide receiver Tim Berra of Montclair, N.J., was named Yankee Conference offensive all star of the week Tuesday for his performance against Maine.

Connecticut linebacker Brian Usher, of Stamford, Conn., and Rhode Island quarterback Steve Crone, of Meriden, Conn., were chosen the top defensive and rookie players respectively.

Berra, a 5-foot-11, 185 pound senior, caught nine passes for 132 years and two touchdowns in the Minutemen's 20-0 triumph over Maine Saturday. He is the son of Yogi Berra, manager of the New York Mets and former Yankees great.

Usher, a 5-foot-11, 185-pounder, anchored a strong Husky defense which limited Vermont to 91 yards rushing in a game in which he made 10 tackles helping Connecticut defeat Vermont 26-14.

Crone, a 6-foot-2, 190-pound sophomore, in his varsity debut, completed 11 of 15 passes for 199 yards and two touchdowns in Rhode Island's 35-7 victory over Northeastern.

The Cage Is The Key

Sure, it's dusty, musty, rickety old barn that should probably be torn down when the rest of the original Mass Aggie moves north to Deerfield next year, but the Cage is still the best place to watch winter sports event on this whole campus.

Curry Hicks Physical Education Building, as it is so infrequently referred to, is the boiler factor where the UMass basketball Minutemen have a ten point advantage every home game. For a Harvard, Temple, Syracuse, or maybe even a UConn game, there is barely enough room for the tap-off at midcourt each half. It's almost that crowded.

Most people on this campus realize that the Cage is the home of the basketball team. They know exactly where the Cage is and its very conveniently located.

But, what about the gymnastics teams, the wrestling team, and the women's volleyball and basketball teams? How many people on this campus would bother to go see one of those teams compete? Unless it's billed as a big game I don't think that that many students would bother to go. The reason for this is simply that it is not convenient enough for all students on campus to walk all the way across campus just to see a two hour contest.

It takes the average student (leaving at 8:00 a.m.) twenty-five minutes to walk from Southwest all the way over to WOPE, and if they were to leave during the 4:30 rush hour traffic, it would take even longer. The big question is, who would bother to make the long trek over there just to see a women's basketgall game? Not too many, except for a few loyal roomates and relatives.

On the other hand, how many Sylvanites would bother to hike all the way down to Boyden to see a gymnastics meet or a wrestling match? A few more, but still not too many.

And even if the Sylvanites were interested in those contests many would still be burned away because they wouldn't know where to go once they were in the building. That Boyden building is quite a puzzle for a first-time visitor. It's quite a task to get into the auxiliary gym without going through the men's locker room.

And as for the Northeast Physical Education Building (WOPE), I can't remember where basketball courts are.

If these sports are ever to break out of the dark age (playing completely in the shadow of the basketball team) the players and coaches had better start pushing for dates at the Curry Hicks Cage.

This is not, by any means, a revolutionary idea. The Cage was used a few times last year to host two gymnastics meets and a wrestling match. But, why should it all stop there?

Those teams, especially the womens' teams, are going to have to come out of their holes and show the rest of the campus just what they can do.

That building up in the Northeast is no longer called the Women's Phys. Ed. Building and it's about time the women's teams broke away from it. But, only if they want to come out of the dark, that is.

The Cage will only collect dust on its open dates and those other minor sports will never become popular events until something is worked out. After all, the Cage is still the best place to watch an indoor game on this campus.

Parking Status Still Touchy

By DAVID SPARLING

University of Massachusetts and employee union officials are reluctant to comment on the status of discussions on the controversial new parking plan at UMass.

Carol Drew, president of local 1776, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, and Tim Bornstein, Asst. to the Chancellor for Labor Relations would only call the situation "status quo".

Both are waiting for a ruling from Attorney General Robert Quinn on the legality of the new parking plan.

Bornstein said he hoped the ruling would come before the Oct. 1 date set by the university when the plan will be fully enforced. Now, only the central logs are patrolled and ticketed under a policy announced last week.

In anticipation of a favorable ruling from the attorney general, 7,500 parking decals have been distributed to people wishing to park on campus. Three general areas are designated for parking-core, edge and peripheral lots.

Core lots cost either $50 or $36 per year plus a $5 registration fee. Edge lots cost $12 plus the registration fee. Peripheral lots charge only the registration fee.

The new parking plan is part of a policy whose long range goal is to lower automobile congestion on campus. Another aspect of this policy is the free bus service that links the campus and nearby apartment complexes.

This sometimes erratic service is expected to improve, according to Robert Godding, Director of Operations for the Student Senate Transportation Service, with the installation of two-way radios last week.

The bus service was begun last February, supported by a grant from the Department of Transportation ($475,441) and supplemented by $157,728 in money, labor and services from the University and $30,000 in money and vehicles from the UMass Student Senate.

Department of Transportation support will end after the fall semester and, according to the terms of the grant, the University is to continue providing free bus service indefinitely.

William Goss, Director of the Student Senate Transportation System, speaking of the link between parking fees and free buses, said, "Nowhere in the original grant did it say that the University was to finance the transit system with increased parking rates."

However, the University's fiscal 1974 (July 1, 1973-June 30, 1974) budget shows $411,000 alloted for a new Parking and Transportation Fund. Of that $222,000 is to come from income from parking fees.

House Stalls On Agnew Probe

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Speaker Carl Albert has rejected for the time being any House action on Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's request for an investigation of charges he was involved in political corruption in Maryland.

That left a federal grand jury in Baltimore as the only forum scheduled to hear evidence on the allegations against Agnew. Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson has ordered the panel to begin hearing that evidence Thursday morning.

Albert announced his decision on Agnew's request in a statement Wednesday afternoon.

"The vice president's letter relates to matters before the courts," the statement said. "In view of that fact, I, as speaker, will not take any action on the letter at this time." He refused to elaborate or answer questions.

Agnew's surprise request for the House investigation was made in a letter the vice president hand delivered to Albert Tuesday.

The vice president was on Capitol Hill Wednesday for lunch with 10 liberal Republican senators and told newsmen he had every intention of staying in office.

"I want to make it very clear that I am not resigning," he said.

Agnew also said he would hold a news conference at some future point, but did not say when.

Agnew also was asked about news reports that he and his attorneys had engaged in plea bargaining with the Justice Department and a report that he had offered to resign in return for a reduction or dismissal of charges.

"At no time," he replied, "have either I or my attorneys initiated any plea bargaining."

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., host for the luncheon, told a reporter later that the senators met with Agnew for more than an hour and that no one in the group believed Albert's rejection of Agnew's request was final or irrevocable.

Meanwhile, the White House said President Nixon had neither encouraged nor pressured Agnew to take any particular course in responding to or fighting the graft allegations against him.

Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said he believed it would be improper for the White House to comment on Agnew's choice of methods for fighting the graft allegations but added that Nixon "respects the vice president's rights and privilege to handle

Church Of Christ Backs UFW

The Board of Directors of the Massachusetts Conference of the United Church of Christ has endorsed a resolution which backs recent efforts by the national United Church of Christ and several Bay State Church leaders in support of the United Farm Workers Union.

Although the action did not cite specifically the conflict between Cesar Chavez and his United Farm Workers Union with the Teamsters Union, the resolution clearly intended to give support to the UFW.

The conference Directors, composed of 25 persons from across the Commonwealth, said it was taking the action as a response "to the actions and leadership of the Ninth General Synod of the United Church of Christ resulting in support for the United Farm Workers Union."

The Synod, which met in St. Louis in June, sent 95 personsto the Coachella Valley in Southern California to give support to the Chavez union.

Five persons from Massachusetts were members of that delegaion including Attorney Ralph Tuller of Lincoln, Rev. Cameron W. Byrd of Newton, Rev. John Terry of Millbury, Mrs. Harriette Schoppee of Springfield, and Mrs. James Hauser of Lenox.

Mondale Cites "Contempt Of Congress"

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen Walter F. Mondale said Wednesday a refusla by President Nixon to obey a Supreme Court order to release the White House tapes would provoke "just about the most serious constitutional situation in American history."

It would constitute "contempt of Congress, contempt of the Supreme Court and an insult to the American people," the Minnesota Democrat said on the CBS radio program "Capitol Cloakroom."

Mondale said "it may well be" grounds for impeachment if Nixon does defy a Supreme Court ruling in the case, now in the Court of Appeals.

The Minnesota Democrat said President Nixon is trying to "invoke executive privilege on his campaign for re-election." adding "These questions were pure politics."

On other subjects, Mondale said:

-He has "no doubt" that there has been a concerted Nixon administration effort aimed at Vice President Spiro T. Agnew including the dispersal of unsubstantiated charges to reporters by the White House and the Justice Department.

"I think it has been a rather shabby show," he said, adding that Agnew is "entitled to fairness, he is entitled to presumption of innocence and he is entitled to procedural safeguards of any other American."

-He is "looking at" the possibility of a 1976 presidential race and is speaking around the country and meeting with different groups. He said he did not know when he would decide whether to run.

Culture Comes To Town

By Bill Brown

This fall seven area towns working with the UMass Division of Continuing Education, Fine Arts Extension Program, will be attempting to develop a community wide awareness of the arts available in their own towns, and methods of bringing that awareness to more people through community based arts programs.

Stan Rosenberg, Director of the Fine Arts Extension Program, is working to see that the first of this year's major projects is soon underway. Although the programs involve many services, all are based on the idea that they will help the communities identify and assess their particular needs and wants in the arts, develop and improve the arts already existing within the community, and work for a larger audience acceptance of the arts.

The first major production, a series of arts administration workshops, is scheduled for sometime in November at the University. All facets of the arts and arts administration will be brought together with the area Arts Councils to share ideas and expertise. With information gained at the workshops, it is hoped the communities will plan their own Arts Festival, for several days in May of next year.

This festival will be a test of the councils' abilities to work with the artists found in their own towns; as the idea is to use only resources available in the community and a minimum of money. The underlying purpose is to form not only a locally flavored artistic program, but also to gain more artist participants and to develop a closer feeling between artist and audience.

The Fine Arts Extension will continue to support the Arts Councils after their plans are stabilized, but they are emphasizing that each community will be encouraged to develop their own interests and to create their own particular programs and projects. This expansion of plans can follow any direction the town decides would most fit its character and needs.

Presently with most of the programs and councils still in the feeling out stage, there is a need for volunteers to work on the planning communities. Willingness to work at developing the artistic values of these towns, is as important as a background in the arts, and any eager members of the academic community are welcome. Those wishing to help develop some of the most important resources of the area should contact Stan Rosenberg. His office is in the Draper Annex, and he welcomes questions.

The Shofah Will Be Blowing

By JOAN FASSNACHT

The year 5734 started last night at sunset. Members of the Jewish faith will once again go to temple, and the rabbi will blow the Shofah (ram's horn) and return home to break out the Mogen David.

Rosh Hashonah, which marks the Jewish New Year, is the second most important holiday in Jewish tradition, and is the happiest of holidays. It signifies the beginning of ten days of introspection and prayer.

The holiday season culminates at sundown on Friday October 5, which is Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. Rosh ha-Shanah is observed for one day by Reform Jews and for two days by Orthodox and Conservative Jews.

This High Holy Day time is the most solemn on the Jewish religious calendar. During these days, Jews exchange the Hebrew greeting "L'shonah tova tikateyvu" which means "May you be inscribed for a good life." This greeting is a reference to the Biblical image of the Divine Book of Life.

During Rosh ha-Shanah, Jews around the world reflect on past deeds and make promises to live a better live.

House Committee Approves Bill

Mandatory Fuel Allocation 'Imperative'

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A mandatory fuel allocation bill was approved by the House Commerce Committee Wednesday after a Republican reported receiving indications the President expected to delay a decision on such a program.

By voice vote, the committee approve legislation that Rep. harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., the panel's chairman, said enlarged a Senate-passed version.

"It's a major energy bill. We've tried to cover the field," Staggers said after the cmmittee's colosed-door meeting.

Meantime, Rep. H. John Heinz III, R-Pa., said White House energy adviser John A. Love indicated to a group of congressmen that the President's decision on whether to order mandatory allocation may be at least two weeks away.

Heinz said Love suggested the delay was prompted by "other items taking precedence" over this matter, but he said Love as "totally unspecific" about what carried higher priority.

Staggers said he would press for a House vote on the legislation next week.

The bill "may not be perfect," he said, but getting it to the House floor will give congressmen a chance to act on it and possibly improve it.

President Nixon has authority to order allocation but he has relied on a voluntary system.

The legislation would remove discretion, making fuel allocation mandatory. Rep. Robert H. Macdonald, D-Mass., chief sponsor of the bill, maintained the administration's "record of indecision and inaction in this are makes it imperative to have this law on the books."

The bill would require the President to use specific temporary powers to deal with shortages of crude oil and refined petroleum products, including gasoline, kerosene, distillates, home heating oil, diesel fuel, propane, residual fuel oil and petrochemicals.

Smokey The Bear Has A Fan Club

By BILL MAHONEY

Congratulate yourself. And thank an Amherst fireman the next time you see one. There wasn't one serious fire in Amherst last year. There were no serious injuries. No one died. The total fire loss in 1972 was $27,600.

The reason according to Lt. Robert Comings of the Amherst Fire Department is largely due to the cooperation of UMass students and everybody else in Amherst. Like Smokey The Bear says. 'People start fires and people can prevent them.' The loss from fires has come down from a high of $158,000 in 1968 to the unprecedented low of $27,600 in 1972. This year, however, the January fire in Tobin Hall at a loss of $100,000 will leave last year's low surpassed.

Out of the three bay station in the center of town, 551 alarms were answered and 775 ambulance runs made, by the 24-man permanent force. Standing by was a call force of 20 plus 40 UMass students who have electronic 'beepers' in their cars, homes or on their persons. The 1932 pumper stationed in North Amherst is manned solely by UMass students.

In the event of a serious fire, five pumpers, one ladder, one tanker, a panel truck, two cars and an ambulance can be dispatched. The men manning them work two ten-hour days, are off for 48 hours and return for two 14-hour nights.

While the traditional firemen's pole has been removed, a direct line exists between the station and the UMass police, campus operator and physical plant. 911-an emergency phone number-is also available.

Ready to answer an alarm, this fire engine, as all town of Amherst vehicles, bears the town seal-a gold circle with a book representing the University of Mass and Amherst College and a plow representing the agriculture heritage of Amherst.

Upon receipt of an alarm, the trucks are dispatched and the firemen don Scott Air-Paks, en route, to the fire. By doing this, en route, 30 to 45 seconds are saved-and possibly a life. The packs contain enough air for twenty minutes and are activated upon arrival at a smoke filled room or building.

If the call is made to a 'high-rise' structure, the firemen arrive with a 'high-rise' bag containing three lengths of hose, a sledge hammer and bolt cutters.

A new and useful piece of apparatus is the snowmobile sled and stretcher which was donated by the Amherst Regional Snowmobile Club. If you break your leg out on some hill this winter the fire department can get you out.

The department has also conducted operations on buildings that were scheduled for demolition to, "sharpen skills under the real pressure of heat and smoke of challenging dimensions." this exercise was videotaped and reviewed by the department.

As soon as the frost leaves the ground new construction will begin on the Tillson Farm for a station and dormitory that will cost $400,000 and be manned both by UMass volunteers and Amherst fire Department regulars. An 85-foot snorkel will be stationed at the new facility.

Progress with the use of radio to alert personnel has made possible the discontinuing of the once familiar ear shattering blast of the air horn atop the station. That sound won't be heard anymore, but the scream of the pumpers' siren will. Pull over next time. That red truck, just, might be going the same place you are.

Student Senate Bans Lettuce And Grapes

By Stephen von Lichtenberg

Last night the Student Senate, in a sparsely attended 30-minute meeting, called for the removal of all Iceberg lettuce and grapes from the dining commons.

The bill as carried read "The Student Senate in support of the United Farmworkers AFL-CIO struggle moves that all Iceberg Lettuce and table grapes be removed from all food services at the University of Massachusetts after a two week interim period of grace is allowed."

The motion was passed after a brief presentation by Theresa Carr from the UMass Committee on Poverty. Voting against the bill were Paul Doran and one other senator.

The Senate also voted to extend the deadline for nomination papers for candidates for the Senate 48 hours. David Booker explained that there are some "40 seats for which nobody has filed nomination papers".

Rick Savini, chairperson of the Rents and Fees Committee gave a report on the activities of the committee on the food service dilemma. The report dealt with the referendum of Sept. 19th. He also announced "that there are currently 20-25 vacancies on the committee." These positions are open to all UMass undergraduates.

In other business the Senate appointed Dana Marchant Chairperson of the Student Matters Committee.

REPORTED IN APPARENT SUICIDE TRY--Former United Mine Workers President W.A. "Tony" Boyle, above, apparently tried to commit suicide and his chances of survival are poor, Dr. Milton Gusack, Boyle's personal physician since 1965, said Tuesday.

Ex-UMW Head Boyle Still Critical

By JOHN LENGEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The condition of deposed union leader W.A. "Tony" Boyle improved slightly Wednesday, according to hospital spokesmen.

While the former United Mine Workers president remained in a deep coma and still on the critical list, his vital signs of pulse, temperature and blood pressure were said to have stabilized.

From a doctor's standpoint, these developments are "encouraging," said a spokesman, at George Washington University hospital. But he said the outlook for recovery remained poor.

Boyle, 71, was also taken off a dialysis machine which for 36 hours had been used to cleanse his blood of a lethal level of barbiturates. He remained dependent on a mechanical respirator to breathe.

Boyle's doctor, Milton Gusack, said there was no way to estimate if or when Boyle would recover.

Gusack said Boyle took a massive overdose of sleeping pills Monday night.

Boyle was to have appeared in court Tuesday on his removal to Pennsylvania to face murder charges in the deaths of UMW insurgent Joseph A. Yablonski, Yablonski's wife, and a daughter.

Yablonski ran unsuccessfull against Boyle for the UMW presidency in 1969. A federal judge later overturned the election and Boyle was defeated by Arnold Miller in a new election held in 1972.

The hearing on Boyle's removal to Pennsylvania has been rescheduled for Oct. 24, said Charles Moses, one of Boyle's lawyers.

Bambi Could Be Dinner

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

Roast venison, barbecued elk and squirrel stew may turn up on a lot of dinner tables this fall and winter as a substitute for roast beef and steak.

Americans fed up with high prices of beef, roast and poultry are hungry for meat and there are indications they will be tramping into the woods in record numbers to shoot it.

"The rabbits and squirrels are going to have a rough time of it," says a Conncecticut offical.

Arthur Neil, a Massachusetts official, agreed. "From the number of telephone calls we have been receiving, it is anticipated we are going to have a lot of hunters who hadn't hunted before," he said. "A lot more meat hunting will be going on than sport hunting."

Alaska, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Nevada, South Carolina, South dakota, Utah and Vermont already have received more license applications than in the past.

In many other states, some officials predict increases but no figures are available because license deadlines are not until October or November.

Idaho's 9,772 available nonresident elk and ddeer licenses were sold out a week before the hunting season started. "The woods are jammed with people hunting for the first time in their lives," reported a resident of one hunting area.

In Colorado, applications for elk licenses are up 33 per cent over last year when the state had 30,000 requests for 15,000 available licenses. There are 17,000 available licenses this year.

Connecticut, which requires persons who have not held a license in 10 years to take a safety course, has a record number of applicants for the course.

In Nebraska, hunters apparently are going to follow in the footsteps of the Pilgrims and hunt their Thanksgiving turkey in the fields instead of in the supermarket. More than 3,000 persons applied for the state's 1,200 turkey permits. Applications for deer and other big game are so numerous the state plans to use lotteries to determine who gets the permits.

A Kansas official said, "The beef situation is probably the biggest factor in the unexpected upsruge. Another reason may be the gasoline shortage. Hunters who used to go to Colorado are now hunting closer to home."

In some states, the promise of a big buck could mean considerable savings in meat costs to the veteran hunter. Last year's biggest catch in Illinois weighed 325 pounds on the hoof and the hunter paid only$8.25 in fees.

But other hunters say cost of ammunition, gasoline, licenses, lodging and dressing the carcass make wild meat more expensive than the supermarket variety. That doesn't include the cost of a rifle or shotgun to the first-time hunter.

The average price for a deer rifle is $75 to $200. Licenses for residents generally are between $5 and $10.

In Alaska, twice as many hunters as last year are expected to go gunning for moose which dress out to an average of 500 pounds. An average deer dresses out at 135 pounds. Alaskan officials doubt any novices will save money.

"Nobody hunts moose for fun," said John McKnight, state fish and game research director. "You have to go out and find it, shoot it, and then you have two or three days of back-breaking work. . .in dressing the animal and packing it out."

Brandt Declares War-On Hunger

By GEORGE BRIA
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - West German Chancellor Willy Brandt made his U.N. debut Wednesday with a call for war on hunger.

"Where hunger prevails there can be no peace in the long run," said Brandt, who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1971 for promoting East-West friendship.

That policy led last week, to U.N. membership for both Germanys.

He declared, "We must not only establish, and very quickly, what food is needed to keep large sections of mankind from hunger, but also whether the states are prepared to accept the rules required to that end.

"Morally it makes no difference," he added, "whether a man is killed in war or is condemned to starve to death by the indifference of others. We shall have to decide to break with the ritualistic traditions; who prescribes war also has to prescribe hunger."

The 59-year-old Brandt told the 135-member assembly, "Believe me, the wild dream that the destiny of a nation can be fulfilled only in unbridled nationalism has in our case completely faded away."

At the same time, Brandt made clear that West Germany, unlike East Germany, has not abandoned a long-range goal of German unification. He said it would "seek to create a state of peace in Europe in which the German people can regain their unity in free self-determination."

Senate Kills Troop Cutbacks

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Overturning a vote taken earlier in the day, the Senate Wednesday rejected an attempt to force a 40-per-cent cutback in U.S. land-based troops stationed abroad.

A 49-46 vote Wednesday morning had resulted in tentative acceptance of the amendment by Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield. But a second vote was necessary to tie the provision to the defense - procurement authorization bill.

That vote was 51 to 44 against the amendment.

The amendment strongly opposed by the Nixon administration, would have directed that 188,400 of the estimated 471,000 troops stationed abroad be withdrawn by July 1, 1976, with at least 47,100 being pulled back by next July 1.

Mansfield, asked his reaction, said, "I have nothing to say. We lost."

Asked how the votes were switched, he said: You'll have to ask the Defense Department, Gen. Goodpaster and the White House." The reference was to Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, the chief NATO commander. Mansfield had said Schlesinger and other officials had undertaken intensive lobbying.

Deputy White House press secretary Gerald L. Warren said President Nixon worked with staff aides throughout the afternoon "coordinating work on the Senate floor" to beat back the troop cut.

Asked if Nixon had telephoned any senators himself, Warren said he knew of no such instances but that Nixon had directed his chief lobbyist, William Timmons, to contact a number of senators.

The proposed withdrawals would have applied to U.S. troops in all foreign countries.

U.S. forces are stationed on every continent, including Anarctica.

Mansfield had asked for a 50-per-cent withdrawal, but amended it at the last minute to 40 per cent. A second vote on the amendment was to come on tying the cutback to the $21-billion military procurement authorization bill.

Before the order could become effective, it would have to win approval of a House-Senate conference and later of both houses, and be signed by President Nixon.

The House voted earlier this year against a 20-per-cent cutback in foreign-based troops. And Nixon has said this is the wrong time for a withdrawal.

But Mansfield told the Senate that action is long overdue.

Sen. John G. Tower, R-Tex., said the Mansfield amendment would sabotage planned U.S.-Soviet negotiations on mutual and balanced force reductions in Europe.

Responding to statements that European nations have not contributed their share to NATO, Tower said, "We are not in Europe for some altruistic reason" but for protection of American security interests.

Nixon Aide Defends "Dirty Tricks" Tactics

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nixon campaign tactician Patrick J. Buchanan said Wednesday that ghost-written advertisements, pranks and undercover operatives are legitimate political weapons.

He denied to the Senate Watergate committee, beginning the dirty tricks phase of its hearings, that he pulled the strings on political sabotage in the 1972 campaign from his post as President Nixon's top speech writer.

And he accused th committee of harboring "character assassins" who he said orchestrated a campaign to malign his reputation through the news media in advance of his testimony.

"A covert campaign of vilification carried on by staff members of your committee," Buchanan termed the leaks to news media.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., the committee's Democratic chairman, and Republican vice chairman Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn.-as well as majority counsel Samuel Dash-all said they deplored the leaks.

"There are covert or clandestine activities in intelligence in my view that there is nothing wrong with," Buchanan testified.

He conceded he directed the preparation of advertisements that appeared in the name of various committees, but added: "I've ghosted speeches for presidents, for vice presidents, for senators. I've ghosted letters to the editor. What's wrong with ghosting an ad that people are willing to put their names on?"

He admitted freely that he had urged an early attack on Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine when he was the front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination, but said he was not aware of any political sabotage campaign against Muskie or any other Democrat.

And he confirmed that he recommended measures to counter tax-exempt organizations like the Ford Foundation whose policies, he said, are "in basic disagreement with our own political philosophy."

"My view is that we ought to make the whole question of tax-exempt foundations and the use of their funds...to unbalance, the political process...a public and poitical issue," Buchanan said.

He said he recommended creation "of some of our own institutions"-conservative in nature-to be a counter to institutions he said had a liberal bias and for withholding discretionary funds for such organizations.

"I would recommend the President turn over such grants to organizations which follow principles we believe in, rather than to such as the Brookings Institution, which in my judgment is a government in exile for the Democratic Party," he said.

Buchanan said he was asked in summer 1971 to direct an investigation of Pentagon Papers figure Daniel Ellsberg but turned it down as "a waste of time and my abilities." He said he did not know what subsequently a group of "plumbers" was set up for that purpose.

Buchanan, long a vocal defender of Nixon policies, appeared without a lawyer. He invoked executive privilege only indirectly in refusing to bring documents asked in a committee subpoena. He said he did so on advice of White House attorneys.

But the committee had 34 memoranda, from Buchanan and others, obtained elsewhere. The documents showed:

-On March 24, 1971, Buchanan in a memo to the President headed "the Muskie Watch" recommended that the administration's interests "dictate smoking him out no and keeping him in front as long as we can."

Buchanan explained he felt then that political resources should be concentrated on Muskie, then the Democratic front-runner.

Of the election, Buchanan said, "if Muskie or Sen. George McGovern had won the election, given their views on American policies in Southeast Asia, it would have been little short of catastrophe. The only Democratic candidate I would have been confortable with would have been Sen. Henry M. Jackson."

Gas Rates Increase Will

WASHINGTON (AP) — Director John T. Dunlop of the Cost of Living Council confirmed Wednesday that the council will approve increases in the price of gasoline later this week.

Dunlop also said the council may hold public hearings on proposed increases in postal rates announced earlier this week by the U.S. Postal Service. Dunlop indicated that he was concerned over the size of the proposed increases, which would be two cents for airmail and first-class stamps, in addition to increases on other classes of mail.

"I have determined I am going to take a good close look at it, that's for sure," Dunlop told newsmen at a regular weekly briefing.

Dunlop had said earlier the gasoline price increases would be approved by next week.

But President Nixon said on Monday he wanted the gasoline price increase this week.

Dunlop also said consumers should be paying lower prices for beef and other meats within a few weeks at the latest.

He noted that the daily slaughter of cattle has increased substantially and that wholesale prices have dropped to $38.50 per hundred weight at Omaha this week, down 32 per cent from the August high of $56.75.

Senate Defends Soviet Jewry

WASHINGTON (AP)-The House Ways and Means Committee approved a proposal Wednesday to deny trade concessions to the Soviet Union unless it eases its Jewish emigration policy.

The amendment to the foreign trade bill under consideration was adopted by what was reported to be unanimous voice vote.

The amendment proposed by Chairman Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., and Rep. Charles Vanik, D-Ark., would prohibit most-favored-nation tariff treatment for the Soviets or a commercial trade deal with them unless the President determines they:

—Do not deny Jews and other citizens the opportunity to emigrate.

—Do not impose more than nominal emigration fees.

—Do not impose fees on the basis of the country to which a person wants to emigrate, such as Israel.

President Nixon has opposed such action by Congress, contending it could jeopardize the present U.S.-Soviet detente, including not only trade but disarmament talks.

Lawyers Hit Books Before Agnew Decision

By EDMOND LeBETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congressional lawyers worked al night researching precedents and seeking opinions before Speaker Carl Albert announced the House would not now conduct the inquiry sought by Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, Rep. Peter W. Rodine, Jr., D-N.J., said Wednesday.

Rodine, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, sat in on the leadership sessions Tuesday and Wednesday after Agnew made his surprise request for a House inquiry into allegations of corruption involving him.

In a statement amplified at a news conference Wednesday, Rodine backed Albert's decision to take no action now on Agnew's request.

"It is my personal view as a lawyer and a legislator that it would be inappropriate for the Congress to take any steps to impede the orderly administration of justice in the courts," Rodine said.

He said a House inquiry, whether or not it would block the grand jury investigation of Agnew scheduled to begin Thursday, could at least be used as an argument to do so.

Agnew's move Tuesday afternoon provoked a burst of study going right through the night, he said. Among the authorities consulted by telephone, Rodino said, was Raoul Berger, Harvard University law professor specializing in constitutional law, and author of the book "Impeachment: The Constitutional Problem."

He said the research showed the precedent cited by Agnew for a House investigation of charges against a vice president "is not four square with the present situation."

This was the case of Vice President John C. Calhoun, who asked in 1826 for a House inquiry into allegations against him, and was cleared by the House.

"In that case there had been no criminal charges filed, there had been cross allegations about matters that occurred while he was secretary of war," Rodino said.

A case apparently more nearly in point, Rodino said, was that of Vice President Schuyler Colfax. The House held, he said, that Colfax could not be impeached as vice pesident for acts that occurred earlier, while he was speaker.

He said Agnew's contention that he cannot be indicted by a grand jury while he is serving as vice presideent appears to be "almost without foundation."

Spacemen "Much Improved" After Day On Earth

By RICHARD SALTUS
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD USS NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Skylab 2 astronauts, back on earth after a 59 1/2-day space mission, were "much improved and all in very good spirits," space doctors said Wednesday.

Astronauts Alan L. Bean, Jack R. Lousma and Owen K. Garriott spent their first morning back on earth in more than two months sleeping late in their quarters aboard this prime recovery ship. They awoke about 10 a.m. EDT, just as the New Orleans was entering port at San Diego, Calif.

After the ship tied up at a dock hete, the spacement started a six-hour medical examination, their second since they splashed down in the Pacific Ocean on Tuesday.

Dr. Carter Alexander, a space doctor, said they were already showing signs of readapting to the gravity of earth.

He said they awoke very hungry, but breakfast had to wait until doctors could draw blood samples.

Afterward, the astronauts ate and began the long series of medical tests.

Despite history's longest exposure to the deconditioning effects of space weightlessness, the astronauts made a remarkable showing in medical tests Tuesday, doctors said.

"We're impressed," said Dr. Paul Buchanan, one of the space agency physicians on board here.

Garriott, he said, "looks very good."

Buchanan said, "The other two are slightly down. Owen has more bounce to the ounce. Jack trails him a little and Al is just a notch behind Jack."

He said their excellent condition may be "a real landmark in medical history. We are unbelievably happy with this data.

Weightlessness has the effect of permitting muscles to decondition or weaken. Since the muscles don't have to work against the constant tug of gravity, they waste away.

Intensive exercise by the astronauts during their marathon mission apparently halted the progressive deconditioning, Buchanan said, adding, "The personal exercise was the saver."

Buchanan said the tests on Tuesday showed the astronauts experienced a 10 to 20 per cent loss of heart conditioning and all were experiencing a feeling of heaviness.

Charges Dropped Against Former POW's

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP)-Navy Secretary John R. Warner has dropped misconduct charges brought against two former prisoners of war by Navy Adm. James B. Stockdale, a qualified Pentagon source said Wednsday night.

The charges had been brought against Marine Lt. Col. Edison Wainright Miller of Tustin, Calif., and Navy Capt. Walter E. Wilber of Columbia Crossroads, Pa., for activities during their years in North Vietnamese prison camps.

They are the only ex-POW officers to have faced misconduct charges. At least eight enlisted men were similarly charged.

No charges are now pending against any of the 566 returned prisoners of war.

The Pentagon source, who asked to remain unidentified, said although Warner has decided against summoning courts-martial for Miller and Wilber, the two men will nonetheless receive some kind of nonjudicial disciplinary action. The source declined to be more specific.

Stockdale had accused Wilber and Miller of mutiny, aiding the enemy, failure to obey an order and allied charges such as attempting to stir disloyalty among prisoners.

Wilber, the executive officer of a squadron of F4 phantom jets, has acknowledged making antiwar statements at the request of the North Vietnamese while he was held prisoner.

House Delays Action On Agnew Probe

this in his own way."

On another matter, Warren said Nixon did not concur or need to concur in Richardson's decision to take Justice Department evidence against Agnew to the federal grand jury in Baltimore.

Nixon "did not want to interject himself into or interfere with the judicial process and therefore it was not a matter of the President approving or concurring in the attorney general's action," Warren said.

Last month federal prosecutors notified the vice president he was under investigation for possible violations of tax, extortion, bribery and conspiracy laws. Agnew has steadfastly proclaimed his innocence.

In rejecting Agnew's request for a House hearing, Albert left open the possibility that when Agnew's case is no longer a matter for judicial action, the House might reconsider the decision if the facts warrant.

As leader of the Democratic majority in the House, Albert's personal decision is decisive providing he can keep Democratic members behind him. Albert made his announcement after conferring with other House Democratic leaders and there were indications that decision would not be challenged.

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan said he would not try to forge any coalition to override Albert's decision.

"If their ranks are solid and our ranks are solid, we don't have the votes," Ford said. "It's that simple."

Kissinger Diplomacy; Focus On European Relations

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)- Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said Wednesday that President Nixon definitely will visit Europe "in the near future."

Kissinger suggested at a news conference, however, that the positions of the United States and its allies across the Atlantic on a new economic and political relationship are still far apart.

Kissinger's remarks Wednesday at the United Nations focused on U.S.-European relations, while British and West German leaders called for freer movement of people and ideas between East and West.

The new secretary discussed with newsmen prospects for a presidential trip and a final declaration of cooperation during what Nixon has called "the year of Europe."

"We are not setting any artificial deadlines," Kissinger said with respect to both the trip and the declaration. On other points, Kissinger said:

-This is not a time for "any dramatic moves" by the United States in the Middle East. It would be better if Washington discussed with Israel and their Arab foes "what they are prepared to do" in approaching a settlement.

-The United States is prepared to reach a compromise with the Soviet Union over the U.N. peacekeeping role. In other words, the U.N. force should be able to "act expeditiously" in the event of a flareup, but should not be in day-to-day control as sought by Moscow.

-If Congress makes massive cuts in U.S. troop strength in Europe, "it will be very difficult if not impossible to convince our allies of the steadiness of our policy" as well as to negotiate a mutual reduction with the Soviet Union.

-The United States "has its own views, deeply held," about Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate and about dissident intellectuals, but there are limits as to what can be accomplished through exercise of U.S. foreign policy. Meanwhile, in a quiet way, "we believe we have been quite effective."

Winding up a three-day visit to the United Nations, Kissinger had a lunch date with Foreign Minister Michel Jobert of France and an evening conference with West German Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Kissinger already reached agreement with the nine European Common Market nations to begin formulation of new declarations on economic and political cooperation.

A session to start in on them will be held within a week in New York or Washington with Walter Stoessel, the assistant secretary of state for European affairs, representing the United States.

France has been the most skeptical of the allies about Kissinger's proposed new atlantic relationship. The luncheon talk with Jobert sought to narrow their differences.

Brandt is a central figure in the search for a consensus. He will confer on Saturday with President Nixon.

Kissinger also devoted some attention to other areas of the world. He discussed Indochina with Deputy Foreign Minister Cheenhavan Chatchai of Thailand, Latin America with Foreign Minister Marie Gibson Barboza of Brazil, and squeezed into a busy schedule a midday meeting with Ambassador Huang Hua, China's permanent U.N. representative.

Brandt and Sir Alec Douglas-Home, the British foreign secretary, held center stage in the General Assembly.

While Kissinger listened from the U.S. desk in the fifth row of the blue and gold chamber, Brandt called for war on hunger and spoke of "the moral aspects of international coexistence..."

"It is peace that benefits if people and information can move freely as possibly across boundaries," he said. Douglas-Home urged the East in a similar plea: "Let us share our ideas, our resources and out cultures. Let us not try to undermine but to understand, not to confront but to reconcile."

And Foreign Minister Max Van der Stoel of the Netherlands, declared: "In the long run, a European continent, divided by artificial barriers, behind which freedom of speech remains restricted, cannot be conceived."

"Where Is The Demand For Sunday Beano?"

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Initial approval was given in the Massachusetts Senate Wednesday to two gambling measures: one to allow the game of Beano to be played on Sundays, and one to provide 60 extra harness-racing days in four Western Massachusetts communities.

The Beano measure passed a 26-7 roll call vote, over the objections of Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, who called it one more move to chip away at safeguards on the game.

Locke said that like the $50 game limit-which the Senate voted two weeks ago to boost to $200-the Sunday prohibition had been built in as a hedge to the original bill that legalized Beano in 1971.

And he asked, "Where is the demand for Sunday Beano? Are the churches clamoring to turn the Lord's day into a day of gambling to increase their attendance?"

Locke also opposed the racing bill, which was approved on a 24-9 roll call vote.

An amendment to the bill would provide that the city council approval and a successful community referendum would both be need to approve racing in a community.

"I don't know why it is the Senate is on a headlong drive to foist more gambling on the people of Massachusetts," Locke said.

What Kind Of Art Is Public Art?

MIAMI, FLA.(AP)-What kind of art goes best with a jail? Or a motor pool storehouse? Or a police station?

That's the question facing city officials trying to cope with a recently passed ordinance that requires part of the cost of all new city buildings in Dade County to be spent on cultural displays.

Because of the ruling, North Miami City Manager Lawrence Casey is looking for $900 worth of art to adorn a motor pool building used to store lawnmowers, auto parts and a Christmas tree.

Miami City Manager Paul Andrews must find $125,000 worth of art works suitable for a new police station while Dade County Manager Ray Goode is searching for $90,000 in paintings or sculptures for a jail the county is planning.

Casey said some people have suggested having nude magazine centerfolds on the motor pool walls.

'I think the ordinance is a good idea but finding the right sculpture for a storage room is a problem," he added.

Andrews says he is considering ceramic tiles for the walls of the police station or possibly some paintings.

"I really don't know what would look good in a police station," he added.

The ordinance approved last week by the Dade County Commission requires that 1.5 per cent of public building construction costs be spent on art works to enhance the building.

Goode said a committee of experts would be formed to draw up guidelines for officials to follow when the new law takes effect in 60 days and give them advice about the art market.

The whole thing was the brainchild of County Mayor Jack Orr who says he got the idea on a visit to Hawaii where he found public buildings filled with works by local artists.

Crime Rate Up In Boston

BOSTON (AP) Serious crime increased in Boston during the first six months of the year, but decreased in seven other large New England cities.

Figures released Wednesday by the FBI and Justice Department showed that 95 cities in the nation showed a decrease in their crime indexes. Included in these were Fall River, Worcester and New Bedford in Massachusetts; Bridgeport, Hartford and Waterbury in Connecticut, and Providence, R.I.

Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson said serious crime in the nation declined one per cent during the first half of the year.

But violent crime, including murder, forcible rape and robbery, was up four per cent for the period, while crimes against property, such as burglary and auto theft decreased two per cent.

These figures taken together give the one per cent drop in national serious crime, but this lump figure can be misleading without looking at its constituents.

Crime in Boston increased in both the violent and property categories, but a police department spokesman said some of the statistical increase results from better reporting of the crimes.

FBI statistics show 60 murders in Boston for the first half of the year, compared with 46 for a similar period a year ago. Forcible rape increased to 176 cases from 110, and robbery climbed from 5,015 to 5,299.

Overloading Charged In Tobin Bridge Collapse

BOSTON (AP) - A criminal complaint charging overloading is apparently being sought in connection with the fatal truck accident two weeks ago which collapsed a section of the Tobin Bridge over the Mystic River.

Raymond C. Scanzani, head of the Registry of Motor Vehicles overload section, told a special legislative commission Wednesday that he could not comment on the case bcause of the pending court action.

David Bettencourt, 42, of Dartmouth was killed in the Sept. 10 accident.

Leaflets Call For Phnom Penh Overthrow

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)-Insurgent leaflets calling on citizens to help overthrow the government were spread Wednesday among the people of Phnom Penh, police sources disclosed.

The small, crudely printed leaflets warned residents to stay clear of two areas in the city designated as targets for attack. They declared, "Now it is time for all of us to strike and help our liberation forces overthrow the Phnom Penh traitors."

They did not designate any specific time for the attack. The two targets identified in the leaflets were the United Nations Bridge over the Bassac River on the southern fringe of the city and the national broadcasting station at Stung Mean Chey in the southwestern suburbs.

In the Phnom Penh area two governments columns are pushing to link up from the north and south at Thmat Pong, a former insurgent base camp 18 miles west of Phnom Penh.

This pincer movement would secure the vulnerable western approaches to the capital and greatly reduce the rocket threat to Pochentong Airport, three miles west of the city.

Phnom Penh's two vital supply arteries remain cut and little attempt is being made to reopen them because the government is keeping its reserve forces in Phnom Penh in case there is an attack during Prachum Ben, the festival of the dead, Sept. 26-28.

In South Vietnam, for the third straight day, government planes attacked North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces that overran a ranger base in the central highlands.

The Communist forces took the Le Minh base last Saturday in some of the hardest fighting since the Jan. 28 cease-fire.

Making Good Houses Good Homes

BOSTON (AP)-The U.S. Secretary of Housing and Urban Development said Wednesday federal officials are turning to the idea of maximum use of good existing housing to help low-income families, instead of costly new building.

Secretary James T. Lynn said a major six month study of the nation's housing indicated less than one quarter of Americans below the low-income line are being aided in public housing or federally-aided houses or apartments.

"So what we want to do is make decent housing available for all low-income families without the housing project Stigma, without stifling freedom of choice and the excessively high costs of current programs," he said.

Lynn commented in an address to the 3rd Urban Technology Conference meeting here.

He said the study indicated that 19 per cent of the section 235 subsidized homeowner program houses and 20 per cent of the section 236 subsidized apartment units will be foreclosed by default in the next 10 years.

"And we were less than delighted to discover," he said, "that on a national basis it costs from 15 to 40 per cent more for the government to provide housing for people through such programs than for these people to acquire that same housing themselves on the private market.

"What it all added up to was widespread inequity, wholesale waste and exorbitant cost that bought far too little in actual benefit."

Lynn said officials plan to study the results of the housing allowance experiment begun in 1970 and HUD wants to develop ways to measure "the cost of safe and sanitary housing in various parts of the country."

He said officials should have an operational program ready for final evaluation by late 1974 or early 1975.

"Since we're talking about something like $8-$11 billion a year to cover all expected to need such assistance, fiscal realities demand this kind of program be phased in over a number of years," Lynn said. "Quite probably, the first stage would consist of giving cash housing assistance to the elderly poor."

Lynn noted that existing programs have committed $65-$85 billion to be spent over the next 40 years on subsidized housing.

"I think it's time that we all realize that existing housing stock is a vital national resource which we simply must conserve," he said...

"And we think cash assistance to those who can't otherwise afford to pay the rent necessary to keep up such existing housing will go a long way toward preserving housing that remains basically sound, but will deteriorate fast if the market consists of families who can't pay enough."

US Trade-A Bright Spot

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The United States had a small $16.6 million trade deficit in August, following a July surplus, but the country still seems headed for its best trade year in three years, the Commerce Department said Wednesday.

The continuing improvement in the country's trade balance has been the one big bright spot in the economy this year. It means a stronger dollar aboard and more jobs at home, government economists say.

In other economic developments Wednesday:

-A major measure of business activity, the composite index of leading indicators, increased 1.2 per cent in August, even though six of the eight indicators were down.

-Director John T. Dunlop of the Cost of Living Council said retail beef prices should begin to decline in several weeks, but that gasoline prices will go up this week.

-He confirmed that the council will approve gasoline price increases toward the end of the week.

-Dunlop also hinted strongly that the council may challenge the proposed two-cent hike in the cost of air mail and first-class stamps, along with other postal rate increases announced this week by the U.S. Postal Service.

The results of the country's foreign trade in August gave added support to a prediction by Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz this week that the nation would score its first trade surplus in three years next year.

The August deficit of $16.6 million compared with a surplus of $106 million in July-only the second monthly surplus in 2½ years-but was a big improvement over the deficit in August 1972 of $529 million.

Suit Aimed At Asian Arms

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP)-Four members of Congress and 17 members of a North Carolina peace coalition filed suit in federal court Wednesday to block shipment of combat munitions to Southeast Asia.

The suit contended that munitions shipped from the Sunny Point, N.C., military terminal violated a congressional mandate that all U.S. military support, direct or indirect, of combat in Southwest Asia was to end on Aug. 15.

The suit bore the names of Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass.; Rep. Parren Mitchell, D-Md.; Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif.; Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y.; and members of peace groups operating in North Carolina.

Named as defendants were Defense Secretary James H. Schlesinger; Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger; Army Secretary Howard Callaway and his assistant, Vincent Huggard; William Colby, director of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency; and military commanders involved in logistics and operation of the Sunny Point terminal.

The court was asked to order immediate cessation of any ordnance shipments from Sunny Point or any other tax-supported U.S. base; to halt use of U.S. military forces to support, direct or indirect, combat activities in or over or from the shores of North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Laos or Cambodia; and to stop the use of public funds to finance combat activities in those countries.

Marrow Transplant Patient Dies

BOSTON, (AP)-A 15-year old Michigan boy who underwent a bone marrow transplant earlier this month died five days later at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital.

The boy, Michael Fager, underwent the operation Sept. 11 after his case was taken to the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

The hospital said Wednesday that the boy died Sept. 16.

The boy had suffered from aplastic anemia and received the transplant from his 13-year-old brother, Gordon, who is mentally retarded.

Because of the mental retardation, there was a question-settled by the state Supreme Court of whether Gordon could fully comprehend the possible risks in the operation. The high court ruled that the operation could take place.

F.A.A. Official Says Equipment Faulty On Doomed Delta Flight

WASHINGTON, (AP)-A Federal Aviation Administration official told investigators Wednesday that the Delta jetliner which crashed July 31 in Boston had experienced equipment malfunctions on a flight five days before.

FAA Inspector Murrell W. Johnson told a National Transportation Safety Board hearing that he had been an observer on a flight from Atlanta to Birmingham, Ala., on July 26 when the plane's flight director behaved unreliably while the plane was making an instrument landing at Birmingham.

Previous testimony had shown that the Delta DC9 jetliner was attempting an instrument landing at Boston's Logan International Airport when it crashed into a sea wall short of the runway, killing 88 persons.

A transcript of the conversation between the cockpit and the control tower shows one of the crew members, in an apparent reference to tHe flight director, saying, "I don't trust that thing."

Johnson described the flight director as the primary instrument in making an instrument landing. However, Delta Capt. Richard Hendrichson who testified to a similar malfunction during a July 25 landing at Cincinnati, described the flight director as merely a backup to readings available from other instruments.

In other testimony Wednesday Capt. John N. Streil, the pilot of the doomed aircraft, was described as "above average flier. That testimony came from Delta Capt. George Bass.

V.P. Voting Reform Urged

A western Massachusetts resident active in last year's Democratic Presidential campaign has called for "two significant reforms" in the process by which Democrats will choose their vice-presidential nominee in future national elections.

The recommendations came in testimony by Kenneth Mosakowski at Amherst at a public hearing Wednesday before the Democratic Commission on Vice-Presidential Selection Reform. The hearing, which took place at the State House in Boston, was chaired by Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota and former Governor Endicott Peabody of Massachusetts.

In his remarks, Mosakowski urged the Commission to require "any aspirant for the Democratic vice-presidential nomination to declare his or her candidacy for the office at least six months before the date of the party's national convention."

"This," he said, "would allow sufficient time for the press, the public--and the elected convention delegates--to examine carefully the qualifications of each candidate for the nomination."

Mosakowski was himself an elected delegate to last year's Democratic National Convention in Miami Beach, Florida.

The 26-year-old activist also recommended that the calendar for future Democratic national conventions "be expanded a minimum of one day to allow the presidential nominee more time to weigh his or her preferences for a running mate." Mosakowski noted that at last year's convention Senator George McGovern had "only a few hours" after his own presidential nomination to select a candidate for the number two spot on the national ticket.

BOSTON (AP)-Louise Day Hicks and John J. Kerrigan led vote-getters in Tuesday's preliminary elections for City Council and for School Committee.

Approximately 15 per cent of the city's 268,171 voters cast ballots in the election.

Mrs. Hicks is a former congresswoman, city councillor and school committee chairman. A would-be mayor of Boston, she ardently opposes enforced busing in achieve racial balance in city schools.

Sodomy Law Under Fire

BOSTON (AP)-A state legislator and representatives from the offices of the Senate president and House speaker held a panel session on lobbying at the State House Wednesday for groups seeking the repeal of laws against sodomy.

Several organizations interested in repeal of the laws declared Wednesday "Gay Americans Day" at the State House. Representatives of the groups spent the day talking to legislators and learning about the legislative process.

State Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston, said at the afternoon panel session that the day's events helped "puncture the sterotype" of homosexuals held by many legislators.

He said that lobbying for "gay rights" is the toughest lobbying job because the issue "hits society at its most prejudiced point."

The Rev. John Eller of House Speaker David M. Bartley's office told the group that the best approach to lobbying is to be factual and to be honest about social problems and discrimination.

He said that many of the issues involving morality would have to be solved by the courts rather than the legislature.

Several of those attending the session said their legislators would not talk to them.

Is There Really A Fuel Shortage?

BOSTON (AP) - Predictions of a fuel crisis may be manufactured by "billionaire corporations," but the shortage of facts is real, the chairman of the Massachusetts Consumers' Council said Wednesday. "We don't know that they're violating antitrust laws. There may be a conspiracy. We don't know, and it's very expensive to find out," William F. Willier said.

In a letter to John A. Love, director of the White House Energy Policy Office, Willier asked for "open and complete disclosure to the American public of information relating to supplies and costs of all fuels."

To combat any impending shortage, Willier also asked Love to provide for mandatory allocation of fuel by producers to all parts of the country, and for the creation of a federal petroleum corporation to compete with private companies and monitor supplies.

He told newsmen that certain facts gathered by his office appear to contradict predictions of a fuel crisis, and support the possibility that companies are deliberately issuing false reports.

He said Detroit "continues to grind out monster cars, making them still bigger and more gas wasting than last year's models. Does the automobile industry know something about the gasoline supply that the people do not know?"

He said that despite predictions of a fuel oil shortage after which prices last winter were boosted by 10 to 15 per cent, distributors are making commmitments to customers for a full supply.

"Is this fuel oil shortage real? Is it created?" he asked. And he said despite predictions of a shortage of natural gas, his office "has evidence" that Boston Gas is still promoting the use of gas appliances and gas heating systems.

"If they've got a shortage, why are they promoting use of gas fuel?" he asked.

But Willier said these indications were meager evidence, and that "an honest assemblange of information" has been impossible to find.

"If you want to summarize what I've said, we're just frustrated as hell," he said.

Hats are back, and we've got them. I'm certain many of you remember the fun we had with the ALI hat last year. Well, this year's version is bulky knit with a wide popcorn-stitched turned-back cuff. Your ears will stay toasty warm on the most blustery Fall day. But that's not all. We have the new ALI in soft, cuddly angora, all fluffy and pastel, plus a very continental beret, also in angora. Corduroy tweed, woolen tweed, velveteen, a loose knit, floppy brimmed number and a patched creation made of worn levis are among the new additions to this most important of the fashion accessories. Any one would be the perfect compliment to one of the Stewart's COLD FIGHTER coats or jackets.

For something a little more dramatic, how about a rakish brimmed felt with a foot long feather? Sounds like Robin Hood is making a comeback in Northampton.

Remember, if it's new in fashion, in Northampton, Stewart's is sure to have it first.

Royal Wedding Could Make Top 10

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Britain's Princess Anne, her husband-to-be Capt. Mark Phillips, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the prestigious Westminster Abbey choir seem an unlikely group to make a hit record.

But the royal lineup may knock the Rolling Stones and other rock kings off their thrones at the top of the best-selling record charts.

A 50-minute longplay album will be recorded by the British Broadcasting Corp. Nov. 14, when Anne marries Phillips.

The BBC plans to press 100,000 copies of the record. A first pressing of this size is usually reserved for big-name entertainers guaranteed to have a smash hit.

"It's the level of the Top 10 album, the sort of level you expect with the Stones and other regular chart-toppers," said Roy Tempest, sales and marketing manager of the BBC's record division.

The BBC had a surprise hit with Anne's brother Prince Charles six years ago when he was invested as Prince of Wales in a colorful and ancient ceremony at Caernarvon Castle in Wales.

The recording of that solemn ceremony sold 44,000 copies and BBC executives expect even bigger things from the wedding.

"I couldn't believe it at first," Tempest recalled. "But it proved to me that this sort of thing, if well packaged and presented, will compete with the Top 10 pop albums in the business."

Tempest is a onetime show business agent and promoter who handled a stable of rock 'n' roll groups.

Anne's wedding to Phillips, a commoner, has aroused massive interest in Britain. The couple's romance and secret engagement kept the nation talking for months. The controversy over the cost of their wedding has stirred many objections from critics who claim that Anne's mother, Queen Elizabeth II, should foot the bill instead of leaving it to the taxpayer.

State Legislator Claims Threats Of Physical Violence

By STEVEN A. COHEN

BOSTON (AP)-A young, outspoken Republican state legislator from Worcester says two members of the House Democratic leadership have threatened him with physical violence.

Rep. David J. Lionett said the House majority leader, Rep. Thomas McGee of Lynn, threatened to beat him up, and the assistant majority leader, Rep. William Q. MacLean of Fairhaven, threatened to punch him between the eyes.

Both Democrats denied issuing the threats. And Lionett said he doubted that they would follow through.

Lionett, who acknowledged his interest in running for Congress, recently issued a few press releases critizing the legislature. In one, he charged that House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, McGee and MacLean fail to spend adequate time on the people's business.

According to Lionette, MacLean approached him in the House chamber Monday and said he would punch him between the eyes if he makes similar statements in the future.

McGec, Lionett said, called him into his office and, after "ranting and raving, jumping and screaming," said he would beat him up if additional statements are forthcoming.

Lionett said he regards the alleged threats as bluffs. MacLean said he regards Lionett as immature.

And McGee said he would "appreciate anyone talking about me to tell the truth."

McGee went on to say that he has no outside financial interests and, "I don't have to apologize to anyone for the job I do" as a legislator. MacLean said Lionett is "running for Congress; looking for headlines and very immature for a guy serving in the legislature."

Lionett, 30, is a successful insurance salesman serving his second term in the legislature. He's a member of the insurance industry's Million Dollar Round Table, an indication of his success in business.

And while he aspires to success in politics, The Boston Herald-American headed a recent column about Lionett, "Candidate for Siberia."

Years ago, the article said, legislators who annoyed the leadership were assigned to the new-abolished Committee on Water Supply, otherwise known as Siberia.

Of the leadership, Lionett said, "those guys try to break you as fast as they can, and they don't stop trying." He said all he is trying to do is "raise legitimate, honest questions about how we operate."

McGee and MacLean see things in a different light.

"I just don't think some of the things he said in reference to me were true," McGee said.

House Approves Ambulance Bill

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts House approved of the bill to regulate ambulance service Wednesday.

At a brief session with no debates, the House also advanced a bill to give the Department of Public Works Building police jurisdication over traffic in adjacent streets, with authority to have illegally parked vehicles towed away.

Also endorsed was a bill to reimburse John R. Horan of Worcester for $10,000 in legal expenses in his successful defense against criminal charges. The complaint resulted from a highway construction accident at a time he was DPW resident engineer on the project.

The change in the ambulance bill would make fines for deficiencies subject to court authorization.

Providence Strike Ends

JOURNAL Continues

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)-The Providence Journal Co. resumed publication of its two newspapers yesterday after local 41 of the Newspaper guild voted overwhelmingly to end its 13-day strike.

The Guild, representing about 400 editorial, advertising and maintenance employes, dropped contract demands Tuesday night and accepted a two-year pact which had been offered by the company in May.

The contract, providing 6.2 per cent wage increases annually, had been put into effect by the company in May after the Guild voted to terminate the contract under which it was working. The company continued to refuse payment of retro-active pay increases for a 90-day period between January and May-the issue which led to the strike.

A Guild statement acknowledged the union failed to achieve its goals, but said the strike, the first in the newspaper's history, "had the effect of bringing the five unions at the company closer together-an important first step in future labor relations with the company."

A company statement thanked readers for support during the strike and added, "With this behind us, we will work together to continue the proud tradition of these newspapers."

Asked if all strikers would retain their jobs, a company spokesman said it reserved the right to take possible disciplinary action after "a full and fair examination of the facts."

The company publishes The Providence Journal in the morning and The Evening Bulletin in the afternoon. The two papers were combined into a single, abbreviated edition during the strike.

The end to the strike was signaled by a temporary injunction issued in Superior Court to limit picking and maintain order outside the newspaper plant. It cleared the way for pressmen, compositors, Photoengravers and others to cross the picket lines for the first time.

Marxist Prof-Mum's The Word

LITTLE ROCK (AP)-An assistant professor of history at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock says he has been told by his superiors not to tell his students he is a communist who teaches from a communistic viewpoint.

Dr. Grant Cooper, who joined the Marxist Progressive Labor Party in the summer, said he was given the instruction about his teaching from Dr. Fred Williams, head of the history department, and Dr. Bedford Hadley, head of the social sciences division, after the university received complaints.

Cooper said he "didn't remember clearly" if Williams told him the directive came from Chancellor G. Robert Ross.

Ross has insisted that he has made no such request to Hadley or Williams. The chancellor refused to comment about Cooper, saying, "I don't discuss personnel matters with the press."

Williams also said there may be a legal question in the employment of a person claiming membership in a subversive organization.

The situation was disclosed this week in an article in Essence, a campus newspaper which has no official connection with UALR.

The article quoted Cooper as saying "I am a communist as a teacher and a person. I'm teaching the course with a point of view, and that point of view is that of a communist. I think it's important for the student to know that, and it should come at the beginning of the course."

Williams said he had received five telephone calls from persons objecting to Cooper's classroom pronouncements during the first two weeks of summer classes.

Cooper said he had received support as well as criticism from his colleagues.

"Some think saying I'm a communist is needlessly provocative," Cooper added. "I think we owe it to my students to tell them what my point of view is. I assume they can understand".

This issue was "not a matter of free speech," Cooper said. "I don't believe in absolute free speech," he added. "People don't have the right to incite a riot. They don't have the right to yell 'Fire!' in a crowded theater."

One student discussed Cooper with her minister, then called Ed Gran, a physics instructor and former campus sponsor of the conservative Young Americans for Freedom. Gran said he told the minister he was glad that Cooper was philosophically honest.

Eulogy For Howard Hunt

E. Howard Hunt Jr., convicted Watergate burglar, former CIA agent, veteran of the Bay of Pigs misadventure, super patriot, and author, has just completed his testimony before the Senate Watergate Committee. This phase of the hearings, relative to the summer sessions is less surprising and sensational. The witnesses that are scheduled pale when compared with Dean, Mitchell, Haldeman, or Erlichman. The hearings have already been shoved off the front page to make room for the continuing saga of Spiro Agnew.

Nevertheless, Hunt's testimony perhaps more than any thus far, sheds some light on the moral and ethical forces that drove the conspirators to undertake such stupid, unnecessary, and illegal operations. This "Hunt mentality" is not unique in this country, but it is only a special few who actually have the opportunity and resources to translate their thinking into action. In this case the Federal Government did the providing, and encouraged if not directly ordered the operation to take place. There is a responsibility to be borne here, and the question is who does the carrying? When a secret agent is recalled by his government and employed to perform dirty tricks in the name of the President of the United States, where does the guilt rest?

Every man must be held to answer for his own actions, and some will argue that it matters not on whose behalf he works. By changing his plea to innocent, Howard Hunt obviously dislikes being in prison, and does not relish the thought of thirty more years of the same. But he also states that he was assured, by aides to the President, that his undertaking was in the national interest. So the question is who should pay the price for Howard Hunt's work, and what, if any, blame rests on society in general.

Hunt's involvement in Watergate has direct connections to his Bay of Pigs involvement in 1962. He was a leader of the anti-Castro forces, and is convinced that the Kennedy Administration botched the whole plan, a plan that would have succeeded, says Hunt, had Richard Nixon been elected President. It is no secret that Nixon was viewed as a friend to the Cuban exiles, and they could be relied upon to assist him in attaining the presidency in "68 and '72. On top of that, Mc Govern had been accused of accepting money from Castro, so it was therefore imperative that he not attain office. Playing on the emotions of the exiles and using "Eduardo" Hunt as ring leader, the White House proceeded to make absolutely certain that Richard Nixon was re-elected. It was no accident that four Cubans were arrested in the Watergate, and that several of the conspirators had "Cuban connections". The intricacies of the situation have become overshadowed by the illegality of the actual break in.

The Howard Hunt we saw Monday and Tuesday was certainly not a dashing, devil may care secret agent. He was an old man weak, tired, and bitter at the government he had served for most of his life. It would seem to be a government that would be willing to see lesser men rot in jail for the crimes of greater men. A government that would encourage acts on the one hand, and disown those who

The Howard Hunt we saw Monday and Tuesday was certaintly not a dashing, devil may care secret agent. He was an old man weak, tired, and bitter at the government he had served for most of his life. It would seem to be a government that would be willing to see lesser men rot in jail for the crimes of greater men. A government that would encourage acts on the one hand, and disown those who have acted on the other.

And what role do we, the people, play in this affair? This is a society that has glorified the likes of James Bond, and romanticized about cloak and dagger operations, and rainy evenings in Casablanca. It's all very exciting until real life intervenes, and we are shocked by a nightmare that we have created for ourselves. Watergate cannot be rationalized away, and any attempt to would be foolish. And any attempt to place guilt on any one man for the outrages of society is equally foolish.

Howard Hunt is a romantic, and this is evident in the several novels he has written. He was infatuated with his chosen profession. When he retired he could never get over the fact that he had been a secret agent. He used his role in CIA to act out his dreams and confirm his manliness, much as society used his adventures to fantacize on its own. But Howard Hunt went one step too far, he accepted one last assignment. It ended up with the very government he had served for so long, using him, illegally, in the name of the President of the United States.

Society has a way of turning on people, the super spy and secret agent becomes the villain, to be condemned rather than condoned, and pitied rather than emulated. Perhaps Cassius was right, "The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves."

Amherst's Sewage Problem

The problem of sewage treatment in Amherst is so severe that no new homes or developments can be constructed without special permission from the state. The problem is of concern to UMass students not only because UMass produces over one-third of the town's sewage.

The present sewage treatment plant is on the Mill River in back of the University's baseball field. The plant was designed as a primary treatment operation; that means it will remove about 70 per cent of the suspended solids in the water when it is operating at Maxium efficiency. The partially cleaned wastes are then pumped into the Connecticut River where they are dissipated within a few miles by the river's natural cleaning processes.

Unfortunately, the plant can not handle all the town's sewage. It was designed with a capacity of about 4.5 million gallons a day. At times the flow exceeds this, although the average daily flow was 3.7 million gallons in 1972. This was an increase of 500,000 gallons over 1971. The flow is always measured in terms of a daily rate, so that for an hour or two sewage might flow at the rate of 6 million gallons a day while later in the same day the flow rate would be 3 million gallons. When the plant is exceeding its capacity the waste water does not receive enough treatment to remove 70 per cent of the suspended solids and the discharge is more polluting. This is compounded by a problem with the pumps that push the wastes to the River. They can not pump the sewage fast enough so that some must be by-passed into the Mill River. The wastes that would dissipate in the Connecticut River severely pollute the smaller Mill River. The pumps have an especially hard time when the river is high because the pressure on the end of the pipes at the river is considerably higher.

The federal and state governments realized this and put some pressure on the Town to comply with proposed schedules based on new regulations. Water quality criteria standards established in 1965 would let Amherst dump its wastes directly into the River without treatment because the quality of the river would not be severely affected. The Feds realized that every small town was going to attempt this so in their infinite wisdom they required towns to provide secondary treatment for sewage. Secondary treatment cleans about 90 per cent of the suspended solids and some organic material out of waste water. The town made an effort to meet the requirements but a 1971 plan was rejected for various reasons. The plan had proposed to incinerate the solids drawn from the treated water. The rejection of the plan threw Amherst off the compliance schedule. A new plan will be proposed this winter and hopefully it will combine the disposal of the sludge from the treatment center

Lesbians And Sexism

By DENNY MATTEAU

There are lesbians and there are lesbians.

Tuesday night, when asked what she thought of gay men, Jill Johnston said, "...ah...uh...great. I mean, to see men getting it on with each other is just great. I, personally, don't see what they see in each other, but, after all, that just leaves the field that much more open for us, doesn't it?"

"THE FIELD"!?Is that what we are, Jill, a FIELD? For YOU?

I consider that remark no less piggish than if a man had said it. Cute, how Jill defined women out of the possibility of being sexist. Whether women can be sexist against men is debatable, whether one considers defensive actions sexist, that's a good question. But it doesn't ask whether women can be sexist against other women.

I think we can!

Our mothers, in separating us out from our brothers, have been sexist, even though that sexism has not always been maliciously motivated. All the Miss Etcetras are sexist, weakly but insidiously sexist. They have made themselves into the barbs on the whips of those who would press us all into girdles and mudpacks.

Jill Johnston is the first woman I have met who is sexist in the way that men can be sexist. Mothers and Miss Etceteras are masochistically sexist, for they have used their self-sacrifice as a weapon against their kind. Jill Johnston is sadistically sexist.

I would not hesitate to black the eye of any man who comes up to me and suggests that the only way to my soul is through his prick. I can see no difference between that man's attitude and Jill's.

Lesianism is one way to deal with one's own life. It is one answer to the personal problems that inevitably arise from discovering ourselves in second place since birth. It is a personal way, and does not by itself constitute a solution. It may be an essential part of the solution.

But the lesbian relationship is not infallible. This is obvious in Jill's constant references to the women she "had". It necessarily involves people, and people are capable of seeing each other as objects useful for pleasure, rather than as full partners in pleasure. There has to be personal respect in all personal relationships, and even then, all the personal respect in the world isn't going to touch institutional sexism. To fight that, we have to get out of bed!

Frying In Hell!

Although I don't make a practice of worshipping a personified deity, I adhere to a general policy of granting respect to those who do, or at least ignoring those whose beliefs run against my grain. But the current wave of Christian evangelism has taken on such a negative tone, here at UMass, that to withhold comment would be to ignore a very dangerous set of notions which have frightening implications.

The Agape (Christ-love) teach-ins this past week have amounted to quite an extravaganza. The publicity campaign leading up to the event was reminiscent of the old leftist propaganda barrages of the recent past. Out of curiosity, I attended two of the featured lectures. The first was a series of prophecies delivered by the much-heralded Josh, but I always considered biblical prophecies and those who claim prophetic powers to be a bit unreal, and consequently I left that particular lecture without being overly awed.

The lecture delivered Tuesday night by Arthur Katz was quite another story. Katz, a Brooklyn-born, Berkeley educated Jew, was being billed by the Campus Crusade for Christ as a "complete" Jew. Why "complete?" He had seen the way and accepted Christ as the Savior. And he was here to save those who were still "incomplete" Jews.

The Campus Center Auditorium was nearly packed to hear Katz. Most of those attending were those who had already seen the light, and had come to accept Jesus Christ. But there were approximately twenty-five or so members of the Hillel organization, which is the Jewish student society. They were neatly segregated in one corner of the Auditorium, and were conspicuously identified by the yarmulkes (skullcaps) worn by the men and the Jewish Star necklaces worn by the women.

Arthur Katz took the stage and immediately intensified the polarization which existed in the audience. He raised his arms and urged everyone to sing along with him, in praise of Jesus Christ, son of the Living God, who died for the sins of man. The majority sang with him, with their arms in the air. But the Jewish arms were folded tightly across their chests, which drew stares from the rest of the audience. The whole scene was reminiscent of a segment of the movie "Cabaret," where a group of Hitler boyscouts evoke a similarly polarized response to the singing of "Tomorrow Belongs to Me."

Katz's subsequent speech was even more revolting. His delivery alteranted between a slick, Dale Carnegie style when addressing the Campus Crusaders, and a put-on Jewish inflection when he turned toward the Hillel group. His message, however, was not intended to reinforce the fervor of those already won over to the cause of the Saviour, but rather to save from hell the souls of Jews. He made it clear to everyone that Heaven and Hell awaited us all, and only those who obeyed God and affirmed Jesus would be permitted to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. The rest, presumably those persistant Jews, would go directly to Hell, without passing "Go," and without collecting two hundred dollars.

The question and answer period was even more stormy. The Jews were rightfully offended by his insistance that salvation required belief in Jesus. Katz reiterated and stood firm to his insistance that his was the only way.

Katz's responses to the Jewish inquiries brought applause from those who saw his way, which added to the circus atmosphere. The Jews, having enough of Katz's "Assimilate or Go To Hell!" exhortations, departed en masse, leaving Katz to match pennies with Reverend Lang Baldwin, who claimed that the Jews would be forgiven by God in the end. One member of the Campus Crusade rose to dispute Reverend Baldwin, claiming that the Bible states that those who deny Christ shall not be saved.

The very notion which spawned the hostilities between Katz and the Jews was not the Jewish concept of god vs. the Christian concept. It was, rather, the notion that there is an afterlife, and that all individuals are destined to serve out their non-physical existance in either Heaven or Hell. But this notion should be exposed for what it is. It is in fact, one of history's most repugnant myths, concocted for the purpose of terrorizing innocent believers into obedience. The notion holds that salvation lies beyond the grave, and that earthly existance is to be lived for the sake of the commandments of the local Holy Rollers. Salvation for those who go the way of Jesus, damnation for those who don't. Katz was very firm in denial that the concept of "Christians Only" salvation was in any way related to the forced conversion of Jews in Spain during the Inquisition. He insisted that he wanted only "volunteers". But one who insists that damnation is the only path for those who don't convert can hardly be referred to as a benign proselytizer. History has been full of Arthur Katzes, of subtle and charismatic assimilationists who attempt to achieve by persuasion what the Torquemadasdo by force. And due to the everlasting persistance of the Jewish people, the Torquemadas take up where the Arthur Katzes leave off. And the Sonnderkommandos with their wheelbarrows come in where the Torquemadas leave off.

If you happen to take the Holy Rollers seriously, you'll probably feel sorry for me, since I've been condemned to an afterlife of everlasting torture. But please don't worry. I may be going BELOW, but it will only be six feet under. And instead of everlasting damnation, I will peacefully decompose.

Lesbian Solution?

By ZOE BEST

After Tuesday night's reading of a personal narration from Lesbian Nation by Jill Johnston, much of the discussion that could be overheard was not of the type that elevates women or women's image of herself. The aftermath revolved around such questions as: Do "dykes" have it together to pull off a revolution? Is the South really Catholic? Did a homosexual entrepreneur write Lesbian Nation and then find an author?

This $750 "lecture" usurped an opportunity to dignify women's efforts to fight the same system that many oppressed people are fighting and instead provided the opportunity for further ridicule of women. Obviously in an exploitive, imperialistic patriarchy the rampaging epidemic of sicknesses occurs and afflicts us all to some degree. Women who found themselves laughing in complicity with the mockery should have picked up their dignity and left. The male counter model to Jill Johnston's proposal, "Homosexual Nation" is the phenomena that was concomitant to imperial Rome, to the Nazi Crusades and presently to the U.S. corporate imperialism that reduces every individual and every group to a productive unit. Home-bound women in a capitalist system enjoy little benefit of social value and thus the current struggle among women to gain a legitimate function in society emerges. Women reject being viewed only as child-bearers as this provides future workers to be exploited (female workers, minimum wage) or future voters to maintain those in power, while at the same time they receive no credit or affirmation, and her-his-story and power remain in the hands of the most viscious. Women's sexual identity, how it is inhibited and prohibited and how necessarily and naturally it should not be the domain of men or of a male dominated state should be analyzed. The remedy offered by Jill Johnston, however, relies on an individualistic solution, a mode of resolution on which the system thrives.

Women in struggle in this nation are conscious enough to see the parochialism in a phrase such as "Hillbilly land", the consumerism operating in the ploy of "women wanting women and men wanting women," the racism when "segregated toilets" become the level of recognizable oppression for Blacks (in 1973) and the disparagement of issues such as abortion, equal pay, and child care relating them as "complaints." There is no need for competition in the area of issues. These issues are pertinent in an initial phase where women are collectivizing the consciousness of their sisters. Women find themselves struggling within the confines of a patriarchy and know that subjagation can always be traced to its mechanism of capitalism, eventually fascism. It is obvious that patriarchal man, the authoritarian male can exist in either a capitalistic or collectivized economy, there is a growing awareness that even after a hypothetical political or military struggle to institutionalize a collectivized society, which is a straight marxist answer for ending exploitation, that oppression of women and ethnic minorities may still remain. The "feminist utopia" does not exist in the Soviety Union for example. Although the landslide of decadency will increase its momentum and with the authentic liberation movements struggling on the outside and from within, this monolyth, the massive patriarchal super-structure will disintegrate.

Thus perhaps the DVP could have better spent student money had they arranged for a conference, same cost, same place, on the prospects of a gynocracy. Or, if it was intended to present a model from the Women's movement, a woman could have been invited who had more on her mind than the liberation of her vagina. Liberation is not achieved by choice of a bed-mate. In the past and in the future "liberation" involves collective pain, struggle, tears and blood. It will be no less for honest women.

with the rest of the town's solid wastes. With some luck the new plant should be in operation by 1976. No concrete plans are being made to make this facility a regional plant, although the plant will be able to treat the wastes of some of the area's smaller towns.

One might fault town officials for failing to anticipate the sewage problem. But they must be applauded for attempting to make the plant they build the best possible plant.

Too often people try to pass environmental problems on to the government. The amount of sewage is directly related to the amount of water consumed. If people used less water the present problem would not be severe. Showers use less water than baths; dishwashers and clothes washers should only be operated when they are full. If possible, try to run your washers and take showers late at night when the treatment facility is not so busy. It's time for people to stop talking about the environment and start doing something about it.

Pollutor of the Week: Josh!!!!! Not only did Josh contribute to noise pollution on campus; he added considerable visual and solid waste pollution. The posters used to advertise his coming are everywhere and they should be removed. Even if they are removed the Josh people should be faulted for using excessive amounts of paper.

Maximum Sex, Minimum Facts

By FREDERIC C. WEISS

Heard Josh speak Wednesday night in the Student Union. Had planned to boycott him on principle, because I resented the importance given his visit, also the fanatacism of his "disciples". When curiosity finally won out, I found myself amidst 1000 other people as Josh McDowell spoke on the topic of "Maximum Sex-Love Is Still Possible In A Junky World".

Funny thing, though, I really enjoyed listening to him. Josh is quite a showman, a good speaker. It is apparent that he is well versed in his routine. Throughout the presentation there was no silence for more than five seconds. The only voice to be heard for two hours was Josh's.

Yet he is no prophet. Besides his jokes and style, his religious message fell on unsympathetic ears with this writer. Not that all of what Josh said is bull. He stresses the value of "total love for love's sake" over conditional love ("I'll love you if.."). Also that man must find a peace of mind to achieve a sense of mental balance. I agree.

Where I disagree with Josh is in his solution to the problems (man not knowing himself, or how to relate with real love). Josh feels that all of the things that he mentions can be found through Jesus Christ, and I find that to be a contradiction in itself. Briefly, I just don't think it's so!!

Psychologist Erich Fromm wrote many excellent books within the last fifteen years, capturing the concept of "alienation" and lack of "purpose" that Josh spends so much time doing. However Fromm never wrote that the solution could be found in an outside source (such as Christ), but in inner contemplation and thought; active intentions and hope (which according to Fromm is an active force within itself.) Fromm's solution seems to be one of truth and love within yourself and then sharing that truth and love with other people, and life in general.

Josh stresses just the opposite. Through Jesus all will be forgiven. Through prayer, happiness and peace will be achieved. Yet isn't this going away from the problem? By looking to an outside force isn't this running away from yourself?

In many cases Josh does make his point. Unfortunately it is one based on extreme examples rather than rational examination of the facts. One example of this is the aspect of sex. Josh seems to feel that it is usually a case where "Men want to, and woman have sex just to appease men." Isn't this a rather one-sided argument? Don't some woman want to have sex because they love a man and want to share something with that man, and not because they are "giving in" to them?

In Wednesday's talk, Josh stressed the wonders of marriage; reminded the audience over and over that he loved his wife, and that she was his "best friend", and seemed to say that true love is found most easilty through Jesus Christ....

Stressing that the mind was a fantastic device, and man's most important "sex organ" Josh pointed out that sexual experiences "before marriage" were bad, because they gave individuals "memories" to compare their present sex lives with. It is as if Josh is saying "happiness through ignorance, love through faith, and to hell with experiences". One could go on and on with other examples of this type of nonproductive philosophy-I won't.

At a time when there are problems and much hate throughout the world, men and women should take stock in the entire situation from an objective and personally subjective view. I feel that they should confront their fates as individuals, and find their personal happiness through experiences, learning, and thinking. People should actively persue this happiness as individuals, but also think of the welfare of the world as a whole. People must find there own peace of mind.

I'm not going to come down upon Josh for what he believes-if he finds happiness through Jesus Christ, that's his right. I just hope that people will look for happiness through personal responsibility for their actions, and thoughts and by coping with one's own situation through one's own will.

Wednesday night Josh gave the audience an outside factor of Jesus Christ. Perhaps others will join the "mass movement towards Christ" because of that. It is easy to be happy when you're a vegetable, when you say that you do things because god tells you to! People should take stock in themselves as individuals, see the beauty in that, and through that find love for other people. This is basically where I disagree with Josh.

U.S. Imperialism

By PEDRO HERNANDEZ

Throughout the world the United States is recognized as a major imperialist country. Yet most North Americans find it difficult to apply the concept of "Imperialism" to their own country, and are sure the Left is exagerating when it uses the term. They may be willing to admit that the United States acted like an imperialist country in the early part of this century, when it took the Philippines and used "Gunboat" diplomacy in the Carribbean and agree that their intervention in Viet Nam was a terrible tragedy to both them and the Vietnamese. To the liberals however, these are matters of the past; they got out of Viet Nam. They have learned from their mistakes. The radical position is quite different. It asserts that the United States' relationship to the rest of the world is primarily exploitative and that exploitation is made necessary by the internal working of the capitalist system.

First, let's get the record straight about the United States' role around the world. Before World War II the U.S. had intervened militarily in the Philippines, Puerto Rico, Panama, Haiti, Honduras, Colombia, Peru, the Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, China, Mexico, and most of the Carribbean countries. Since World War II, the United States has intervened militarily in Guatemala, Cuba, China, Korea, Indonesia, Laos, Bolivia, the Congo, Lebanon, the Dominican Republic, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Cambodia, and now Chile. Nor do these overt instances of North American tell the whole story.

The full story of imperialism in its modern form is the story of the way the corporate structure of the United States and its supportive political-military institutions dominate the political and economic life of countries around the world. It is this story, which includes miliary intervention but goes far beyond it, that we refer to when we talk about imperialism.

The purpose of this chapter is to show that imperialism is rooted in the basic structure of campialism, and that it is therefore misleading for liberal politicians to promise to end North Americ's global role when they are unprepared to alter the capitalist system itself.

The demand to abandon illusions about our condition is a demand to abandon a condition which requires illusions.

How you express yourself depends upon your camera.

Today almost everybody is getting into photography. And it's not the snapshot variety. People are doing sports stories, nature stories, portraits—you may even have a friend who's doing photographs through a microscope. Or a telescope.

You also know that everybody has his own idea about which camera is best. That's why it's important for you to know about the Canon F-1. Because it's the system camera that's fast becoming the favorite of professionals. And the new status symbol among photography enthusiasts.

Canon
F-1
CANON LENS FD 50mm 1:1.4 S.S.C.

The whole F-1 system includes over 40 lenses and 200 accessories. It's capable of doing virtually everything in photography. So whatever idea you have for a picture, the F-1 has the equipment to make sure you get it.

Because it was conceived from the beginning as a system, it works as a system. All the elements are quickly and easily interchangeable. No matter which lens or accessory you use with the F-1 body you won't have the feeling that something has been "tacked on."

What's more the F-1 is comfortable to handle. Years of research went into the design of the F-1 body and placement of controls so your fingers fall naturally into place. You'll appreciate this comfort when you're on assignment. It's also an important thing to keep in mind if you're investing in a camera you plan to keep a long time.

Canon has been in the optics industry over 37 years. We make microscope equipment, amateur and professional movie cameras and TV lenses. It's this experience that helps make our still cameras the best selling cameras in Japan. In America, it's just a matter of time.

See your dealer for more information. He'll also show you Canon's other SLR cameras, like the FTb and TLb. Both of which offer accurate metering, easy film loading, a wide range of lenses and the same standard of engineering that goes into the F-1.

Commission Seeks To Reform Vice Presidential Selection Process

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - A commission looking for ways to reform the vice presidential selection process got suggestions Wednesday ranging from abolishing the office to putting it up separately for popular election.

"I propose the abolition of the office of vice president of the United States," said Adam Yarmolinsky, Ralph Waldo Emerson Professor at the University of Massachusetts, to members of the Democratic National Committee Vice Presidential Committee.

The committee was meeting in Boston for the third of a number of public hearings which are scheduled nationwide.

"The vice president has traditionally been selected not so much on his own merits, but on the most practical political grounds-to balance the ticket," said Harmolinsky, a former assistant secretary of defense under Robert McNamara.

"And if he is carried into office by his presidential twin, then he becomes essentially a functionless man," he said.

Yarmolinsky suggested having no vice president and allowing Congress to choose the interim successor.

The decision, Yarmolinsky said, could probably be made in a matter of weeks, and the president at the beginning of his term could name a temporary successor who could serve during those weeks.

Prof. Walter Dean Burnham of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Political Science Department agreed that there is no need for a vice president.

"There are abundant reasons for abolishing the office altogether, and establishing a different method of presidential succession," Burnham said.

He suggested that the Secretary of State might be designated to take over in the case of presidential death, although in the current case Henry Kissinger would not be eligible for the presidency because he is a naturalized citizen.

If the office is not abolished, Burnham said, then the president should be given more time for selecting a running mate, and the powers of the vice president should be increased to make the office meaningful - such as making the vice president a voting member of the Senate.

Massachusetts House Speaker David M. Bartley supported the suggestion that the presidential nominee be given more time to select his running mate.

Asked about the possibility of setting up a committee to put vice presidential possibilities before the national convention rather than leaving the decision to the presidential nominee, Bartley said, "If I were smart enough to get the nomination, I'd be smart enough to rig that committee."

State Police Called To Remove Demonstrators

LAS VEGAS, N.M. (AP) - New Mexico Highlands University President Frank Angel said he was sorry to call police to remove demonstrators but the school "cannot tolerate a disruption of university functions."

Police forced their way inside Tuesday night and arrested 41 persons who had barricaded themselves in the administration building.

A school spokesman said about 2,200 persons are enrolled at Highlands.

Four of those arrested were turned over to juvenile authorities. The others were booked on charges of occupying a university building.

Magistrate Pat Romero set bond for three at $300, or $600 property bond.

The other 34 persons declined to be arraigned by Romero, and were to remain in San Miguel County jail without bond pending the appointment of another magistrate by District Court Judge Joe Angel.

State police had to break windows and use bolt cutters to get into the building. A newsman at thescene said those arrested were holding hands and had to be pulled away from each other. The occupation began when demonstrators identifying themselves as members of the Chicano Associated Students Organization, entered the president's office early Tuesday, demanded his resignation of Willy Sanchez, director of external affairs, Merritt W. McGahan, dean of academic affairs and Ralph C. Smith, counsel to the president on academic affairs.

A list of other demands included favorable treatment of active Chicano professors and a better Chicano studies program.

Mike Johnson Performs

On Thursday, September twenty-seventh, at 12:00 p.m., on the Metawampe Lawn behind the UMass Student Union, and also on Friday, September 28th, at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, a concert will be presented by recording artist Mike Johnson. Mr. Johnson, originally from Chicago, has been playing guitar for eleven years and was a member of the first all white blues group in the country where he played with such famous artists as Mike Bloomfield and Charlie Musclewhite. He has jammed with Harvey Mandle, Paul Butterfield and Alvin Bishop.

Express Bus

The Student Senate Transit service is starting the 13 Lot Express, Sept. 26. This Express bus leaves the C.C. Circle approximately every 10 minutes beginning at 2:30-5:30 p.m. The Express bus travels to Lot 13 via the physical plant.

WMUA

"Film Quotes and Comments", the popular film review program will be aired tonight at 7:30 p.m., on WMUA, 91.1 F.M. The show is hosted by Professor Tom Bohn of the University's Mass Communications Department.

Making its debut on MUA will be the first in a series of theatre reviews by WMUA staff worker Janet Moulding. Janet will review the production of Jacques Brel. Air time is 7:25, tonight on WMUA.

Homophile Counseling Service

A counseling service for the gay community at U.Mass. has been initiated by the Community Resource Center in Hampden Dining Commons. Nancy Schroeder, the co-ordinator of this service, is a doctoral student at the School of Education with several years of counseling experience.

Having spent five years as both an undergraduate and graduate student at U.Mass., she has identified several needs of the Lesbian and Homosexual student which the counseling service may begin to fulfill. The primary need is to have counselors in the community who are gay themselves. Too often a counseling relationship is disrupted or never begun because the heterosexual therapist is unable to relate to the student's homosexual experience. For the student who is uncertain about the direction of his or her sexuality, a gay counselor can clarify the gay experience by discussing some of the problems and some of the rewards of choosing to be a Lesbian or Homosexual.

Another major need on campus is community education. To this end, Nancy welcomes the opportunity to participate in workshops and colloquia on Lesbianism or Homosexuality. She will also be working to bring the various gay woman's groups and the primarily male Student Homophile League into a closer working relationship.

The Community Resource Center is open 9 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday. The phone number is 545-2416.

Aesthetics Center Courses

The Aesthetics Center will be offering three new courses starting in October and November. The Center is a member of the Transdisciplinary Cluster at the School of Education and deals mainly with a multi-arts approach to education. For any questions on the following courses, room assignments or suggestions as to other multi-arts courses, contact the Aesthetics Center in the Graduate Research Center Room 125A, phone 5-0872.

Curriculum Development with Arts and Crafts (300 modules) will be meeting Mondays, 3:30-5:30, starting October 1, in Room 803, Campus Center. The instructor is Lyn-a McIntyre.

This is a DOING course, which is aimed to acquaint would-be teachers with the technical know-how involved with the use of various materials and specific arts and crafts, such as batik, relief printing, weaving, decoupage, sand painting, macrame, etc. We will be sharing skills and through research and experimentation will set up curriculum including arts and crafts. We will be listing resources in the fields of exploration and be implementing some of our curriculum in the community.

Requirements-active participation, some reading, project.

Human Relations for Children, Using Movement and Other Arts (250 modules) will meet Thurs. 3-5:30, beginning Oct. 4. The instructor is Phyllis Krakauer.

This course will explore ways to use movement and other arts to foster both individual and group growth. Through the arts, we will work both with elements basic to all forms of human relations (self-concept, self-experience, sharing, non-verbal communications, etc.) as well as work with specific systems and methodologies such as values clarification, Autology, Gestalt and others. Time will be spent on the process involved in going from having a goal to developing ways to implement it.

Required-some experience with arts and children and suggested readings.

Integrated Arts Experience for Expressive Development (200 modules) will meet Thurs. 3:15-6:15, beginning Nov. 1. The instructor is Stephen Kenny.

Band Forming Color Guard

The UMass Marching Band is looking for people to help develop a new aspect of their presentation.

The Band is planning to add a color guard. It would start as a five member unit (U.S., Massachusetts, and UMass flags and two saber guards) and eventually expand to include a show flag rank which would take part in the football halftime shows.

Rehearsals are Monday through Friday 4:40-5:55 p.m. No experience is necessary though Drum and Bugle Corps experience would be helpful.

Area Theater Ensemble Alive And Well

Beginning this Thursday, Sept. 27, the New Cell Theatre Ensemble will conduct a weekly Theatre Workshop, to be held in the Stone Basement Theatre at Amherst College. The workshops are open to the public, with no prerequisite other than an interest in the theater in the Valley community. Theater games, improvisational technique, and mime and yoga training will be used toward the purpose of discovering and developing the use of ensemble theatre.

The workshops will also be used as a forum for discussion of experiments and movements in the theater. Plans are being made to invite speakers to the workshops to discuss topics of interest which are not generally covered in the curriculum of the Five Colleges. Prospective topics include Oriental Theater, Improvisational Theater, Artaud, and discussions of already-existing groups such as the Open Theatre, the Living Theatre, and Grotowski's Polish Lab Theatre.

Videotape equipment will also hopefully be available for use in the workshops, the tapes to act as seeds for discussion about the work being done.

The New Cell Theatre Ensemble has been together for over a year. They produced an adapted version of "The Madman and the Nun" by S.I. Witkiewicz in February, 1973. In the following spring, they adapted the popular children's story The Velveteen Rabbit into a play which was then performed at elementary schools in the Valley community for several weeks. Composed of students in the Five College community as well as residents of the area, the Ensemble brings together a wide variety of artistic interests for the central purpose of expanding the theater in the Valley community. Plans for the coming year include several works-in-progress culminating in a major production to be presented in the spring of 1974.

Anyone interested in any aspect of the theatrical arts is encouraged to attend the opening workshop on Thursday, Sept. 27 at 7:30 p.m. in the Stone Basement Theatre, Amherst College. This includes playwrights searching for people to produce original work as well as actors and directors. If interested but unable to attend, please call Chris Torch at 256-6872 or drop a note to Box 1190, Amherst College, Amherst, Mass. Please wear loose comfortable clothing.

Polish Art Exhibit Premieres Wed.

"Polesie," an exhibition of photographs by the late Polish anthropologist Joseph Obreski, will be the next event at the Herter Hall Art Gallery at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, opening Wednesday, Oct. 3, and running through Oct. 14.

Polesie is a poor, remote province of pre-war Poland that is now part of the Soviet Union, a region of marshland and forest where living is at a subsistence level.

The purpose of this exhibit is not primarily to depict a remote corner of Europe before the Second World War but rather to show a glimpse of a kind of life familiar to the immediate ancestors of many Americans. In many ways the struggle for existence faced by these people was not dissimlar to that of marginal Vermont farmers, mountain folk in Appalachia and share-croppers in the South, according to an introduction by Joel M. Halpern of the UMass anthropology department.

The exhibit is open to the public without charge. An opening reception Wednesday, Oct. 3, from 7 to 9 p.m. is also open to the public. Gallery hours are Wednesday through Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Friday 7 to 9 p.m.; and Saturday and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m.

Black Community Prepares Paul Robeson Culture Series

A concert and lecture series dedicated to the American actor and singer Paul Robeson will be held at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst during the coming academic year, beginning with an evening of music, poetry and film Tuesday, Oct. 2.

The Paul Robeson, Sr., Lecture Series has been organized by UMass Professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp, the Institute for Pan African Culture and others in the University community. The series will run through April and reflect the life, times and work of Paul Robeson. Appearing will be scholars and artists of international reputation, many of whom knew Paul Robeson.

The opening event, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, will include a film on Robeson's life and work, a poetry reading by Sonia Sanchez and a program of music. To be heard will be The Voices of New Africa Choir, pianist Roland Wiggins, the singing ensemble Mass Appeal, the Brothers Boyer and spirituals by Edward Boatner. There is no admission charge and the public is welcome.

The focus of the program will be the inspirational work of Mr. Robeson as a source of strength in the creative life of the Black community. The second event and the first lecture in the series will be Wednesday, Oct. 3, at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. History Professor Lamont Leakey of the City College of New York will speak on "Paul Robeson and the Student Movement."

Other events in the series include:

--Nov. 7, 8 p.m., Second Lecture, Mr. C.L.R. James, professor of history and literature, Federal City College and Rutgers University, "Mr. Paul Robeson and The International Struggle for Freedom and Independence," (SBA 120);

--Dec. 8, 8 p.m., Concert Series, Mr. William Warfield, concert baritone, in a program dedicated to the life and work of Mr. Robeson, (Student Union Ballroom);

Co-ed Living Subject Of Play

By JOHN J. MULLINS
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)-"Moonchildren" has moments of hilarity, but also some bad acting. It's a drama that doesn't seem to go anyplace.

The play, after preview performances, opened Tuesday night at The New Theatre. It will play there through Oct. 21.

"Moonchildren" concerns a group of college students, male and female, most of them seniors, who share an apartment. The time is the mid 1960s and their concerns are the draft, the war in Vietnam, sex, grades, graduate school and demonstrations.

Kevin Kelly, writing in today's Boston Globe, said he did not like the play when he first saw it, but that now, he thinks it is a "superb production...wonderful, absolutely wonderful." He also praised the acting of all members of the cast.

Attorney For Students

A Very Delicate Subject

By RICHARD C. HOWLAND

It is a matter of considerable delicacy to select the appropriate topic for this column each week. For instance, I have temporarily shelved the problems of drugs, debt collection, court conduct, and divorce (being still in the early part of the alphabet) in favor of cohabitation. Recently there has been a greater fascination with this statute than drugs, debts and divorce combined. Others may ponder the sociological implications.

Chapter 272 section 16 reads: "A man and woman who, not being married to each other, lewdly and lasciviously associate and cohabit together or a man or woamn, married or unmarried, who is guilty of open and gross lewdness and lascivious behaviour, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than three years or in jail for not more than two years or by a fine of not more than three hundred dollars."

No statute has caused more anguish by the fact of its abuse and misunderstanding by law enforcement personnel landlords and families. Many people tend to read the word "cohabitation" to mean "fornication." Fornication is covered in a separate section (18) providing for three months or $30 for a conviction of having sexual intercourse with a person other than a spouse. "Cohabitation" therefore simply means "living together." It should also be observed that this statute does not make it unlawful for two people (or more) of any conceivable sexual distribution to live together! What is prohibited, whatever the wisdom, is the lewd and lascivious association and living together.

In 1813 The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court wrote (Commonwealth v. Calef): "By cohabiting must be understood a dwelling or living together, not a transient and single unlawful interview. The design of the statute, in this particular provision, was to prevent evil and indecent examples, tending to corrupt the public morals."

"Cohabit" means to live together as husband and wife ordinarily do, but does not necessarily imply sexual intercourse. Commonwealth v. Lucas (1893).

It seems apparent, then, that living together is a necessary element of the offense dealt with by the statute. It is also apparent that it is not dealing with sexual intercourse either its promotion or its diminution. It is also obvious that for there to be a violation that it must be open, gross, lewd and lascivious.

Evidence of secret of private lewdness and lascivious behaviour will not support an indictment for open, gross lewdness, and lascivious behaviour. Commonwealth v. Catlin (1804) and Commonwealth v. Wardwell (1880).

There is a clause in the statute which has been interpreted without contradiction since 1818 in the case of Commonwealth v. Littlejohn that seems to require in an indictment for cohabitation, proof of the fact that at least one of the parties is married (and not to the other).

It would seem to follow that an arrest of two apparently and actually unmarried (to any one) single people, living together in an apartment using their own names, never assuming or pretending to be married, enjoy the social and sexual company of each other in private, however they choose, would not be authorized in this section and might lead to a valid suit for false arrest, malicious prosecution or a denial of civil rights.

It is very important to realize that in many Massachusetts towns and cities this interpretation is not followed. (I also do not believe that the argument has been recently advanced.) The cases are old and there is some reason to doubt their quality as precedent. Few district court cases are appealed since the usual result in such cases is to effect a separation of the defendants and a modest fine. Far more often this statute is recited by parents or landlords who presume to have the right to enforce their own morality upon others. Usually it is employed against single people who prefer to keep their sex lives private and therefore are not subject to this statute for at least two reasons. It is important, I think, for people to understand the statute as it is and not how their personal predilection might have it be.

Without judging the moral or ethical quality of other people's private relationships, the insidious threat of this statute and its almost universal misapplication and misunderstanding should be laid to rest. Landlords, parents and law enforcement officials should not be permitted to threaten that which the law does not in fact sanction. Citizens, young and old, should not be misled into thinking that Massachusetts law legislates any greater degree of morality than it, in fact, does. Laws are, after all, of the people.

RENFREW OF THE MOUNTED is alive and well and doing his thing at the University of Connecticut, according to the Connecticut Daily Campus.

Henry Renfrew and a partner, Joseph D'Elia, have been mounted on horseback to patrol the 3,000 acres of rolling hills that make up the campus.

The UConn Mounted Police force was formed because the campus "is laced with 23 miles of roads, but there are many places that a patrol car cannot easily reach, such as the centers of large dormitory quadrangles and complexes of academic buildings."

The Police Chief also cites as an objective "to provide more effective policing through increased coverage and visibility. From the saddle, a police officer can see and be seen from great distances."

An unanticipated fringe benefit of the Mounties is that it is encouraging closer bonds with students. They now pet the horse and enter into rap sessions about parking. The students also appreciate what the pollution-free vehicles are doing for the environment.

But will they always get their man?

SPEAKING OF CRIME ON THE CAMPUS...The Tech of M.I.T. carries a report of crimes reported by the Campus Patrol, in a column titled, "Police Blotter."

A typical entry: "Report of male subject in ladies room of Student Center. Female effected his removal of screaming."

Renfrew, where are you?

SO, WHAT ELSE IS NEW DEPT....the Indiana Daily Student carried a recent editorial that "Money may be neuter in gender, but its usage by the I.U. ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The humanitarianism of Aquarius is legend. The generosity can be a giving to the point of no return. Franklin Roosevelt was an Aquarian and the characteristics of this sign are not just loving-giving but can be a stubborn determination, and Abraham Lincoln, too, was an Aquarian. This is a fixed sign, associated with Uranus and that is the planet of the unconventional, the surprise, the startling moment, the flash of time, the instant that makes history. Aquarius is the 11th sign and friends and desires are here and so is income derived from professional endeavors. Kim Novak and Jack Lemmon and Carol Channing are modern examples of this sign, a sign of flight, aviation, and Charles Lindbergh stands perhaps as a classical example of the daring confidence and tie with the future that marks these natives.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on justice, plans, balance. You are tempted now to go to extremes. Instead, ask and experiment without making definite commitment. Sagittarius, Gemini persons are likely to be involved. Joint or cooperative effort is indicated.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check details. Take nothing for granted. Get to basics. Clean up loose ends. Keep diet, health resolutions. Maintain steady but moderate pace. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio individuals could figure in prominent ways. Get promises in writing if possible.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be ready for change, travel, variety. Emphasis is on affection and creativity. You gain most by doing what comes naturally. Be yourself. Trying to imitate would be error. Your own style, ways to lead to greater achievement.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis is on home, property, family relationships. Build on solid base. Obtain valid hint from Taurus message. Be specific. If you equivocate, you invite loss. Older individual, possibly parent, needs boost in morale.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent now is on how you develop ideas. Don't fool yourself. Face facts as they exist. What appears a setback actually will bounce in your favor. Know it and stop brooding. Pisces, Virgo persons may be involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasize esteem. Get what's coming to you. Organize. Display sense of responsibility. Member of opposite sex is involved. Insist on results, not promises. Protect assets. Money situation commands attention. Don't relinquish control.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Nov. 21): Areas previously dark are due to receive benefit of greater light. Leo, Aquarius persons might figure prominently. Strive for more independence. Original concepts are most likely to succeed. Study Libra message.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Rise above what is petty. Gain overall view. Trust hunch. Follow through on projects. Aquarian could play significant role. Some of your desires may be outmoded. Don't be afraid to change your mind. Special wish is fulfilled.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make room for yourself at top. Taking back seat now would be error. Experiment. Be versatile. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Ask questions--answers are obtainable. Career, ambition--these are highlighted.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on travel, writing, communicating. You can break through to new horizons. Learning process is stimulated. Obtain hint from Capricorn message. You receive news which aids in future planning. Green light is flashed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Creative energies flow. You experience transformation. Be ready for significant changes. Gemini, Virgo persons are involved. Exchange ideas. Be analytical. Money and tax questions can be favorably resolved. What was obscured comes to light.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you help others more than you do yourself. Many confide problems to you. Aries, Libra individuals are attracted to your sphere. In October, social activity increases. You are forthright, basically honest and capable of swaying large numbers of people. Burden is about to be lifted. You will be happier.

Ten UM Alumni Set To Play At Foxboro Friday

By DEAN TUCKER

If you've been a UMass football freak for the last couple of years you probably wonder what happens to some of the players after they graduate or otherwise become ineligible.

Many of them are alive and well playing football for either the New England Colonials or the Western Mass. Pioneers

Remember these names? Steve Shubert, John Keliheer, Clarence Brooks, Billy DeFlavio, Skip Parmenter, Dennis Keating, and John Hulicki. . .they all play for the Schaeffer Stadium based Colonials.

How about Paul Metallo, Pierre Marchando, and Dennis Cunningham. . .they play for the Pioneers whose home is Holyoke.

The two teams are going to play one another Friday night in Foxboro. So if you've been a UMass football freak, for the last couple of years and are wondering where some of the players have gone, now you know.

Watching some former greats from UMass play against one another might be a good warmup for Saturday's UMass-Harvard tilt in Cambridge.

Sox Bow

CLEVELAND (AP) - John Ellis cracked a second-inning home run to back the five-hit pitching of Gaylord Perry and carry the Cleveland Indians to a 1-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox Wednesday.

Ellis led off the second with his 14th homer of the baseball season, a drive over the left field fence, off Bill Lee, 17-11, who gave up just seven Cleveland hits.

Perry, evening his record at 19-19, struck out six, walked two and was helped by two double plays.

Minutemen Nine Win First Three Games

By MIKE BROPHY

For the fall version of the UMass Diamond Nine things have been going rather well for the past week or so as they have rolled up three straight wins over the likes of Holy Cross, 7-6 and 4-0, and Springfield, 13-10 with the aid of a strong hitting attack from the likes of Ron Beaurivage, Mike Koperniak, and Pete Backstrom.

Jim Bedard bailed out starter Chip Baye in the fourth frame of the season opener as the starter had control problems in the early going. Bedard completed the seven inning contest as he fired four innings of shutout ball on Sunday.

Koperniak, moved over to short from the second base slot in a defensive shuffle by Coach Dick Bergquist aimed at relieving some of the pressure of Eddie McMahon's departure, collected the game winning, a two run double in the bottom of the seventh with the bases loaded. Bob Moore, soph catching prospect, collected two singles on the day while Mike Joyce, another soph, belted a double and a triple.

Ron Beaurivage and Moore provided the fireworks for game two as the UMies rallied for four in the fourth frame on a two-run homer followed later by a two-run single.

Bob Langlois came in to relieve Lebine to preserve the victory as Bergquist wants to see as many of his pitchers as possible. "I would like to see everyone of the boys pitch as much as possible and to give them a chance to improve," Bergquist said after the latest encounter with Springfield who downed UMass last Spring.

Tuesday saw the Minutemen gain revenge for their 9-7 loss last spring to snap a 10 game win streak as they pulled out a 13-10 hitters fest. Jeff Reardon pulled down the victory with his fine relief performance in the final three frames.

John Seed earned three hits on the day including a triple and it looks as though his bat may be an able replacement of the graduated Mark palau.

The newly formed and tried infield reeled off five DP's in the three contests and may be on the road to breaking the record set last spring.

Rehired

BALTIMORE (AP) - Earl Weaver, whose job may have been in jeopardy when he was arrested for drunken driving and the Baltimore Orioles were sputtering early in the season, has been rehired for 1974.

No salary terms were disclosed, but Weaver is believed to be in the $70,000 range.

Wilt Jumps To ABA

CHULA VISTA, Calif. (AP) - Wilt Chamberlain, a National Basketball Association star since 1959, has signed a reported $600,000 a year contract to coach and play for the San Diego Conquistadors of the American Basketball Association, the club announced Wednesday.

Dr. Leonard Bloom, owner of the Q's, announced the signing at a news conference.

Exact terms of the contract were not announced. Earlier it had been reported Chamberlain would be offered a three-year contract at $1.8 million with part of the money to be paid by the ABA.

A spokesman for the San Diego team said Chamberlain, who quit the Los Angeles Lakers for the switch to San Diego, is expected to play for the Q's, at least through the 1973-74 season. Bloom, a dentist who founded the Q's last year, said, "When I acquired this franchise promised the fans that I would bring superstars to the San Diego sports scene. Wilt is just the first. There will be others."

Chamberlain was expected at the news conference but had not arrived when Bloom issued the team's statement of acquisition.

The conference was in suburban Chula Vista, where Bloom plans to build a 20,000-seat stadium to be ready by the 1974-75 season.

In the meantime, Wilt and the San Diego team will play at the 3,200 seat Community Concourse in downtown San Diego.

Chamberlain's reported salary with San Diego would double that he received from Los Angeles. A lawsuit appears in prospect.

The 7-foot 1½-inch veteran joined the Lakers for the 1968-69 season in trade from Philadelphia for three players.

He averaged 20.5 points that season but in the 12th game of the following campaign he tore knee ligaments and didn't return to action until playoff time.

Chamberlain played all the fllowing season as the Lakers won the NBA title for the first time since coming to Los Angeles in 1960. Chamberlain's Philadelphia team had won the title in 1967.

Reportedly, the huge pivot man had signed a $1-million contract covering five years with the Lakers when he arrived. His attorney, Sy Goldberg, maintains that since the five years have passed, his client is not under contract to the Lakers.

Netwomen Top Tough Smith College, 5-4

NANCY M. THOMPSON

For the first time in four years the UMass women's tennis team defeated a strong Smith College squad, 5-4 yesterday afternoon at the Boyden courts. UMass came off the courts smiling following a good showing in both singles and doubles play.

Of the six singles matches, UMass came up with victories from their numbers three and five players, for a total of 5-4 for the nine matches played.

Spectators saw fine ground-stroking and net play from both players on the first court. Sophomore Ann Foley played the number one position for UMass against Smith's Kathy Read. Ms. Foley started off well with hard baseline shots but Smith's number one player soon caught on giving Ms. Foley back some fine net shots and overheads. In two sets it was (Ms. Read 6-1, 6-2)

Representing UMass in third singles was another sophmore, Ronnie Sanders. Ronnie defeated her opponent, Jane Petersinger in a lengthy 6-3, 6-2.

Representing UMass in third singles was another sophmore, Ronnie Sanders. Ronnie defeated her opponent, Jane Petersinger in a lengthy 6-3, 6-2 bout. Freshman Donna Siscavage began her college play starting in second position for the home team as she faced Smith's Karen Ranz, who took that match 6-0, 6-2. Carol Mottau, playing fourth singles, lost to her opponent in two sets 6-3, 6-4. Gaylen Goode dropped a heart-breaking sixth singles set to Smith 9-7.

Caron Tsapatsaris, playing in the fifth singles slot, was the last to come in with winning results. Ms. Tsapatsaris went three sets to finally emerge with a well deserved 6-0, 4-6, 6-4 victory. UMass was missing a valuable team member in Diane Greene who will be sidelined for an undetermined amount of time with tendonitis.

In doubles play Patty Heslam and Muffy Trafton breezed through their first match, giving UMass the first 6-3, 6-0. Two doubles teams came up from the lower courts, Donna Volpe and Karen Wesley winning 6-4, 6-4 and Donna Braca and Karen Thomas, both newcomers, defeating Smith in a 7-6 tie breaker and a fast 6-0 follow up.

Field Hockey Starts Today

By BETH O'BRIEN

The UMass womens' field hockey team will open their 1973 season this afternoon on the fields behind the North Physical Education Building. The opening bully for the Junior varsity is at 4:00 p.m. with the Varsity game to begin at about 5:00 p.m.

The home team girls square off against an aggressive and volitile Keene State team, out to avenge last years' loss to the Minutewomen.

Coach Jane Farr predicts a winning season for one of her strongest squads to date, and the forward line should provide plenty of scoring excitement.

On Saturday, the fields behind the North Physical Education building will be the scene of the annual field hockey sportsday: a gathering of surrounding teams for a day of round robin play. Among the te s represented will be Spring :, Mt. Holyoke, Smith and Southern Connecticut State.

The sportsday usually serves opponents, a chance for the teams to feel out their future competition, and a friendly social gathering at which to meet new friends.

The sportsday will feature some good matchups between traditional rivals, Springfield and UMass, and will be an indication of how th season might run for the Minutewomen.

Games will start sometime in midmorning when the teams are finally assembled, and will run through the afternoon.

Pirates Gain On Mets

Pirates, 13-2

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Richie Hebner, Gene Clines and Dal Maxvill combined to drive in 10 runs and lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 13-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies Wednesday night.

Clines rapped two singles and drove in three runs during a seven-run Pirate burst in the fourth inning, the most productive inning of the season for Pittsburgh.

Dave Cash opened the assault with a fly to right that Bill Robinson dropped for a three-base error. Clines than singled Cash home with the first of six Pirate hits in the inning off Phillie starter Jim Lonborg and reliever Darrell Brandon. Clines' bases-loaded single produced the final two runs of the inning.

The Pirates staked rookie pitcher Jim McKee to a 1-0 lead in the first, but McKee left the game in the third after his fielding error and a walk put two runners aboard with none out. Reliever Bob Moose then yielded a run-scoring single to Bill Grabarkowitz, but he held the Phillies to just one unearned run the rest of the way.

Hebner, who drove in four runs, stretched the Pirate lead to 10-1 in the fourth with a two-run homer, his 25th of the season. Maxvill drove in three more runs in the sixth with a bases-loaded triple.

Expos, 8-5

NEW YORK (AP) - Bob Bailey slugged a two-run homer in the seventh inning that snapped a 5-5 tie and carried the Montreal Expos to an 8-5 victory over New York Wednesday night, halting the Mets winning streak at seven games.

Bailey's 26th homer of the season, off Harry Parker, 8-4, just did clear the orange line marking the home run area on the left-field fence. Bailey trotted home behind Jim Lyttle who had singled.

The Mets had tied the game in the fifth on Jerry Grote's two-out RBI single.

Lord Steals Show At Luncheon

By STEVE CROWE

No one said grace at yesterday's Varsity M luncheon, but the Lord took over anyway and everyone had a good time.

"The governor of Maine called the office Monday and demanded to speak to 'Mac'," began the witty Lord. "I told him he wasn't in and the governor persisted, demanding to speak to Mac...Finally, when I convinced him that Mac really was not in, the governor told me what he was calling to complain to Mac about: " 'How come he beat us (UMaine) so bad (20-0) and he takes it so easy on those two Catholic schools?' "

Next, it was sportscaster Marty Kelley's turn to be "horrored."

"I had the pleasure of going on a speaking engagement with Marty Kelley," he said. "We went to one of those insane asylums, up to the third floor where they have those padded walls. Marty was introduced to the audience and he was pretty nervous. He said, "hi." Then suddenly, from the back of the room, a guy yelled out, 'Shut up and sit down, ya bum!' The warden could see that Marty was quite upset so he went over to him, put his arm around him, and said, 'You'll have to excuse him, that's the first sensible thing he's said in six months.' "

On a more serious note it was announced by Coach MacPherson that Dave Yushinsky, offensive tackle, will not be playing in the Harvard game Saturday. He was hit in the kidney and the doctors are concerned that it may become infected.

Runningback Jerry Madalto, who underwent surgery on his knee las week is having problems with the knee becoming infected. He is expected to be back in school later this week.

Middle linebacker Paul St. Onge may be used at fullback this Saturday.

UMass is leading the Yankee Conference is six out of eight categories. Tim Berra leads the league in pass receiving (8 receptions per game), punt returns (6.8 yds. carry), kick-off returns (24.9 yds. carry) and scoring (38 pts. total). Peil Pennington leads the league in passing with a 13.0 completions per game.)

When Tim Berra was selected as the Yankee Conference offensive player of the week Tuesday, it marked the fourth time since the inception of the award, last year that a UMass player received it. Pennington won it last year after leading UMass over Harvard.

Netmen Pluck Eagles

By MDC STAFF

The UMass tennis team yesterday felled the Boston College Eagles 5-4 in a home match.

The Minutemen got singles wins from Marc Grass, playing from the No. 3 position, Barnaby Kallons, playing from the No. 5 position, and Steve Donahue, playing from the No. 6 position.

The keys to the win, however, were double victories by the No. 2 and No. 3 team. Kallons and Grass picked up one point and Donahue and Gary Ney got the other as the match was tied 3-3 going into the doubles.

The match was played thanks to two rolls of tape loaned to the team by the training room. The tape was used to hold up the nets. The team also had to provide paper towels to the Eagles as they couldn't beg any from the Athletic Department.

The Minutemen were without the services of captain Fred Braille, who's out with a leg injury.

Coach Steve Kosakowski, a happy man after the win, said "We plucked the feathers right out of the Eagels' ass."

Next match for the tennis team is October 3 at UConn.

Harvard: Key Game

It was 362 days ago that football came out of its post-Greg Landry hibernation and returned to UMass.

The newly named Minutemen inaugurated their title with 28-19 win over Harvard at Harvard Stadium, a win that proved to be the key to one of the most successful football seasons a UMass team ever had.

The name is now a year old and many of the stars are gone, but the significance of this year's Harvard game hasn't changed.

UMass stands at two wins and a loss. They could conceivably wind up 8-3, 9-2, or (with some heavenly assistance) 10-1. They could also conceivably end up at 6-5.

A win makes the Minutemen 3-1 with Rutgers and Boston College the heaviest of the future dates. A loss and it's 2-2, as well as saying good-bye to any momentum.

I suppose it's a matter of pride, too. UMies rightly feel that the "Ivies" look upon them as the type of simple folk that have to avoid the cowflaps as they walk to class.

Maybe it's that the ivy and the tradition and all the Lafayette Q. Oystershells that are supposed to go there make us feel that we live on the wrong side of the tracks.

But Harvard is special.

Beating them will be difficult. They are always good and they've got something to show us after last season. No one likes to lose at home, especially to an in-state rival.

And the Minutemen are not going to beat them if they play like they have the first three games.

It says something for the caliber of team when it can look so unimpressive and still have a 2-1 record. But it is a fact that they have not played to their potential. They have not jelled.

There is much right so far this season.

The punting of Andy Dutkanicz has been excellent. It is not something that grabs the spectator's eye, but good punting is a must for winning.

The passing game has obviously been good. Peil Pennington's ability was no secret; Fred Kelliher's not quite as well known. Tim Berra may be the best offensive player in the conference, and he certainly is a multi-faceted scoring threat.

The pass rush, led by Johnny Jones, Tom Price, Ed McAleney, and Tom Bradshaw has been fierce, especially in the last two games. It has helped a young secondary that was shaky against Holy Cross. It must continue to help as the secondary gains experience.

There isn't much doubt as to where the Minutemen's main problem lies.

After three games they've averaged 1.5 years per carry on the ground. The longest run of the season has been for 14 yards and that by quarterback Pennington.

If UMass has any pretensions of going even 8-3, it must produce some kind of ground threat.

There is no one person to blame. The line hasn't opened the holes on occasion. When it has, a back hasn't hit it. Assignments have been blown, mental mistakes made. The bulk of the work in the backfield has been shifted toward sophomores, and their inexperience has shown. The very talented Bob Wolfe hasn't put it together. There seems little doubt he will, but the question is--How soon?

Perhaps Bernie Street is the man. Perhaps it's only a matter of the offensive line getting it together.

Whatever, half an offense is going to have to be damned lucky to beat Harvard. And it must rely on a defense that plays 100 per cent.

The Crimson can be had, and with them, another good year.

Without them, the road will be straight up.

- - - - -

It's a pleasure to find someone who takes sports as fun and little more. I thank the woman who sent me my sugar daddy, it was tasty. Sports should be played, watched, but most of all, enjoyed. Winning isn't everything; it's secondary.

A Foliage Story

Nature Shows Its Down-To-Earth Rainbow

By DAVID LETTERS

In New England, October is a delight of bright hues, and flaring colors working together to offer nature's finest covering. The artist climaxes with it, the nature lover is enthralled and the Sunday driver has an extra bonus. Children of psychedelica await foliage most colorful and dripping peak, photographers click in glee, and travel going the railroads.

There are various ways to enjoy the foliage beauty. Many persons enjoy driving and observing, which accounts for city-like traffic jams on roads designed for one car and tractor or one Winabago at best. Understand there is nothing wrong with driving (excluding pollution, jam-ups, accidents) because it allows the multitudes to enjoy this natural event. The newspapers publish scenic route maps planning 4-8-24 hour trips through New England. It's boom business for tourist stops and is preseason training for the cheese and wine dealers of New England.

Parking spaces at the state and national parks charge on season rate, the man checks fishing licenses, the water and firewood is up.

If one does not desire massive traffic or if hitchhiking gets you down, try hoping on the railroad.

Your foliage ride should be short for experience. Northampton to Greenfield is scenic and you'll quickly learn the obvious lessons of safe rail travel. You should board only when the train is stopped. The wind chill factor of a moving train creates a necessity for warm clothing and desire; insulated underwear, flannel shirts and a hat are a must.

Those who live in Central Massachusetts have a great opportunity awaiting them. The train always stops at the rotary near the Route 2 shopping center in Gardner. It is here that the engineer and crew stop for coffee and donuts. Gardner, Baldwinville, Athol, Orange, Greenfield and points west await the rider. It is mainly uphill and the train chugs along, real slow.

If the rail rider uses a few simple rules, his ride will be safe and pleasurable. Always use an empty car when available, for you can stay warm and view the countryside in comfort, Empty cars usually have a door open, but not always. If the door does not have a seal on the lock, lift the lever and slide the door-welcome home. Never ride in a car partially loaded, as shifting loads have been known to fall and crush riders.

DVP Escape Artist To Speak

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Needed: One crane for next Tuesday, high noon.

What for?

To hoist a man billed as Harry Houdini reincarnated, hanging by his feet, tied in a strait jacket and bound by the audience with four lengths of rope, high above the Student Union building. From this position, Harry Houdini reincarnated claims that he can escape.

Sensational!

This escape artist, otherwise known as Norman Bigelow of Fitchburg, has been contracted by the Distinguished Visitors' Program (DVP) to appear on campus Oct. 2. A slight problem has arisen, however. The people at DVP cannot find a crane for rent for under $180 which is more than they can afford for the program.

The show must go on though, and Bigelow will appear next Tuesday night at 8 in the Student Union Ballroom where he will escape from such horrors as The Death Snake Bag, The Water Torture Cell, The Board of Death and Fury of the Flame.

Bigelow's manager, Patricia Pomerantz, says in a press release, "Harry Houdini, the great American escape artist died in 1926 taking with him all of the secrets of his mystifying escapes. But today we are convinced that Houdini lives. He is alive and better tahn ever in the person of Norman Bigelow.

"And one you have witnessed Norman Bigelow defying death time after time, bound, chained, padlocked, strait-jacketed, submerged or imprisoned, and always emerging miraculously unharmed, you too will be convinced that he is indeed Houdini's reincarnation."

Grand Jury Starts Probe Of Agnew

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP) - A special federal grand jury opened an unprecedented investigation yesterday, a political graft probe of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew. At the same time, Agnew's lawyers planned to go to court to stop the inquiry.

The grand jury met for more than seven hours before adjourning until next week.

One of the lawyers, Judah Best, said in Washington that a motion would be filed, possibly as early as the first of next week, seeking a temporary injunction to halt the grand jury proceedings. Such a move had been expected from the lawyers Thursday morning before the jury session started.

"We are going to file," Best said, adding he did not feel that Agnew's argument against the grand jury probe would be hurt by filing for an injunction after the investigation was under way.

Three witnesses appeared before the grand juy during tthe first hours of work, but only one of the witnesses could be identified. He was William J. Muth, former vice president of the Baltimore City Council, now the office manager of an engineering consulting firm, Hurst-Rosche Engineers, Inc. Muth has been an Agnew fund raiser.

"The investigation of the vice president is a lot of bull," Muth said as he left the federal courthouse after testifying.

Agnew was notified last month by federal prosecutors that he was under investigation for possible criminal violation of tax, extortion, bribery and conspiracy laws. He has insisted he is innocent of any wrongdoing.

The allegations against him center on kickbacks from contractors during the 1960s when Agnew was chief executive of Baltimore County and then governor of Maryland. There also have have been published reports which Agnew has denied that he received illegal cash after becoming vice president in 1969.

In a related development, three CBS television crewmen were detained by federal marshals fater they were found on the roof of an eight-story building next door to the federal court house where the grand jury was sitting. Marshal said the men were filming the court house from an angle at which they could see the grand jury room.

At one point, U.S. Atty. George Beall; who is conducting the probe, personally questioned the men who were identified only as Herbert Alston, Al Colby and Dan Bowers. The men were released after several hours of questioning but their film was confiscated.

The grand jury session was being conducted under conditions of strictest secrecy. The corridors leading to the grand jury room were sealed off by federal marshals so newsmen could not see who was coming or going.

If and when Agnew's lawyers file a motion to stop the grand jury proceedings, the case will be heard by U.S. Dist. Court Judge Walter Hoffman of Norfolk, Va. He was appointed supervising judge after all nine District Court judges in Maryland disqualified themselves because they were either friends or business associates of Agnew.

Edward S. Northrup, chief judge of the U.S. District Court in Maryland, said in an interview that Beall and Agnew's lawyers have "a gentlemen's agreement" that the lawyers will notify Beall in advance of their legal filing.

"Then there will be no evidence presented to the grand jury until Judge Hoffman acts on the matter," Northrup said.

If Hoffman refused to grant the temporary restraining order, Agnew's lawyers would have no appeal, Northrup said.

If the temporary order were issued, the judge said, there must be a hearing on it within 10 days. At that hearing, the constitutional question of whether a vice president can be indicted while in office would be argue and probably decided, he said.

Meanwhile, in Washington Agnew spent a relatively routine day, going to Capitol Hill briefly to perform his duties as president of the Senate, then putting final touches on a scheduled trip to the West Coast this weekend.

His office said tentative plans called for Agnew to fly from Washington to Palm Springs, Calif., Friday morning, speak to a Republican women's group in Los Angeles Saturday, then stay in palm Springs through Sunday.

In the House of Representatives, debate continued over Agnew's request Tuesday for a House investigation of the charges against him. That request was turned down Wednesday by Speaker Carl Albert on the grounds that the matter was before the courts.

SWAP

Here's The Place To Yell

By SUSAN GALER

If anybody had anything to yell about, SWAP is the group to join. Communication is the key word in this organization. The initials stand for Student Workshop Activities Problems. The group covers just about every aspect of student life, including any broad issues that face the University.

Staff Photo - Kevin Mack

SWAP is the group to join...

It was in SWAP that co-ed dorms were first discussed. SWAP also is responsible for the abolishment of women's curfews and the law which prohibited the consumption of liquor on campus.

SWAP, which started about 12 years ago, holds meeting during the year in which members plan the annual conference where students and faculty members hold discussions on campus issues, student life, and anything else that has to do with the University. While it used to be an elitist group, any interested student can now apply for membership.

Barney Schneider, a committee member, said they look for as many different types of people as possible, especially people who are interested in the University and have something to offer.

At SWAP a student has a chance to sit down and have a beer and a conversation with the President of the University. Everyone-from the trustees to the janitors is represented. At the annual weekend conference which is held off-campus, students and faculty members have a chance to hear each other speak and get to know one another's opinions on different issues.

SWAP is the only vehicle on campus in which any student can become a part of and really learn something about the University and how it works and the people that run it.

While funding for other groups is in the hundred of dollars, the finances needed by SWAP run into the thousands. Last year it was the most controversial group before the Senate.

SWAP started out as a mere student exchange on policies of the University. It now includes a wide range of people, problems, and ideas. By

CC Governors Support UFW

By SHARON HUGHES

The Campus Center Board of Governors demonstrated their support of the United Farm Workers Union (UFW) last night by approving a motion to "direct CCSU management to purchase only UFW Union labelled lettuce".

In the same vein, the Board approved a motion "to direct CC-SU management only to purchase UFW Union processed wine.

The Board also voted:

--to transfer the sale of bus tickets from the SU candy counter to the hotel lobby of the CC hotel

--to spend not more than $3,500 purchasing drapes for student Senate and RSO and other groups

--allow the Student Senate Transit Service to use the furniture currently in their office until their new furniture (on order) arrives

"We'd be wise to ban non-UFW lettuce right now...it's a moral issue. To ban it would be committing ourselves to social justice. Not to ban it would be supporting the tactics employed against them by the Teamsters.," said Bob O'Donnell sponser of the motion.

Board Chairperson Jim Lindsey agreed with Mc Donnell saying "If you don't support this issue, I'd question your sense of social justice."

The effect of the Board's ruling will be that the Hatch the Blue Wall the Coffee Shop and the Top of the Campus will serve UFW lettuce (black eagle) exclusively. A directive by the 15 member student body has the full force of law so, the CC-SU management or the Food Services Department when bidding for lettuce for the building, cannot buy Teamsters (iceberg).

During debate, Vice Chancellor for Business Afairs, Thomas Campion cautioned the Board about a possible legal problem in forbidding a brand of union lettuce. (Taking all bids and accepting the lowest) must be followed according to Chapter 75, Section 11, of Massachusetts law (if Teamsters under bids UFW and you reject) you'll be in court so fast by the Teamsters you won't know what hit you", he said.

Ass't Director of CC Food Services, Tony Leslie agreed saying, "It would be equal to reverse discrimination". We can set size and quality specifications but not the purchaser."

"Up until the point our actions are declared illegal we have the opportunity to publically take a stand on the issue said Board member, said Walter Jonas."

Board Chairperson Jim Lindsey said they can get around the legal difficulty by not buying any lettuce at all if UFW lettuce does not offer the lowest price.

Furthermore, when UFW offers the lowest price the CC should buy in huge bulk (if this doesn't present a storage problem) to use if Teamsters should underbid them, said Campion.

The boycott of non-UFW processed wine will rule out the purchase of such wines as Gallo, Napa, Valley Guild for the Blue Wall, Top of the Campus and Hatch.

In the case of the wine the boycott will be virtually immediate non-UFW wine is removed from the shelves and stored until the controversy over the unionization of grape pickers is resolved. But the lettuce already purchase by CC Food Services will be used regardless of union brand.

According to John Hays, chairperson of the Board's Food Services Committee, the CC now buys UFW lettuce whenever it's available or about 90 per cent of the time.

The CC Travel Agency, which sold bus tickets in the SU lost $130 on bus tickets last year. The Board decided to open up bidding on space in the CC hotel lobby with effective profit of $7,100 to the CC as a whole. They are asking for a bid but $5,000 must be guaranteed; the remainder made in profit.

Bus tickets now sold at the SU candy counter has led to "no continuity in sales and not the most professional service," according to Bud Wilkes of CC management.

The bidder accepted by the Board will begin to offer services on November 1st '73 and services will be expanded to include tickets for international airlines, steamships, appealing student oriented prices and on the job training in hotel management. The SU rooms to be furnished with drapes are the RSO Student Activities Office (414, 416, 418), the Student Senate (420), Student groups (420, 422, 424, 426, 428),SGA President (430), Student Attorney (432), Science Fiction (434), People's Market and Lecture (328), Note Service, Dukes Room (310).

The Student Senate Transit Service will use the furniture from their office last year for the next three months or until the furniture (now on order) arrives.

Faculty Senate

Dollar Awards Recommended

Staff Photo - Joe Martins

Vice Chancellor Robert Gluckstern speaking at yesterday's Fac-Sen. meeting about his recent fact-finding trip to California and Hawaii.

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

Professional advancement awards to UMass faculty members in dollar amounts, as opposed to salary percentage increases, were recommended by the Faculty Senate yesterday.

Standards for merit increases of all types are presently being debated by the President of the University, Robert C. Wood, and by the administrations of the three university campuses.

These recommendations will be sent out shortly to departments on all the campuses.

It was the opinion of the Faculty-Senate in previous years that certain "professional advancement awards" be allocated on a dollar basis, and not according to a fixed percentage of the recipient professor's salary.

That the variance in salaries caused too great an inequity in these award amounts was the faculty's contention.

Yesterday, the Faculty-Senate again went on record as opposing awards by percent, and passed a motion calling for the Chancellor to recommend to the president and the Board of Trustees that his campus be allowed to give such awards in specific dollar amounts.

Other motions passed at the meeting included the approval of September 1, 1973 graduation lists and new appointments of Faculty senators to committees.

In other business, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery stated that the implementation and total enforcement of the new parking regulations has been moved to Oct. 9 due to the late processing of parking assignments by the parking office.

However, stated Bromery, lots 11, 12, and 13 will temporarily serve as "open"lots in which unregistered cars can park until Oct. 23.

Vice Chancellor Robert L. Gluckstern also addressed the Fac-Sen and gave an accounting of his summer study of the administration of state universities in California and Hawaii.

Sonia Sanchez Speaks On China

By BRIAN COOK

Sister Sonia Sanchez, a nationally and internationally known black woman playwright, poetess, and editor, will speak on her imprssions of China in a free public lecture tonight at 8 p.m. in the Converse Assembly Room at Amherst College.

An associate professor of Black Studies at Amherst College, Sister Sanchez has tried to convey a common theme of "consciousness of blackness" throughout her major literary works. Her more well known poems such as "Homecoming," "We are Badd People," an "It's a New Day," are all designed to "make black people know that it's cool to be black."

Having recently returned from an artists' convention to China, she will be presenting a women's view of that country through slides, motion pictures, and a diary of prose interviews which she prepared while there.

Sister Sanchez has lectured and read her poetry in hundreds of colleges throughout the United States and the Carribbean. She notes that many people in America became "uptight in the early 1960's when we (black people) started to recognize ourselves and demonstrate our presence," and she seeks to keep this consciousness alive so that all blacks will "see how much more they are and can be."

Her most acclaimed play, "Sister Sonji," helped establish her as one of the first widely recognized black women playwrights. Recent works to be released soon, including her first record of poetry and a children's book, which contain such titles as "Love Poems" and "Blues Book For Blue Black Magical Women." Several national magazines and reviews have carried her articles and writings. She is currently editor-at-large for "Journal of Black Poetry" and "Black Theatre."

Fall's Foliage Flourishes

empty car can become your traveling home. Wine and cheese, a few apples and some nutritious bread make an excellent traveling meal. A thermos of hot boullion rolled in a sleeping bag is helpful as many trips may see more than one sunrise. Once you're in the car, home is where your heart is. The fresh air, ever changing view, non-polluting, non-traffic, non-tourist, non-commercial ride is here and it's free.

For the best field of vision, sit about three feet inside the doorway on the far right. This way you can see what is coming and enjoy a particular scene for the longest time.

It is also important as rail riding is illegal. You can usually see a police car or any enforcement officer before you are noticed. Quickly move to the front of the car and you'll never be seen. Railroad workers do not check empty cars. If the train stops anywhere but at a large rail yard, you are safe. If you think your car is being shifted to another train, get off when stopped and check out the situation. Be careful of any moving cars from all directions. Although it is unlikely a railyard worker will see you, be polite if you find yourself within the mans grasp and explain your purpose for riding.

Another manner of railriding is colder and physically more straining but more enjoyable for the daring types. One can lie on the top of the train. It is not suggested to stand as the train constantly shifts and jumps. You can lie back and view the fading autumn sun or pretend you are Evil Knieval. Bridges and tunnels are a danger, but drop wires before those obstacles usually alert the rail rider in advance. The wires hang at the clearance level; if the clearance is too low, the rider merely climbs down the ladder near him.

The rider can have lunch on the roof, but should be familiar with the route before opening the baggies, as the difficulties of climbing down a ladder with full hands could result in one's loosing a sandwich or life.

The major railroads from Amherst area are the Boston and Maine, and the Central Vermont. They both have stations in Amherst. A good route from Amherst would be to hop a ride to Millers Falls, Mass. and either to stay on the train (B&M) as it goes direct to White River Junction with connecting points to New Hampshire and Canada or go west. The B&M connects the east-west route at Millers Falls, Boston or Mechanicville, N.Y., are possible destinations. For the best foliage, take the ride to New York state. The Central Vermont Railway, Inc. passes through such nice places as Vernon, Windsor, South Royalton, Braintree, Roxbury, Richmond and continues north to Montreal.

Rail riding can be safe and enjoyable if the rider uses common sense. It is a great way to enjoy the foliage and to be transported from one place to another. Give it a try. Maybe you UMies could replace joint rolling contests as the great American college student pastime.

SANTIAGO, Chile,--Rifle-toting Chilean soldier stands by as army nurses and a volunteer give haircuts to two long--haired inmates at the national soccer stadium in Santiago, Chile. Hippy hairstyles are frowned upon by the new military regime in Chile. Suspected leftists are being held at the stadium following their coup.

Junta Executes Ex-official, Relaxes Curfew

By WILLIAM R. LONG
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP)-A firing squad executed the former leftist governor of Talca yesterday after he was convicted of killing a policeman and attempting to blow up a dam.

The victim was identified by the military government as German Castro Rojas. He was the first high official of the former regime of President Salvador Allende to go before a firing squad. The execution took place in Talca, 140 miles south of Santiago.

A military communique also said a 26-year-old man, Teovaldo Saldiva Villalon, was executed in the town of Quillota, 60 miles west of Santiago. It said he was arrested Sept. 17 and found guilty of taking part in an extremist attack on a police patrol.

The two men were the 9th and 10th persons to be executed after summary courts-martial since the armed forces overthrew the Allende government in a bloody coup Sept. 11.

Meanwhile, military authorities relaxed a strict curfew, leaving Chileans free for the first time since the coup to take evening strolls and go out to dinner.

The curfew, enforced by soldiers and police with submachine guns, had emptied Santiago streets daily at 8 p.m., earlier than the normal Chilean dinner hour. On Thursday it was moved back to 10 p.m., a major step toward normalizing life in this battered capital.

The military government continued to raid homes, offices and factories in a hunt for pockets of leftist resistance. But the ruling junta sought to assure Chileans that everything is in order.

The junta, which seized power violently from Marxist President Salvador Allende, also announced that beef will be available in Santiago butcher shops this weekend.

Santiago residents have not been able to buy beef, except on the black market, for months. Long lines formed daily for buying other scarce items such as bread, cigarettes and cooking oil.

The ousted Allende government had blamed the shortages on right-wing sabotage, while anti-Marxists said inefficiency and corruption in Allende's government were the causes.

Carlos Hohmann, a retired government had blamed the shortages on right-wing sabotage, while anti-Marxist said inefficiency and corruption in Allende's government were the causes.

Carlos Hehmann, a retired government employe who opposed Allende, said that since the coup there has been "a fundamental difference in the distribution of food. There is more abundance."

But breadlines still can be seen around the city.

For many leftists, the coup has meant imprisonment or hiding.

Authorities have rounded up thousands of suspected leftists and held them in the National Stadium. The junta's director of protocol, Tobias Barros, said about 1,000 persons have taken refuge in different embassies in Santiago. He said about 500 Chileans have been given safe conduct out of the country.

Gas Stations Protest Price Ceilings

By BOB MONROE
Associated Press Writer

About half of the service stations in St. Louis were closed yesterday in the latest protest over Phase 4 retail gasoline price ceilings. More protests were set for this weekend.

Station operators everywhere were awaiting the Cost of Living Council's announcement on ceiling price increases expected Friday. One source close to the council said it would be 1 or 2 cents a gallon.

But dealers also want new rules that would permit them to pass on to customers any future increase in wholesale prices. The council was said to be weighing such changes.

"If they come out with anything less than a pass-through of the wholesale cost and an increase in the ceiling price of one cent, they haven't done anything," said Charles Binsted, president of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers.

"Anything less than that is going to be looked at with great disfavor by the nation's dealers," Binsted said in an interview. "I can tell you that because I've talked with many of them around the country in the last couple of days."

A protest in Manchester, N.H., appeared about ended after two-thirds of the stations had closed earlier this week. All but six reopened Thrusday after Gov. Meldrim Thomson agreed to press for ceiling price increases.

Bill Victory, president of the 600-member Evergreen Service Station Association, said he hoped that 80 per cent of the 1,000 Seattle area stations would be shut down this weekend.

A protest in western New York state was expected to involve about half of the dealers from noon Friday until Monday morning.

About 700 dealer members of the Long Island Gasoline Retailers Association voted almost unanimously Wednesday night to shut down unless the Phase 4 controls are lifted, but set no date for the closing.

Festival Held, Fighting Continues

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)-Predictions of rebel raids failed to keep Phnom Penh's citizens from spending the Buddhist Festival of the Dead Thursday in a whirl of social activity and prayer for departed ancestors.

South of the capital the military command eported an offensive against an estimated 400 antigovernment rebels and North Vietnamese commandos.

Co. Am Rong, the chief command spokesman, said fighting erupted about one mile northeast of Kompong Kantuot off Highway 38, which forms a rough southern defensive line for Phnom Penh. The clash occurred about 14 miles southwest of the capital.

To the north, fighting was reported at Muk Kampuol. Field reporters said infiltrators may be moving into the area, some 10 miles northeast of Phnom Penh on the eastern banks of the Tonle Sap River.

Just across the Tonle Sap River from Muk Kampuol is Prek Phnou, site of a Cambodian military fuel depot which has been the target of several unsuccessful sapper attacks in past years.

Highway 5, Phnom Penh's road to the rice paddies of Batambang Province, and Highway 4, the capital's road to the sea, remained cut by insurgent forces.

In South Vietnam, a Viet Cong broadcast said communist-led forces had thwarted a Saigon government land grab in the central highlands. They have pinned down and were "heavily punishing" 30 battalions of government troops, the broadcast said.

Liberation radio accused the government of triggering new warfare by sending troops against areas held by the Viet Cong in a "blatant land grab" contrary to provisions of the cease-fire.

The Saigon troops were defeated and driven back, the radio said, even though they had the support of planes, artillery and tanks.

Senate Blocks Navy Sub Funds

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate refused yesterday to block the Navy's full speed ahead schedule for development and production of a $13 billion fleet of Trident submarines.

By a 49 to 47 vote, the Senate turned down an amendment to a $21 billion weapons authorization bill to stretch out production two years and delay completion of the first of 10 of the larger vessels by two years.

The Navy proposes to get the first of the 540-foot submarines, equipped with a new longer range 4,000-mile Trident missile ready for launching by 1978.

At the White House, deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said President Nixon was "extremely gratified" with the rejection of the Trident amendment. Warren also restated the President's delight with the defeat of a move Wednesday to cut U.S. troop strength in Europe.

The Trident slowdown was proposed by Sens. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H.,and Peter H. Dominick, R-Colo., senior members of the Senate Armed Services subcommittee on research and development.

They argued that the Navy plan to pull all 10 Trident submarines under construction before the first can be tested in operation risks, without military justification, costly engineering errors.

McIntyre referred the senate to cost overruns on the abandoned Cheyenne Helicopter and the F111 and C5A military aircraft as examples of proceeding with production before research, development and testing is completed.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., defended the accelerated Navy schedule as justified both from the standpoint of cost and the threat of recent Russian successes in nuclear weapon technology.

A two-year stretch out in the Trident program, he said, would cost the taxpayers an extra billion dollars, not counting inflation.

Soviets Launch Manned Test Flight

By ROGER LEDDINGTON
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP)-The Soviet Union launched its first manned space flight in more than two years yesterday, sending two cosmonauts on a test mission in a new Soyuz craft that was powered into earth orbit.

The Soyuz 12 spaceship was launched on a two-day flight from the Soviet space center at Baikonur on the Kazakhstan plains in central Asia, Tass news agency announced.

Soyuz 12 carries two rookie spacemen, Lt. Col. Vasily Lazarev, the commander, and flight engineer Oleg Makarov.

The craft is an "improved" version of the Soyuz ship in which three cosmonauts were killed at the end of the last manned Soviet mission in 1971.

Tass said the mission will include "comprehensive checking and testing of the improved flight systems, further testing of the process of manual and automatic control in various flight conditions."

The soviet launching came just two days after three American astronauts returned from a record 59½-day flight in space aboard Skylab 2.

The previous Soyuz 11 mission ended in disaster on June 30, 1971, when the three-man crew died on return to earth because the craft's hatch failed to close properly after undocking from the orbiting salyut 1 space laboratory.

The Soyuz craft was sent back for redesign. Last April the Soviets launched another space lab and planned to send a new manned Soyuz vehicle to dock with it.

But the orbiting laboratory broke up in space and the manned mission was scratched.

Western space experts reported at least one other Soyuz mission in the past year has failed, but the Russians have not confirmed this.

Tass said cosmonauts Lazarev and Makarev were "feeling well and the craft's on-board systems were functioning well."

Tass said the cosmonauts would make spectographic studies of various sections of the earth to obtain "data for the solution of economic problems." It did not elaborate.

The announcement of the flight was unusual in that it specified the expected length of the flight. The duration of earlier flights was never revealed in advance.

The Soyuz craft is scheduled to take part in a 1975 joint space mission with an Apollo vehicle of the United States.

Some American scientists have indicated the United States expects a successful Soyuz mission before American astronauts will be sent to maneuver and dock in space with the Russian ship.

Breaking with previous procedures, the Soviets announced the launching of Soyuz 12 only two hours after liftoff. In the past, such space announcements have been delayed at least eight hours until the space team at Baikonur was sure of a successful launch.

Some American scientists involved in the joint 1975 flight have criticized the Russians for withholding details of their space program.

Russians can get far more details on U.S. space missions by just watching American television.

Moscow television restricted its coverage of the Soyuz 12 mission to a few seconds of film on the launch and shots of the two crewmen in training sessions.

Moscow radio broadcast a short conversation between the ground control station and the orbiting spacecraft. Lazarev said, "All is going well, the mood is cheerful and we feel as if we were in the training system."

Skylab Astros Prepare For Trip Home

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP)-The Skylab 2 astronauts underwent another medical examination aboard the USS New Orleans yesterday and prepared to fly home to Texas for a reunion with their wives.

Astronauts Alan L. Bean, Jack R. Lousma and Owen K. Garriott are making a recovery from their 59½ days in the weightlessness of space that's "just short of amazing," doctorssaid. But the three are "still a little weak on their feet, as you would expect."

Dr. Edward Burchard, one of several doctors examining the astronauts, said, "They all feel fine and look good."

The astronauts were to leave the New Orleans later Thursday and go to nearby North Island Naval Station to board a C140 Air Force transport for a flight to Ellington Air Force Base, near Houston.

The transport was to arrive at Ellington about 7 p.m. EDT.

The astronauts were to spend last night at home, but their children won't be there.

The spacemen are under a week-long limited quarantine designed to protect them from infection. Doctors are concerned that they lost some of their natural immunity to disease during their long space voyage.

Bean, Garriott and Lousma returned from history's longest space voyage Tuesday, splashing down in the Pacific Ocean after almost two months aboard America's space station.

Judges May Testify Against Troy

BOSTON (AP) — District Court Chief Jusice Franklin Flashner is one of 36 persons who may be summonsed to testify in the ouster hearing against Dorchester Municipal Court Judge Jerome P. Troy.

The hearing starts Monday before the Executive Council.

Atty. Lawrence O'Donnell, Troy's counsel, submitted 35 names, including Flashner's, to the council at the 5 p.m. deadline Thursday. These are individuals the disbarred jurist wants subpoenaed, but the council has reserved the right to veto any of the names.

In the meantime, it was disclosed that O'Donnell was notified of this in a letter from Robert F. Oberkoetter, executive secretary of the council. There had been no previous mention of this at any council session, where rules for the ouster ordered by Gov. Francis W. Sargent were discussed.

The legislature "addressed" Sargent to fire Troy, and council ratification is required.

The list includes several other judges besides Flashner. There is also one reporter, William R. Cash of The Boston Globe.

Judges include Paul King, fulltime associate on the Dorchester court; Richard C. Woods and James J. Mellen of the Charlestown district court; Margaret C. Scott of the Dorchester court; Elwood S. McKenney of the Roxbury Municipal Court; and Joseph Feeney of the South Boston court.

Others include Troy's brother, Robert F. Troy of Duxbury, former Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti, and Donald Conn, a former Republican nominee or attorney general.

Several of the other prospective witnesses testified at proceedings that led up to the order of the Supreme Judicial Court on July 26 that disbarred Troy and enjoined him from sitting as a judge. This resulted in the legislative address and the pending removal action.

The court based its decision on six offenses it considered extremely serious and related to many of the controversies with which Troy became embroiled in during his 11 years on the bench.

He was appointed by former Gov. John A. Volpe, reportedly at the behest of Councillor Patrick J. McDonough, D-Boston. Troy had been campaign manager for Volpe's unsuccessful Democratic opponent two years earlier.

Among the complaints noted by the Supreme Court was the action of a court officer operating a bulldozer at a creek Troy was filling at Tenean Beach in Dorchester. This job was supposedly performed during regular court time.

Other witnesses on Troy's list include: Boston Assessor Theodore V. Anzalone; Rose S. Vincola of East Boston; Michael Manzi of Methuen; Donald Carvin of Sharon; Melvin Cohen of Canton; Francis H. Maher of West Roxbury; Matthew T. Connolly of Newton, and Robert P. Manion of Dorchester.

Also, William H. Murphy of Milton; Joseph P. Mooney of Revere; Benjamin J. Wall of Milton; James T. Buckley of West Roxbury; John Smoot of Dorchester; George Littlewood of Waltham; John Noble of Scituate; Robert Childs of Dorchester; Michael Farrington of Milton; Charles Gritch Jr. of Marshfield; Arnold Felton of Boston; John H. Maloney and William J. Vaughan of the Dorchester court; Joseph Hennelly of Arlington; Owen Brock of Charlestown and Michael Emerson, whose address wasn't immediately available.

Shades Of Watergate

Congressmen Fear Pressure

By MARGARET GENTRY
Associated Press Writer

WASINGTON (AP) - The Justice Department lawyer thought the request was all right, but the congressman was squirming as if his phone call might be considered improper.

Over and over, the congressman insisted he wasn't trying to pressure anyone. Then he asked the lawyer meekly if he could tell him the status of a case affecting a constituent.

Before Watergate, said the lawyer relating the incident, the congressman would not have been so careful to avoid the appearance of pressure. Nor would the lawyer have been required to write a memo about the phone call, filing one copy in his personal records and another in the case records.

All Justice Department officials now are required to keep such records as one step in Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson's campaign to erase the public impression, festered by Watergate and related scandals, that the government acts when powerful people pull strings.

All Justice Department officials now are required to keep such records as one step in Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson's campaign to erase the public impression, fostered by Watergate and related scandals, that the government acts when powerful people pull strings.

The regulation requires each department employee to keep a written record of oral communications with anyone he would not normally deal with in the routine handling of lawsuits, investigations and other pending matters.

Richardson said that includes members of Congress and their employes, White House and other government officials, and private individuals not directly involved in the matter. He said it does not include newsmen.

J. Stanley Pottinger, assistant attory general, said the number of outsiders approaching his civil rights division office has declined but probably not because of the order itself.

"If I got many of these calls, I would regard this memo business as a nuisance," said Irving Jaffe, acting assistant attorney general in charge of the civil division. "But I don't get many. It hasn't been burdensome."

"It's the kind of thing most of us would make a memo of anyway," said Henry E. Peterson, assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division.

Pottinger reported a total of 73 calls to his division, including one from a member of Congress, 21 from congressional staff members, 11 from pressure groups, and 32 from federal, state and local officials and private citizens.

Chavez-Teamsters Possible Agreement

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Farm labor leader Cesar Chavez concluded negotiations with Teamsters officials yesterday amid indications of a tentative agreement to end their bitter organizing fight in California's grape and lettuce fields.

The AFL-CIO issued a brief statement saying the talks had ended and that an announcement was expected Friday.

"The parties completed three days of negotiations and have made progress towards a resolution of the issues," an AFL-CIO spokesman said. "The AFL-CIO negotiators will report back to their principals and we expect an announcement tomorrow."

No details were disclosed, but the statement indicated all that remained was final approval from AFL-CIO President George Meany and Teamsters President Frank E. Fitzsimmons.

Labor sources close to the negotiations also supported that view but would give no details.

Chavez immediately flew back to California and could not be reached for comment. A Teamsters spokesman declined comment.

Fitzsimmons also met on several occasions with Meany in an effort to forge an acceptable settlement.

The latest talks were held behind closed doors in a Wahington hotel. Among those present in addition to Chavez were UFW general counsel Jerry Cohen and Einar O. Mohn, in charge of Teamsters affairs on the West Coast. Representing the AFL-CIO were J. Albert Woll, the federation's legal counsel; Joseph Keenan, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers president; and Paul Hall, Seafarers International Union president.

Any agreement for ending jurisdictional fight is likely to call for the Teamsters to surrender some or all of their contracts with grape and lettuce growers who previously signed wth Chavez' union. It is also expected to include an agreement by Chavez allowing Meany or other top AFL-CIO officials to arbitrate any disputes involving UFW contracts with the growers.

Whether such an agreement would bring peace to the fields is unclear, however. Similar peace talks in 1971 produced a "no raiding" agreement between the two unions. But that expired last March and since then the Teamsters signed contracts with several table grape and lettuce growers who previously signed with the UFW.

Loss of the pacts reduced the number of dues-parying UFW members to less than 10,000 from a high of 60,000.

Chavez responded by ordering hundreds of pickets into the grape fields this past summer in an effort to halt the harvest. He also began a nationwide boycott of table grapes to bring added economic pressure on the growers, whom he accused of signing "sweetheart" deals with the Teamsters.

Man Tried In Slaying Arrested With Bomb

By JERRY ESTILL
Associated Press Writer

· NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Byron De La Beckwith, tried twice but never convicted in the 1963 murder of civil rights leader Medgar Evers, was arrested yesterday as he drove into New Orleans with a ticking time bomb that was set to go off later in the day.

Acting on information, New Orleans police intelligence officers were waiting for Beckwith and stopped him as he drove into the city limits at about 3 a.m. In addition to the dynamite time bomb, police said Beckwith carried three rifles, a pistol, several boxes of ammunition and the barrel from a .50-caliber machine gun.

Officers said the bomb, containing "a large amount" of dynamite, was preset to explode some time within 12 hours of when it was found. They would not place an exact time.

A spokesman said police have a theory on what Beckwith was planning to do with the bomb. They declined to reveal the theory, saying that to do so would be commenting on the evidence.

Federal authorities said they would charge Beckwith with violation of a section of the Gun Control Act of 1968 which forbids possession of an explosive device.

In a brief news conference at Parish Prison, Beckwith, a 52-year-old Greenwood, Miss., salesman, said, "I was coming to New Orleans to sell china."

Asked about the dynamite in the time bomb, he replied, "I'll just say a lot of dynamite is used in the Delta to blow up any stumps in New Orleans.

A police spokesman refused to give any details about what led them to the arrest, or about what had caused intelligence officers to be involved, except to say they had information that Beckwith was coming to New Orleans to commit a crime.

At a bond hearing in Criminal District Court, Beckwith was booked on state charges of aggravated assault, carrying a concealed weapon and attempted aggravated arson.

As Beckwith looked on, Magistrate Robert Collins asked the basis of the arson charge. A spokesman for the district attorney's office said he did not know, but it must be valid since intelligence officers "very, very rarely make arrests."

Police said later that the intelligence unit specializes in subversive activities, civil rights, and organized crime.

Beckwith was ordered held on $8,500 bond on the state charges, and he immediately began efforts to raise it. However, before he could post the necessary $8500 to get a bonding company to bail him out, federal officals asked the state to hold Beckwith for them in connection with the explosives.

Asked if the arrest by intelligence officers had anything to do with the recent announcement that a person or persons had planned to kill President Nixon in New Orleans, a spokesman said, "No."

Beckwith appeared somewhat thinner than he did 10 years ago when he was tried twice in the Medgar Evers murder case in Jackson, Miss.

Board Says Hunt Crash Caused By Pilot Error

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Chicago plane crash that killed a congressman and the wife of convicted Watergate defendant E. Howard Hunt was caused by pilot error-not by sabotage, the National Transportation Safety Board said Thursday.

Forty-three of the 61 passengers and crew members died when the United Air Lines jet crashed into a residential area near Chicago's Midway Airport. Two other persons on the ground were killed in the crash and in the resulting fire. Five homes were destroyed.

Among those killed in the crash last Dec. 8 were Rep. George W. Collins, D-Ill., and CBS newswoman Michele Clark.

The safety board said the probable cause of the accident was "...the captain's failure to exercise positive flight management." This resulted, the board concluded, in the plane losing its air speed and going into a stall on a landing attempt.

The board said it found no evidence of sabotage or foul play in connection with the crash. Chicago legal researcher Sherman Skolnick had claimed the plane was sabotaged because, he claimed, 12 of the passengers were directly linked with Watergate.

He said some of those passengers had documents on them that linked President Nixon and former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell with Watergate. Mrs. Hunt had $10,000 in $100 bills in her purse when she died.

The safety board, noting the "allegations of foul play which have been injected into the publicity surrounding this accident," said it found "no evidence of any medical condition that would have incapacited the crew or of any interference with the crew in the performance of their duties.

"The finding of elevated levels of carbon monoxide and cyanide in some of the victims was consistent with death due to smoke inhalation in the conditions existing during the post-crash fire," he board added.

The statement referred to autopsies that showed traces of cyanide and carbon monoxide in the blood streams of some of the victims. The two chemicals are formed when wool, cotton, paper or plastic decompose during fires. Traces of the chemicals have been found in victims of other aircraft fires.

The board said its investigation showed the aircraft and its engines and flight controls were airworthy at the time of the accident.

It said the plane's captain had called for the first and second officers to read out a checklist while the plane was approaching the runway.

This meant the first officer could not make "any of the required altitude callouts," the board said, "nor does it appear that he was monitoring air speed and rate of descent."

Man Shoots Himself, Another, Fires At Talk Show Host

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A young man fired shots at a KGO radio talk show host in a bullet-proof streetside studio Thursday, shot another man, then turned the gun on himself, a KGO spokesman reported.

Dave Chase of the KGO news department said the man attempted to shoot through the bullet-proof glass at show host Jim Dunbar, but found the window impenetrable.

Dunbar had just finished interviewing Rep. Jerome Waldie, D-Calif., when the shooting occurred, the studio said. Waldie was not in the booth during the shooting, officials said.

Chase said the gunman tried to enter the station lobby and shot Ben Munson, a KGO salesman, three times in the back with a .22-caliber Colt automatic pistol.

The gunman then sprinted down a street, reloaded and shot himself, Chase said.

San Francisco General Hospital reported that both the gunman, identified as Lawrence Kwong, 25, of San Francisco, and Munson were in critical condition and undergoing surgery.

Fireman Morris Murray, on duty across the street from the radio station, said he saw a man standing outside Dunbar's bullet-proof booth. He said he was standing there for "quite some time, then he pulled a gun and fired once at the window. When he saw it was bullet-proof, he ran inside the building. A man rushed out into the lobby and he shot him four or five times."

"I had a premonition that guy was dangerous" said Waldie, a declared gubernatorial candidate.

Waldie said he had left the station and was two blocks away in his car when he heard shots and Dunbar on his car radio saying, "I've been shot at."

"His standing there was ominous enough so we both took note of him," Waldie said of the gunman.

Waldie said he turned to Dunbar during a commercial and remarked, "I don't like the looks of that guy. He looks like he's on drugs."

"We're okay. There's five inches of bullet-proof glass between us," Waldie quoted Dunbar as saying.

Waldie said the young man was "shaking, staring and didn't react to anything."

Cavalieri Murder Trial Recessed

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP)- The judge's bench is a wheelchair in Bristol Superior Court, where Edward S. Lykus, 20, of Woonsocket, R.I., is on trial for a kidnap-murder.

Superior Judge James P. McGuire resumed the trial Thursday in a wheelchair, after a two-day recess during which he was in a hospital for further treatment for broken ribs.

He was injured in fall last Saturday and was hospitalized then.

On Monday he resumed the trial but recessed at noon when he reported he was in pain.

Lykus is charged with the kidnaping and slaying of Paul Cavalieri, 13, of North Attleboro, who disappeared last Nov. 2. His body was found some weeks later in the woods.

The boy's family, meanwhile paid $50,000 ransom.

Judge McGuire declined Thursday to grant a defense motion to strike the testimony of seven witnesses who testified last week that the voice they heard on tapes was that of Lykus.

New Trial For Editor

NEW HAVEN AP) - The Connecticut Circuit Court's appellate division has ordered a new trial for an underground newspaper editor who published an off-color drawing bearing President Nixon's name.

The judge erred in not requiring the prosecution to prove that Jack Hary, editor of the University of Hartford paper, was motivated by malice, the three-judge panel ruled unanimously in a decision released yesterday.

Hardy was convicted of criminal libel in the state Circuit Court for printing a drawing of a fist with an upraised, phallus-like middle finger. The name Richard M. Nixon was inscribed under it.

The drawing was published in the "Liberated Press," an underground paper published weekly at the university. It appeared Nov. 13, 1968, nine days after Nixon was elected to his first term as president.

Judge William S. Ewing Jr. concluded that the drawing was offensive, abusive and indecent, and that the state was not required to prove that its publication was a malicious act, a necessary element in most libel cases involving a public official.

The appellate division, however, ruled that two landmark U.S. Supreme Court cases have established that a person charged with either civil or criminal libel of a public official must be shown to have acted in malice.

"It was error for the trial court to rule that malice could be implied from the fact of publication," Judge David N. Jacobs wrote in the decision.

The appeals court ordered a new trial.

The two cases he cited were New York Times versus Sullivan, involving an advertisement published in the Times concerning an Alabama police commissioner, and Garrison versus Louisiana, which extended the so-called "New York Times Rule" to criminal libel.

The appellate division added that "we are not unmindful of the unpopular and distasteful actions which have been, and will continue to be, immunized by the constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and the press."

But it added that "we measure the survival and success of liberty in part by the diversity of opinions and modes of expression entertained by our citizens and fostered by our constitution."

Hardy argued in his trial that he was entitled to publish the drawing by the First Amendment, which guarantees free speech and press. He also fought the charge on the basis of the due-process clause of the 14th Amendment.

Who Is The Real Lulu Belle?

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) - Virginia Streavel turns off the roles of housewife and mother by becoming a clown in her own world of make believe.

Seated at her dining room table, Mrs. Streavel turns herself into a happiness merchant.

"I'm beginning to feel like Lulu Belle," she said, rubbing white makeup onto her face.

She added big, wide, red lips, a few freckles and big, floppy eye lashes and donned a costume featuring gay pantaloons.

"I feel different," she said. "My character changes." Lulu Belle twirled in a pirouette. "Now I'm Lulu Belle. I'm a clown. I feel like a little girl."

Mrs. Robert Streavel, 50, had disappeared. She no longer was a housewife and a mother of three, but Lulu Belle, a happiness clown well-known around Dayton.

Mrs. Streavel often disappears. Sometimes she's Lulu Belle. Sometimes she's Hazel the Witch. Sometimes Mae West. Twice a year she's the Easter Bunny and Santa Claus.

"I enjoy making people smile," she said. "I'm really not professional. One of the biggest thrills I've ever had is working with the clowns at the Shrine circus. I learned so much."

The clowning life of Virginia Streavel began 10 years ago when she dressed up as the Easter Bunny and visited a Dayton hospital.

"I got to thinking about those children in the hospital," she said. "I knew that they couldn't hunt eggs or talk to the bunny. So I thought I would give them something extra."

Now she returns there each Easter and each Christmas, merchandising happiness.

Women Arraigned In Baby's Murder

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — Janice Goulet, 27, of Salem was committed to the state hospital at Danvers Thursday for observation when arraigned on a charge of murder in connection with the strangulation of the 17-month-old son of a couple who befriended her.

Miss Goulet entered no plea at her arraignment. She is to undergo psychiatric observation at the hospital.

Police said Mrs. Edmond Nakis found her baby dead with a scarf knotted around his neck when she returned home Wednesday from visiting her husband at Salem Hospital.

Officers said she left the baby in the care of Miss Goulet, a friend whom she had permitted to live in the house.

Navy POW's Cleared

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of the Navy John W. Warner dismissed mutiny and other misconduct charges against two former war prisoners yesterday but formally censured them for "failing to meet the standards expected of officers.'

Warner said that evidence collected in a three-month investigation warranted further legal steps that might have led to courts-martial trials for Navy Capt. Walter E. Wilber and Marine Lt. Col. Edison W. Miller, highest rankers yet accused of misconduct while prisoners of the North Vietnamese.

But the Navy secretary decided it was more important to spare other former POWs "the disruptive effects of such proceedings."

As he announced letters of censure, Warner said that Wilber, 43, of Columbia Crossroads, Pa., and Miller, 42, of Newport Beach, Calif., will be retired "in the best interests of the naval service."

Even before Warner acted, Wilber had requested retirement and Miller, granted 60 per cent disability, was getting out of tthe service on medical grounds, a Pentagon spokesman acknowledged. Both men have served in uniform about 25 years and are entitled to retirement with pensions.

Warner's action leaves charges pending against four Army and Marine Corps enlisted men accused of misconduct while POWs. They already have been cleared once, but new charged were filed against them in July. Three other Army enlisted men have left the service after being cleared of similar charges.

The allegations against Wilber and Miller were filed by Rear Adm. James B. Stockdale, who was a senior POW during the years in which they were in captivity.

After Warner's decision was announced, the Navy quoted Stockdale as saying that the censure and impending retirement of Wilber and Miller "adequately serve the cause of justice."

Congress Urged To Reject Medical Ethics Legislation

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration, saying it is doing a good job under existing program, urged Congress yesterday to reject legislation that sponsors claim is needed to protect humans in medical experimentation.

The legislation would establish a national commission within the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to develop ethical principles and guidelines to cover biomedical and behavioral research involving human subjects.

Under the proposals, institutional review boards would establish a national commission within the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to develop ethical principles and guidelines to cover biomedical and behavioral research involving human subjects.

Under the proposals, institutional review boards would set local policies to make sure the research on humans is safe and is carried out with the patient's consent.

The proposals were attacked by Dr. Charles C. Edwards, assistant secretary for health, but were praised by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., at House public health subcommittee hearings.

Edwards said he agreed there is a need to protect human subjects and "we are conducting an aggressive effort" to do so.

It would be a "serious mistake to replace workable and effective mechanisms for protecting human subjects with an untried and unpromising system such as that proposed," Edwards said.

Kennedy said there have been many health gains but "we have also seen the zeal for new knowledge and the overwhelming desire to utilize the new technology result in serious medical and ethical abuses."

Rep. Paul G. Rogers, D-Fla., chairman of the House subcommittee, said the major bill under review by his panel has been passed by the Senate as part of legislation dealing with training and research grant.

"I am not at all sure that the provisions. . .can fully guarantee our goal of protecting individuals who participate in medical research," he said.

The bill would bar research on living human fetuses or infants until the institutional review boards are established.

In addition, the legislation provides that no one may be required to participate in a federally funded health service program if doing so would be against his religious beliefs or moral convictions.

Edwards said existing departmental policy requires institutioaal review committees in each location where research is done.

Present methods of protecting the rights of individuals "have proved to be the most effective means available," he said.

Provisions of the bill are "inconsistent and unworkable from a practical point of view," he said.

A commission "would be expected to develop and, with congressional approval, put in place a regulatory apparatus, including sanctions for violators at the same time it is appropriate way to regulate the protection of human subjects," he added.

Authorities Claim Land Illegally Sold

LIVERMORE, Maine (AP) — Authorities say a New York woman has apparently sold 128 acres of farm land in this central Maine community, mostly to unsuspecting New York and New Jersey residents.

The woman, identified by town officials as Anne Scripta, owns only 60 acres, and that has a tax lien on it, according to authorities.

Livermore Selectman Lowell Bowles said the woman sold the land in two-and four-acre parcels.

The town clerk, Mrs. Nellie Tidswell, said the Scripta property is actually an old abandoned farm on a discontinued road. Older residents here refer to it as the Carrie Hutchinson place.

The land and a tumbled-down farmhouse, Mrs. Tidswell said, was sold to a J. A. Martin of Brookline, N.Y., in the late 1960's. In 1969 or 1970, she said, Martin deeded the property to Anne Scripta.

Martin is believed to have sold two lots from the 60-acre property prior to the transfer, Mrs. Tidswell said, and these lots appear to be legitimately sold.

Neither Martin nor the Scripta woman have paid property taxes to the town of Livermore, according to Bowles, and a tax lien has been placed on the land with ownership, in effect, reverting to the town.

Bowles said the town will sell the land by sealed bids after straightening out the presently-confused deeds.

Mrs. Tidswell said out-of-state publications carried ads for the property, describing it as "two acres...with scenic beauty in Maine."

She said some buyers told her they were told the area was already developed with streets laid out, while others said they were told some chalets had already been built.

The sales became known when a number of out-of-staters began arriving in Livermore this summer to see their property. The problems came to light when the town began to make out property tax forms.

Maine Atty. Gen. John A. Lund, whose office was asked to investigate, said that since all transactions took place outside of Maine, the matter has been referred to the U.S. attorney's office in Portland.

Asst. U.S. Atty. John B. Wlodkowski said his files show a 1971 federal indictment charging the Scripta woman with fraud. He said officials so far have been unable to locate her.

Rockefeller Inaugurated As President At W. Va. Wesleyan

BUCHANNON, W. Va. (AP) — John D. Rockefeller IV, a rich, aspiring politician turned academician, will be inaugurated today as the 12th president of West Virginia Wesleyan College.

Philadenthropist John D. Rockefeller III, father of the new president, will give the principal speech during formal ceremonies Friday.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., and his wife, parents of the new president's wife, also will be on hand, along with delegates from some 300 colleges and universities and religious, industrial and labor union leaders.

Rockefeller, a 36-year-old Presbyterian, took over in March as head of the 83-year-old college, which is affiliated with the United Methodist Church, and which has an enrollment of 1,625.

He succeeded Dr. Stanley H. Martin, who resigned about the time Rockefeller was losing as the Democratic candidate against incumbent Republican Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr.

Rockefeller had served four years as secretary of state, and previously was a member of the West Virginia House Delegates.

Since his graduation from Harvard, his only public identification with higher education before taking the Wesleyan post was as a trustee of the University of Chicago.

Rockefeller, whose nickname "Jay" became popular during his political campaigns, firmly refuses to talk politics with newsmen. He says he is committed now to Wesleyan, although many political observers say he one day will return to politics, possibly when the governor's office is up for grabs again in 1976.

Windfall Paid For Cape Land

TRURO, Mass. (AP) — Falmouth architect and his wife who established squatters' right to 103.2 acres of land here lat December may get $200,000 for it from the federal government.

The National Park Service wants to take the land for the Cape Cod National Seashore.

The land is in two tracts on Prince Valley Road, half way between the Atlantic Ocean side of Cape Cod and the Massachusetts Bay side.

The Boston Globe reported that the John R. Hellman and his wife processed the land through the office of U.S. Atty. James N. Gabriel and that a U.S. District Court decision by Judge Francis J. W. Ford granted them title five days after they applied for it.

Beth Hellman and Gabriel have been active in Republican politics, the Globe said.

The Globe said that the property was appraised at $175,000 two years ago and that asuming a 10 per cent increase in value each year, it now could be worth $210,000.

The Hellman's claim to have held the land openly and continuously since 1948, cutting firewood on it and using it for picnics.

The Globe reported that since the Hellman claim became known, four families have come forward with deeds granting them the property or parts of it.

WFCR Continues French Programming

On Thursday, October 4th at 8:30 p.m., the French radio program, Tout en Francals heard over WFCR (88.5 FM) will begin its new season. The program, which won a devoted audience in its first year not only in the Five-College area, but as far north as Putney, Vermont and as far south as New Haven, has had a change of days and hours, and will now be heard Thursdays from 8:30 to 9 p.m. and Sundays from 7:30 to 8 p.m.

This year the program will use a magazine format. Although there will still be interviews and other programs lasting the full half-hour, more smaller segments, such as reviews of the French and Canadian press, book reviews and shorter interviews (many with people in this area) and musical interludes, are planned. The program received a Faculty Research Grant this past May with which to acquire new material. But while abroad this summer, the program's producer, Dr. B. Braude of the UMass French and Italian Department, was given many programs free by the French Radio and Television Office (ORTF) as well as by two private stations in Paris, Europe No. 1 and Radio Television Luxembourg, and by the Radio Suisse Romande in Geneva.

Art Design Expands

The UMass department of art has announced the addition of a design curriculum and the appointment of three faculty members in the design area.

The new design area will work in an interdisciplinary relationship with the landscape arthicecture and regional planning department and the Institute for Man and His Environment. The coordinator is Professor Arnold Friedmann, who formerly headed the UMass department of textiles, clothing and environmental art.

Prof. Friedmann taught undergraduate and graduate design in the department of interior and environmental design for 17 years at Pratt Institute before coming to UMass. He has published several major articles and is co-author of "Interior Design" published by American Elsevier Company.

Prof. Melvin Smith of the American Institute of Architects has also joined the faculty of the design area in a joint appointment with the department of landscape architectue and regional planning.

Difficulty Adjusting?

Are you having difficulty adjusting here at college? Are you encountering questions rather than answers? Are drugs getting in the way of things? Are you lonely? If so - PLEASE - get in touch with someone who knows and cares. Come to "PROJECT RAP" !! And rap with Dennis Lucchesi!!!!!

"PROJECT RAP" is a new independent counseling project under the direction of Dennis Lucchesi, an experienced dude and a good human being, who might be able to reach you. (No strings attached!!)

"PROJECT RAP" is located on the basement floor of Brown House (Sylvan Residence Area) across from Suite #12. It is open Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 2 to 4 in the afternoon and 8 to 12 in the evenings of those same nights. Saturday and Sunday hours will be 12 noon to midnight. New Career, Counseling Service

The Career Planning and Placement Service and the Counseling Center are combining their services under a new unit. The name of the merged units is Student Development and Career Planning Center. The new Center will be located in Berkshire House. The physical move from their current locations in Whitmore Administration Building to Berkshire House will be accomplished during the week of October 1-5. Except for employment interview appointments previously scheduled, the offices of the professional staff and the service operations will be closed for the entire week of October 1-5. Full resumption of services and appointments will be scheduled for Tuesday, October 9, 1973, in Berkshire House.

Public Utilities Strength Seen

BOSTON (AP)-A legislative committee said yesterday that it has given a favorable report to two measures designed to strengthen the position of publicly owned and operated municipal utility companies.

One measure would empower cities and towns to borrow money by issuing tax-free revenue bonds. They are currently restricted to general-obligation bonds, secured by pledging the credit of the city or town.

The other bill would authorize the establishment of authorities made up of several towns to share power facilities.

Similar measures were killed in the legislature last year.

Comet Comes From Behind Sun

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)-Comet Kehoutek, expected next January to be the most spectacular of the century, has emerged from behind the sun with the expected brightness, the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory said Thursday.

A spokesman said the observatory had received word from Tsutomu Seki of Kochi, Japan, that he had photographed the comet low on the horizon. He estimated brightness at 11th magnitude, too faint for the naked eye.

The comet will begin to be visible in the southwest sky after sunset early in December and should be brighter than any star in the sky Jan. 10-15.

Church Leaders View Racism

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP)-New England church leaders banded together yesterday to set up a regional task force to confront racism in the churches of the region.

A three day conference at the Stigmatine Monastery in Waltham concluded with the adoption of a resolution for creation of the task force. It was proposed by the black bishop who is head of the United Methodist Church in the Boston area, Bishop Edward A. Carroll.

The task force is to use the combined efforts of the 75 religious bodies in New England, including Jews, Roman Catholics and Protestants, to develop "effective educational strategy to eliminate systematic racism in the churches of New England."

The Most Rev. Daniel A. Cronin, Roman Catholic Bishop of Fall River, was chairman of the conference.

Good Show, Joel

Members of the Juan de la Cruz Boycott Committee met last Friday with Vice Chancellor Thomas Campion and Food Services Director Joel Stoneham and, as a result of that meeting, Campion and Stoneham agreed to stop ordering iceberg lettuce and table grapes for the dining commons.

Wednesday night, the Student Senate almost unanimously approved the move.

"The Student Senate in support of the United Farm Workers AFL-CIO struggle moves that all iceberg lettuce and table grapes be removed from all food services at the University of Massachusetts after a two week interim period of grace is allowed," read the bill.

After several attempts over the past few years, the decision to support the UFW was finally made at our state institution. Hopefully, it will pave the way for statewide support of the United Farm Workers cause. In general, it was a rare show of brilliance for both Joel Stoneham and the Student Senate.

All day today and tomorrow, students will be picketing First National stores on Route 9 and in Greenfield, urging them to stop stocking non-union lettuce and grapes.

Those who sympathize with the United Farm Workers should co-operate with the picketers and understandingly accept the sacrifice of lettuce and grapes with their meals.

Verse OM

A. "The word was HOT DOG; and we ate it."

"True religion hits the spot; come and get it while it's hot!" Sorry for the out and out plagiarism from the National Lampoon and Firesign Theatre's Don't Crush that Dwarf, Hand Me the Pliers, but both seem to work in the context of this editorial. What's that got to do with the price of prunes? one might say. (Explanation of relevancy of 'prune'--'Prune' satisfies the state of mental constipation which most of us suffer from--the cure for the "I don't give a shit!" syndrome. Why is "giving a shit" important? If you don't give a shit, mental constipation ensues, causing blockage of the sensory systems--which any good biologist can tell you, is a definite impairment to BASIC SURVIVAL. More on this in the "B" stanza.)

Well, the prune has to do with the mind deadening apparatus that strikes us, as noted above. However, lest the scientists (or the believers in rationalist thought) feel as though I've left them out in my previous editorials, let me explain myself right now...SCIENTISTS ARE THE PROGENITORS OF THE NEW RELIGION. Nothing original in the thought pattern, I'll admit that, but look, and let us float back to the 18th Century and the birth of Enlightenment, when scientists were running around like Pavlovian dogs trying to set up some system of the universe that would counteract the current (at that time) Church power center. And the scientists, who were supposed to be investigators--believers in investigation of "observable phenomena"--became true believers.

They became as dogmatic in their systems of thought as the Church did. What could not be observed couldn't be explained, and what couldn't be explained simply didn't exist. Not a search for truth, really. A power struggle. So, a lot of true scientists, like a lot of true religious people, bit the dust according to current dogma. Einstein had to wait a long time, and when he died he wasn't even sure he was right.

B. Proofs

"There is nothing to prove". A gasser of a statement, isn't it? But doesn't it omit all the science we've come across? Not necessarily. To use a very old and corny expression, the proof is in the pudding. Proofs are more involved in religious doctrines, when you get down to it. How do you prove the theory of relativity? You don't really prove it; you see it in operation. You see light. BUT...

Most of the time it gets easier to ignore observations. Although observations are a function of the eye, they are also a function of the other senses--including intuition and spirit. However, it's often more convenient to neglect fact and accept current dogma rather than checking it out. Checking out everything. And that's true religion--and true science. Until the Pavlovian dogma of the pseudo-scientist accepts and investigates that, and as soon as the religious freak begins feeling it all (optimizing resources, so to speak), then we'll be on the path to the absolute. And with 'nothing to prove'.

Jesus Freaks, Inc.

I know Jesus freaks. I have had long talks with these people. I know of the Bible prophesis that Josh McDowell and others have spoken of. But I believe that they forgot something. I'm not a Bible expert but I believe that God told us to "Occupy till I come." These people have forgotten this. They interpret the Bible's prophesies so as to say that the second coming of Christ is drawing near.

But I must remind them that even they cannot tell when that time will come. It may be. I am a Christian. I am not a Protestant. I am a Roman Catholic. Now I have to ignore what they say about this 'cause I haven't heard a word about what they say about the second coming. But I have come to my own conclusions about the subject...

First off, maybe Jesus Christ is coming. But even so, I act as though the saving of the world from the anti-Christ was up to me and I pray as though it were up to God. I feel that this is the way the Bible tells people to act. (Yes, I feel the Bible is the word of God, in case you're wondering.)

In history, many have felt that the second coming of Christ was to be at one time or another. He hasn't been here yet.

So I feel I have to take it for granted that he is not coming. Long before I became a Bircher, I studied Mc Dowell's way of thinking. It doesn't help anything. In my opinion, all this does is advocate religious neutralism. I'll get into that in a while.

The John Birch Society, through its members and staff, have researched this topic greatly. And it has been found to be a phony movement. That is because these people say that the communist takeover of the world is God's will (Death of a Nation by John A. Stormer). I can't see that. Besides. even if it is, remember the "Occupy 'Till I Come" I can't find where that is but this quote from Ezekiel 13:17 is close: "Son of man, I have made three a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth and give them warning from me."

This says that true Christians should warn the Naive about the conspiracy, if they have the knowledge. The John Birch Society has that knowledge to warn these people. The founder of the society, Robert Welch, believes that if Americans know the truth about the conspiracy to bring an anti-Christ to rule, that the spreading of the truth about this conspiracy can stop it. I agree wholeheartedly with Mr. Welch. This is why I am a Bircher, not a religious neutralist.

All religious neutralism does is to stifle any progress the John Birch Society is making toward exposing the criminals behind this conspiracy. That is, it diverts attention away from the real problem. So we all ought to take a look at the kind of people Billy Graham and Josh McDowell are. I believe them to be phonies and nothing else.

If any true Christian wants to do the RIGHT thing, he should join the John Birch Society, help us expose this conspiracy and stop it dead in its tracks.

What Is S.W.A.P.?

By ARAMINDA ATENCIO
and MICHAEL FLATTO

The purpose of S.W.A.P. (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) is to provide a forum for discussion of University problems at an off-campus setting, where issues pertaining to this campus are debated in order to attempt reforms and new solutions.

The S.W.A.P. Conferences in the past have introduced and dealt with such issues as B.D.I.C. (Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration), co-ed living, and the University's stand on liquor. These issues are now common-place and integral factors of University life, truly not issues any longer, but at one time they had to be structured from an idea, resolved, and accepted by the University. S.W.A.P. provided a breeding ground for the introduction and further programming of the basic ideas.

S.W.A.P. 's budget was one the most controversial to have been passed by the Student Senate last spring. Come find out why, October 1st at 6:00 p.m., in rooms 168-170 of the Campus Center.

Araminda Atencio and Michael Flatto are chairpersons of the S.W.A.P. Committee.

So Who's The Demagogue After All?

To The Editor:

I did not attend Mr. McDowell's lecture. Quite simply I was not able to. I was, however, interested in finding out what all the commotion was all about. I must now conclude that the Collegian was no help in illuminating the situation, or in my forming an objective opinion. Most specifically Wednesday's column by Reid Fishman was very disturbing, as what the author purports to be true of Mr. McDowell is also true of himself.

The definition of demagogue is as follows: tending to gain personal or partisan advantage by appealing to popular passions or prejudices by making spacious claims, promises or charges. As to the first part of this definition, I in no way find UMass prone to 'popular passions or prejudices' in favor of Christianity. Secondly, Mr. McDowell is accused of working from one anecdote to another with the insinuation "to make it perfectly clear, to borrow a phrase" at a complete lack of honesty on his part; and yet we are given no examples by which we may judge. He is accused of subjecting his audience to an "apparently first-hand knowledge" and yet we are given no examples by which to judge his knowledge of historical events or the validity of his historical reconstructions. He is accused of broad generalizations and toying with semantics and yet outside of two truncated phrases, which with the proper follow ups could, under certain circumstances, be considered valid, we are given no example by which to judge. It is intimated that, "as he presented himself as a man who was filled with hatred. . .with no solutions until Christ came along" he presented Christ as the solution of all conflicts when in fact another article in Tuesday's Collegian states him as saying "he now has an inner source of joy and not an absence of conflict".

Finally, he is accused of demagoguery and manipulation in face of an article wherein he is judged on a lack of solid information, which is a journalistic manipulation of the facts whatever they might be. Yet we are piously told that it is up to "each individual to weigh the evidence and reach a decision before. . .running out to follow an individual or movement".

Josh may very well be the demagogue that the article says that he is; however, it is a very dangerous thing to call someone a demagogue unless one is dedicated to a complete investigation of the truth.

John F. Donovan

You Can't Even Squat In Peace Anymore

To The Editor:

Last Tuesday, as I walked into the men's room on the CC concourse, what should meet my eyes, but one those innumerable "Josh" posters, blaringly demanding if I had the guts to seek the answer to true love in this junky world. I am used to poster after poster, pamphlet after pamphlet, and circular upon circular pushed, shoved, or other wise directed into my face, but for some reason, this piece of paper (placed neatly next to the prophylactic machine) seemed to break a dam of disgust in me that I was not immediately able to explain to myself. After all, the saturation campaign that has been going on with this guy for the past month has permeaded every other sanctuary a person has on this campus (dorm halls, classroom blackboards, newspapers, gigantic ban banners, etc.); why not take the next logical step and place the scripts of enlightenment in the only place a guy is forced to stand still for any length of time? Let the message really sink through.

But this is the last draw. If a person cannot relieve his or herself in relative privacy without the knowledge that someone is forceably trying to pursuade some mode of thought that you're simply not interested in, down your throat, then something is wrong. I've been taking this massive bombardment of "Josh" into my cranium the same way I'm forced to sit through endless Excedrin and Somonex commercials interspaced in four minute intervals through a good movie on TV, with waves of nausea. It would seem one only has to wait for the inevitable before one closes a stall door upon one self to sit contently on a toilet seat, only to find that they are face to face with a poster demanding to know whether you have the courage to find out if there can be maximum sex in this world-literally cramming the message up your anus.

As you read this, Josh may be long gone, but the bad taste he has left in my mouth won't be. I have enough on my mind without being flooded with Josh signs Big Brotherishly plastered on every door, wall, and empty space in UMass. To me, the whole purpose of his trip has been defeated by the propaganda techniques he uses to promote himself. The active interest that some people take in trying to achieve some sort of social awareness on the campus by the selling of various publications on the concourse is one thing, trying to peddle the word of Jesus is another.

Good riddance, Josh, Lord knows I've had enough of you.

Dennis Suman

More Than One Way

To The Editor:

I would like to congratulate Frederic C. Weiss and Matt Tackeff for their thoughtful editorials concerning Josh McDowell and company's Campus Crusade for Christ of last week. It is obviously personally rewarding for the people involved in a religious movement if they find meaning and happiness through their religion, whether they worship Jesus Christ, Guru Maharaji Ji, Hari Krishna, the Holy Spirit, or God.

However, I find it alarming when a Christian maintains that his-her way is THE ONLY WAY (unless of course you're willing to burn in hell forever) and regards you as a pathetic sheep gone astray from the holy fold. I also find it discouraging to see followers of Guru Maharaji Ji or Hari Krishna that are so into themselves and their own level of religious awareness that they cannot see anyone else, and wish only to meditate or chant themselves into oblivion.

This is NOT meant to be a putdown of anyone of the aforementioned religious persuasions. I just follow a different "religion"-I am concerned with increasing my self-awareness and sense of personal responsibility. I am concerned with helping others in this mutual venture I am concerned with both spiritual and political awareness. I do not believe in any "personified deity" as Matt Tackeff put it so well, but I do not believe I am a damned or immoral person because of this.

I guess what it comes down to is whether you put a deity of some sort at the top of your list, or you see humanity as the object of your moral striving without anyone in between. Either way is right for certain of us and wrong for others. And the beliefs are NOT mutually exclusive. I just hope that in the meantime we don't forget Humanity through blind faith. thoughtlessness, or refusing to come down to a practical level of experience.

Nobody's Laughing

To The Editor:

I am writing in response to the September 26, 1973 column by Reid Fishman entitled "Josh Is A Joke." My overall reaction was that, aside from not saying too much in your opinionated editorial, your opinions, unlike the information Josh McDowell passed on, were based on your own meager knowledge of the Bible and related studies.

As I began to read your comments, I found it hard to believe you attended the lecture, let alone listened to Josh, from the comments you made. You may have heard him but you certainly were not listening to him.

Point of disagreement number one: You refer to the phrase "archaeology has confirmed" as a generalization. It is not. Archaeology is the scientific study of the life and culture of ancient peoples. It produces documented evidence which falls outside the realm of Christianity; that is to say, it is not influenced by Christianity.

Point of disagreement number two: You stated that any of Josh's arguments "can not be soundly argued by (you) or any other non-authority on religion." Firstly, Josh presented factual, documented evidence which could be understood by ANYONE WHO WAS LISTENING (See Josh McDowell's book Evidence That Demands A Verdict for further proof and information). Secondly, Josh does not proclaim religion, but Jesus Christ.

Point of disagreement number three: Your words, "It is up to each individual to weigh the evidence and reach a decision before running out to follow an individual or a movement" echo Josh's and all Christians' sentiments exactly. That is precisely how anyone becomes a Christian, by deciding within his own heart that the evidence for Jesus Christ far outweighs the opinions against Him. Christianity is not something you shove down peoples' throats, it is something you share.

Really, Reid, Jesus does love you, but you should pay more attention to what He is saying to you and to everyone. If Josh is a joke, no one who has heard him is laughing.

I Meant It

To The Editor:

In regard to the picture on Wednesday's front page of the two employees sitting on their asses: although I didn't write the cutline, I took the picture with the intention of showing the lack of production of some of the Physical Plant Employees. It may not have been the Collegian's intent to imply laziness, but it was mine.

Steve Smith

Musical Tennis, Anyone?

To The Editor:

Before last Thursday I had meant to write a letter commenting on the new addition to UMass tennis, namely the new courts west of campus adjacent to the playing fields. I had wished to inform interested tennis enthusiasts that the dynaturf surface (which I can tell you does not come with green stamps) is easy underfoot and a delight to play on. But I was also going to warn those traditional tennis players who still think of the game as one played in quiet surrounding where concentration is enhanced that they should stay away from the new courts during the hours of 4-6 in the afternoon as that's when the University Band practices right next door. Serious tennis, during those hours, becomes a farce.

But after witnessing the Riggs-King match on television the other night I don't think my complaint holds much weight. I guess tennis is supposed to be played in a Roman carnival atmosphere with bands and dancing pom-pom girls and all the gigglings and gaggling of 30,000 restless spectators. Tennis has sure come of age and with a vengeance.

Still, if you have any respect for your own game, avoid the new campus courts at the hours suggested. You won't even be able to tell your opponent what the score is over the din much less think about shot-making. And besides, the selection of tunes that the band plays is enough to gag a maggot.

Wormy Nuts

To The Editor:

While apologizing to my stomach for subjecting it to the incredibly starchy dinner fare at the Worcester D.C. Basic Foods room this evening, I discovered the mixed nuts on which I had been munching to contain-are you ready?-WORMS. Nice, white, wiggly ones, which blended in quite well with the peanuts and sunflower seeds. So well in fact, that I consumed a considerable amount of nuts before noting their presence. Needless to say, I was psychologically and gastronomically appalled, and was too busy attempting to disgorge the wormy mess to fill out a Comment Card or show the squirmy culprits to the meal ticket taker.

Mr. Stoneham certainly deserves something for his latest attempt to provide Basic Foods patrons with undisputably fresh meat. Why, this beats the buckwheat frisbees generally served with syrup at breakfast, the remarkably cohesive rice (they paste it together so the grains won't fall off our little forks), the consistently undercooked vegetables, the limp, dingy lettuce, the cream pies so ancient they rot while you watch, and the various nondescript pig-slop casseroles. In recognition of this latest step in his apparently unwavering quest for the Zenith in Culinary Repulsiveness, I suggest that Mr. Stoneham be forced (less we sic the worms on him) to eat fifteen meals a week at a UMass Dining commons, starch, wormy nuts, and all. I for one would love to watch him try to choke it down.

Persecuted Minorities, Not Terrorists

To The Editor:

In reply to Mr. L. Cohen's letter of Sept. 25, I would like to state that Palestinians are not "made up of people like the terrorists, but they are people who live either as a persecuted third class minority in Israel or under military ruled occupied Gaza and the West Bank of the Jordan or may be as refugees for 25 years in refugee camps in neighboring Arab States, waiting for the racist government in Israel to allow them to return to their homes and confiscated properties.

Palestinians in Israel and in occupied territories are treated to probably the most vicious crimes and atrocities of modern history. Such atrocities and crimes have been condemned and documented by several international delegations and committees including the Israeli League for Human and Civil Rights. Let us consider some of Israel's crimes against Palestinians:

1. Complete deliberate and systematic destruction of the Palesinian towns of Imwas, Yalu and Beit Nuba by Israeli troops in 1967.

2. Aruthles eviction and displacement of over 500,000 Palestinians from their homes in Gaza and the West bank since 1967 to facilitate the efficient work of the bulldozers.

3. Mass arrests and collective punishment, prisoners' torture using the most crude and inhuman methods of interrogation, and concentration camps erected in Abu Zneimeh, Nakhl, and Quessima. Concentration camps in the Sinai desert inhumanely house 25,000 women, men and children.

Let us not talk about the Israeli Phantoms bombing an elementery school in Bahr Al-Bakar and the Steel Factory of Abu Zaabal, both just outside of Cairo and killing all innocent kids and workers.

Let us not mention the shooting down of a Lybian Airliner by Israeli jets, killing over 100 innocent passengers.

And let us not discuss Moshe Dayan engineered raids over Beirut and the capitals of Europe to assassinate Palestinian intelectuals who, during the past year, have become the victims of Israel's Mossad terrorist team.

Let us face it, Mr. Cohen: as long as the Palestinian people are denied their human and civil rights by Israel, the rights which have been recognized in Articles 1 and 55 of the U.N. charter, the people of Israel under the militant racist regime will have to suffer.

Riggs Made Tennis A Household Word

To The Editor:

I'm writing in response to Margie Combs' article of Sept. 26 concerning the seriousness of athletics and the disgrace of Bobby Riggs toward these hard working athletes. I totally disagree with her attitude about Riggs. She says that his reasons for playing "have nothing to do with the betterment of athletics, but colored with egotism, human oppression, and dollar signs." I think that there is nothing more wrong than the first part of this statement. Think about it; do you think that even five years ago a tennis match could dominate prime time TV on a week day: NO WAY! Bobby Riggs has done more for the promotion of tennis than anyone ever in the history of the game. He has almost single-handedly vaulted tennis from a nothing sport you went to "the club" to play to a point where tennis is now a household word. Its popularity has grown so much that a World Team Tennis League has been initiated. You may not agree with him or his methods, but don't knock the man's results.

And as for what she says about Riggs disgracing athletics, I must disagree again. An as athlete myself (UMass Baseball), I realize that physical conditioning is a big factor. But saying that he ridicules dedicated, loyal athletes is absurd. How many people 55-years-old do you know who are in as good condition as he is? He may not do things exactly by the book, but that's his whole point. He's a great showman and he used every possible means of making this match the biggest thing in tennis history.

In my opinion as a tennis fan, he has done a tremendous favor for tennis and should be congratulated for it.

Coping With Ma Bell

To The Editor:

Everyone should know by this time that UMass has it's problems. But there is still another which hasn't been brought up this semester. It is known to some people as the New England Telephone Company. To me, and others like me, it carries a different title. Here is my story:

Last semester, my roommate, Barbara, and I rang up a healthy phone bill. We estimated it at $40.00. During the summer, I received a bill for $.29. I promptly paid it. One month later, I received an angry letter from the phone company stating that they had not received our payment of $45.37, and if it was not paid in 7 days, action would be taken. Having never received a bill for this amount, I was upset. I called my roommate, and she agreed to pay the amount. She now has the cancelled check, so everything should be alright.

Last week, she and I again received a letter from the phone company. Since we are rooming with other girls this semester, the letter said that unless they received $45.37, both of our phones would be cut off. Barbara called the office in Northampton, explained the situation, and was told that there was a mix-up in the accounting department, but everything was worked out.

Our phone was disconnected Tuesday night. Barbara's phone was disconnected. Why do we have to put up with this shit? We called the office in Northampton around 7:00 p.m. We were told that nothing could be done until 8:30 the next morning.

Is there anyone out there in this fucked up world that would know what kind of action we could take? I realize that messing with the phone company is serious business, but isn't there something we, as students, can do? There are undoubtedly other students in the same predicament.

It seems, as time slowly passes here at the University, that a return to the 60's is definitely in order, as proposed by another student last week. What say you?

So What?

To The Editor:

In regard to your recent weather report: "All things considered, I'd rather be here than Philadelphia." I would like to take strong exception to the aspersions it casts on the character of this city. Philadelphia is a cosmopolitan city with a variety of rich opportunities, besides those urban mainstays of muggings, smog and slums. It's filthy and deteriorated, but no place is perfect! I would also like to dispel the rumor that the above quote is the epitaph of W. C. Fields, its a good rumor but just not true!

Military Security?

To The Editor:

In response to Menachim Rosenberger's letter, I feel the analogy between Israel and Viet Nam still holds in the sense that the Palestineans have as much right to ther lands and political rights as the Jews and that such rights are being denied by military means that would not exist were it not for American military aid.

In response to Mr. Cohen's letter, I maintain that so long as the government of Israel measures it's security by shooting down unarmed civilian aircraft, or by high-jacking such aircraft, I must insist that such a government is quite militeristic.

When the Israeli government insists that the Palistineans have recourse by exercising their political rights in Jordan and Golda Meir calls the birth rate of the Palestineans inside Israel and the occupied territories a real threat to the State of Israel, I must point out that apparently Israel is rapidly approaching the level of the "Republic of South Africa. That government insists that Black Africans have their "rights of self-determination" secured by migrating to "autonomous tribal areas". Do you know how the government of South Africa rationalizes it's treatment of Blacks to it's "civilized" white citizens Mr. Cohen? In one word: SECURITY!!

I believe that the failure of any international power to intervene and prevent the deaths of six million Jews is attributable to the simple fact that the nations of the world were too busy pursuing the same policy then that the United States, Israel, and the Soviet Union are pursuing now, namely, a nationalistic balance of power based upon the illusion of military security. That experiment in national security resulted in World War II.

At no point in my earlier letter did I refer to the Palesineans as "innocent" or without fault, nor did I appeal to the Israeli's to commit "national suicide". I support the existance of the State of Israel but I oppose it's social and foreign policies. I am appealing to an end of innocense, especially in the context of "security". I respect "security" as much as I respect "law and order", Mr. Cohen and Mr. Rosenberger and I think they both deserve the same kind of cautious treatment.

Student Fight Forces Dorchester H.S. Closing

BOSTON (AP)-A rock and stick fight between groups of black and white students Thursday forced the closing of Dorchester High School for two days. Officials attributed the violence to "reciprocal fear."

Seven persons were treated at Carney Hospital, and one was held for observation of head injuries. A school nurse treated six others.

Two 16-year-olds were arrested on charges of being disorderly persons. Officials confiscated at least 250 baseball bats, clubs, boards and sticks.

The disorder erupted after about 200 black students gathered in front of the school, and 200 whites congregated on the school athletic field, school officials said.

The rest of the high school's 1,600 students had gone to morning classes when a false fire alarm sent then pouring out of the building. Then racial fighting broke out.

Afterward, about 100 blacks moved into the school, officials said, and smashed windows and a door. They were quickly removed by police. Damage was estimated at $1,000.

Tension between black and white students caused the confrontation, said William Harrison, associate school superintendent. " 'Reciprocal fear' is a good way to put it."

At a meeting of the 120-member faculty after the closing, Harrison said, "Our No. 1 priority must be to mend broken bridges and bring the youngsters together."

Tension had been building since a fight between two non-students last week, according to Michael McNally, a teacher who handles security for the school. On Wednesday, gangs of youths broke several windows in nearby Codman Square.

In last week's incident, a white member of the Maoist-oriented Progressive Labor Party fought a black member of the militant De Mau Mau group, McNally said.

He said the fight developed over a leaflet the white was passing out.

Insurance Head For Tax Relief Bill

BOSTON (AP)-No new life insurance companies will be chartered in Massachusetts unless the companies win tax relief, an industry spokesman said Thursday.

John .V. Sullivan, a vice president of the John Hancock Mutual Insurance Company, spoke for a compromise tax relief bill now pending before the House Ways and Means Committee. It is expected to be released for a floor vote within the next few weeks.

Sullivan said he didn't think any new domestic life company would be launched in the state under the existing tax structure. The pending bill involves a sliding scale income tax that over a five-year period would reduce taxes for the insurance companies by approximately $43 million.

Seven companies are presently embroiled in the tax fight that has been escalating since a surtax was first imposed on the domestic companies in 1969. Two years later, a one per cent gross income tax was added. The affected companies are due to pay $19 million in state taxes this year.

Because of retaliatory tax policies in other states, the domestic pay a higher state tax than outside companies doing business in Massachusetts.

Life companies chartered in other states presently pay a 2 per cent premium tax on Massachusetts business. Some tax experts consider this to be the same as a sales tax, a concept the insurance industry rejects.

Domestic companies pay a 3.2 per cent premium tax plus the gross income tax. The proposed bill would reduce the premium tax to 2 per cent and establish a net income tax on earnings in Massachusetts that would start at 15.5 per cent for three of the companies, slightly less for the others, and drop down to 8 per cent after five years.

The proponents have stated that because of growth factors in the industry, there would be no net loss of revenue to the state.

Mrs. Ripley Miller, pilot of a commercial Beechcraft plane carrying cancelled checks from Hartford to Boston, the twin-engine plane lost contact while trying to land in fog at Logan Airport, Mrs. Miller, mother of three was from Wilmington, Mass.

Logan Crash Victim's Body Found

BOSTON (AP)-The body of the woman pilot, missing since her plane crashed last weekend in Boston Harbor while approaching Logan Airport was found yesterday afternoon.

The body of Mrs. Ripley Miller, 36, of Wilmington, was located by State Police scuba divers and members of a volunteer diving team about 3:30 p.m. after electronic equipment aboard the Port authority fire-boat "Howard Fitzpatrick" discovered a piece of the plane's wreckage.

Officials said the wreckage was found in about 40 feet of water in the main shipping channel leading into the harbor and had settled about 2,500 feet from the end of runway 4R, where Mrs. Miller was headed Sunday night.

Airport officials said Mrs. Miller's plane was believed to have crashed about 1,200 feet from the runway's end.

Airport officials said that she had been in touch with traffic controllers, when they said her voice ceased and the plane disappeared from radar.

Her crash was at the same runway at which a Delta airliner crashed July 31, killing 88 persons.

Mrs. Miller, a commercial pilot, was one of her regular flights for Corporate Air, Inc., of Hartford, transporting cancelled checks to Boston banks.

Parking Rules Go Into Effect Oct. 9

Full enforcement of all parking regulations at UMass will begin Tuesday, Oct. 9, at 7 a.m.

Exempted will be peripheral lots 11, 12, and 13 (near the football stadium, Fraternity-Sorority Park, and the baseball field) where cars now bearing new parking decals may legally park until Tuesday, Oct. 23, when the second cycle of parking requests has been processed.

Until Oct. 9, vehicles may park in their newly assigned lots or in lots to which last year's stickers entitle them, After that date, vehicles may park only according to lot number on new parking decals. All temporary parking decals will have their time limits extended to Oct. 9, according to H.J. Littlefield, Jr., UMass director of planning.

The UMass Parking and Transportation Office this week completed processing about 12,000 applications for parking registration. "We feel the first-come, first served-commitment to any member of the University community has been met," said Director Littlefield.

He explained that by Oct. 4 all those who have requested parking assignments should have received either their decals or letters informing them that their first, second, and third lot choices were filled by the time their applications were needed. This rejection letter will give information on lots remaining open, and information on campus bus service from these lots to various points on campus. Complete on-campus bus schedules will be distributed next week.

"Modifications and improvements to the parking and transportation system (including possible resumption of bus service to South Deerfield and Belchertown) await observations of the system in full operation, and input from the constituent campus groups through their representatives on the newly constituted Parking and Transportation Council," according to Mr. Littlefield. The Council will accept comments from individual members of the campus community.

Guru Charnanand Comes To Boston

Mahatma Guru Charnanand, a close disciple of Guru Maharaj Ji, the fifteen year old Perfect Master, will be in Boston this week. He will be giving Knowledge, the intense meditative experience of inner light, music, vibration and nectar, which the Maharaj Ji reveals through his mahatmas.

A Hatha Yoga master in his own right, Guru Charanand has devoted the last twenty years of his life to spreading the Maharaj Ji's Knowledge.

All spiritually oriented members of the UMass Community are encouraged to attend the mahatmas programs on the 25 and 26 of Sept., and his Knowledge sessions on September 27 and 28.

Coach Charges Athletic Bias

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) - A former Princeton University assistant football coach has charged that the coaching staff was able to influence the university's admissions process and secure the acceptance of top high school athletic prospects.

John T. Somerville,an assistant coach to former Tiger mentor Joey L. "Jake" McCandless, claimed that the football staff used a "trade-off" system during the 1971-72 school year to obtain the admissions of athletes.

In a coyrighted story in the student newspaper The Daily Princetonian, Somerville said that the football coaching staff provided the Office of Admissions with a list of applications that possessed superior football talent.

"The fact was," Somerville reportedly said, "that admissions went pretty much the same way the list did."

Specifically, Somerville alleged that the admissions office informed the coaches in advance regarding acceptances and rejections of applicants.

The coaches then revised their list to put the names of their best prospects ahead of students who had already tentatively been accepted.

According to Somerville, "Some kids who were academically shakey were put high on the list. Good ones. . .were put low since we thought they'd get in anyway."

The net result, said Somerville, was that "some who should have been admitted weren't."

Princeton's Director of Admissions Timothy C. Callard said that coaches could upgrade one candidate and downgrade another in order to seek a reevaluation of a particular applicant.

But he emphasized that "the admissions office judges each case on its own merit" and "ultimately makes the final decision."

Callard was not director of admissions during the time concerned in Somerville's allegations.

The article reported that Somerville first became aware of the alleged "trade-off" when he was asked by McCandless to drop a player to a lower spot on the list in favor of a candidate McCandless preferred.

When he refused to comply with the request, Somerville said that in effect he was asked "who are you to buck the system?"

McCandless, who left as Princeton head coach in January citing disagreements with the admissions office, denied the Somerville charges when reached in his New York office. "I have not seen the story, but I can tell you that I have never, nor did any member of my staff, ever see an admissions folder in my 15 years at Princeton," McCandless said.

He refused to comment on the specific allegation that he had asked Somerville to forfeit one player in favor of another, but he did say that "that sort of thing is against my principles."

If Somerville's allegations are true, then Princeton apparently violated a 1954 Ivy League presidents' policy agreement stipulating that applicants to member schools be judged on scholastic criteria alone.

That stipulation was revised last year after several schools admitted to judging students on grounds other than academics.

According to Callard, admissions policies are improved now. In regard to the alleged "trade-off," Callard said that the new guidelines would put all Ivy schools "in a stronger position to prevent this kind of activity."

Somerville joined the Princeton coaching staff in 1971 after serving with football Coach Woody Hayes at Ohio State University. Somerville also was working on his doctorate degree in physical education during that time at Ohio State.

After leaving the Princeton staff in May 1972 when his contract expired, Somervllle assumed a position with The Way, Inc., in New Knoxville, Ohio, a church-related rehabilitation and prison reform organization.

Somerville could not be reached for further comment on The Daily Princetonian story.

F. Lee Bailey Denies Gov't. Fraud Charges

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP)-Boston criminal attorney F. Lee Bailey, conducting his own defense, yesterday attacked the government's allegation he was an active participant in Glenn W. Turner's business empire.

Bailey won an admission from government witness Jimmie Earl James of Greenville, N.C., a former vice president of Turner's Koscot Interplanetary Inc., that he never heard the famed defense attorney issue any orders in connection with operations of the pyramid sales cosmetics firm.

Bailey, Turner and seven Turner associates are on trial on federal mail fraud charges in connection with the operation of Koscot and Dare to be Great Inc., a motivational businesses.

Under cross examination by Bailey, James said the only encounters he ever had with Bailey at Koscot headquarters in Orland,Fla., were casual greetings in corridors.

"Did I give you any orders at any time," Bailey asked.

"No sir," James replied.

The government contends Bailey was active in the operation of Turner businesses, but Bailey says his only role was to attempt to straighten out Turner's legal problems.

Turner, Bailey and the other defendants are accused of scheming to defraud numerous persons and induce them to buy distributorships in Turner's cosmetics and motivational firms.

Action Due On Local Bus Aid

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis W. Sargent is considering a measure enacted by the Senate Thursday that would authorize cities and towns to subsidize local bus service.

The effect of the measure, if signed into law, would be immediately felt in Worcester, where bus company employes have been on strike.

The bus company said before the strike that it might be forced out of business without some financial aid.

Under the measure, designed to aid mass transportation services outside the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority district, the state would pick up half the subsidy.

The bill limits assistance to one year and up to $600,000 in aid.

Sargent Speaks On Technology

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Thursday that modern computer technology has given government "an unprecedented means of power over the lives of its citizens."

In a speech at the Urban Technology Conference at the John B. Hynes Auditorium, Sargent said the computer "allows a government to interfere with the private lives of individuals, even when there is no legitimate social need."

Citing Massachusetts' recent refusal to join the National Crime Information Center, Sargent said that while this state's citizens are guarded against involvement in the federal computer program, "more than 200 million additional individuals still stand unprotected from the pitfalls of uncontrolled technology."

Sargent said the efficiency of technology must yield to individual privacy when the two are in "unresolvable conflict."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Gemini is perhaps the most active, often the funniest, other times the most distraught. Gemini loves language and teaching and is fascinated by the learning process. Gemini has a sensitive "funny bone" and laughter is almost second nature. Gemini indeed can lead a double life and more twins and left-handed persons are apt to be born under this puzzling, fascinating zodiacal sign.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You get facts of life about money, practical issues, purchases and sales. One close to you expresses apprehension. This is apt to concern security. Key is to speak frankly. The truth will hurt only momentarily.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Lie low. Don't push or insist. Be analytical. Permit mate, partner to lead. Listen and observe. Plan. Your time comes in near future. For now, play waiting game. Gemini, Virgo persons play significant roles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent is on how you make amends for slights to family members. Thoughts, ideas, concepts should be examined in light of practicality. Find utilitarian purpose for actions. Going too far, too soon might cost more than you can afford.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Perceive. See between the lines. Stop rationalizing. The facts can be your friends. Know it and stop running. Know that being truthful with yourself is a way to stop being a loser. Within yourself are contained the stop-and-go signals of your life. Know it!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may feel blocked, cut off at the pass. But you also are gathering advocates. You will be in a position to deal from strength. You find now that those in authority look at you with new eyes. You've made an impression!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish rather than initiate project. Spread influence. Look beyond the immediate. Be aware of potential. Aries, Libra persons could figure prominently. Forces tend to be scattered. Take one step at a time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Select what you want, need. You are likely now to get what you seek. Some concepts may be discarded. You will be thinking in a more independent manner. Leo, Aquarius may be involved. Highlight feeling, creative urge.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You teach and learn. You take unorthodox course. Aquarius, Leo persons are in picture. You make significant gains by taking initiative. Older family member could complain of digestive ailment. In all, however, the news is excellent.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accept special invitation. Make concession to close relative. Be willing to chuckle at your own foibles. Forces tend to be scattered. You are here and there and some persons calim you are a dynamo.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friend could provide information that leads to solid profit. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio are likely to be in picture. Some wishes will be fulfilled. You may be in mood to celebrate. Remember you must face yourself in morning.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Watch weight. Remember recent resolution. Prestige could be on the line. Co-operate in civic project. Gemini, Virgo persons do plenty of talking, explaining. Key now is to analyze. Maintain balance, humor. No panic!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Low-key approach proves most constructive. Don't attempt to force issues. Contact with persons who travel and teach are indicated. Family member makes significant concession. Be a gracious "winner."

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, subtle at times but when crisis moment occurs you are direct, aggressive and creative. You draw to you persons born under Leo and Aquarius. In December, there could be move, domestic adjustment. You are an original thinker and many persons find it fascinating to listen to your ideas, views. You are susceptible to flattery. You also are warm, romantic and impulsive.

Booters At Maine: Open Yan Con Slate

The UMass soccer team opens its Yankee Conference season tomorrow by travelling to Orono to take on the University of Maine.

The Minutemen will be making the trip with one regular season game under their belts; a 5-3 thrashing of BC on Tuesday.

Maine has already opened their conference schedule, as they tied BU 2-2 last Saturday.

UMass coach Al Rufe said, "The game has to be rated a toss-up. Maine has some good individual performers and came up with a fine team effort in tying BU."

According to scouting reports, Maine's strongest point is the play of their front line. Their attackers are reputed to work well together, pass often, and shoot any time they get near the goal.

The Maine defense is aggressive and, at times, very physical. They play a brand of kick-and-run soccer and the fullbacks have very long, accurate clearing kicks.

The Minutemen are coming off a strong BC game. After muddling through the opening period with numerous mistakes, the UMass booters made some adjustments at halftime and played the rest of the game like a more closely-knit unit.

Starting fullback Bob Merrill is listed as questionable after sustaining a leg injury in Tuesday's game. If he is not ready, Dean Longu will start in his spot. The other fullbacks will be co-captain Curt Syer, Gary McKenna, and Dan Ouellette.

The rest of the lineup will include the same players who saw most of the action in the BC game. Tom Coburn, hero of Tuesday's game, arrived late and did not start against BC but will tomorrow in place of Charlie Palano. Coburn's linemates will be Brian McKenney and Ken Banda.

Co-captain Mark Tyma, who played superlative defense against BC will anchor the halfback line. Mike Nugent and Jim Vollinger will flank Tyma to create a formidable midfield defense.

The goaltending duties will be handled by Carl Vercollone, who gave up three tainted goals to BC but otherwise was not severely tested.

KICKING IT AROUND-The Minutemen defeated Westfield State in a scrimmage yesterday, 2-1. Coach Rufe started the second stringers and everyone got to play. Paul Pelloquin played the entire game in the goal prompting Rufe to say, "I know I have two excellent goaltenders and won't hesitate to use either of them in any situation."

NL East

As the paper went out to press the Pittsburgh Pirates and Philadelphia Phillies were tied 2-2 after eleven innings in a key National League East clash last night. A Pirate loss would drop them a full game behind the league-lending New York Mets, while a victory would vault them into a tie for the division lead.

STAR OF INTRAMURAL TRACK AND FIELD MEET - Melvin Cobb of John Adams House clears 6 ft. as he wins the high jump competition. Cobb also won the 120 yd. low hurdles and ran a leg on the Buckeyes' winning 440 yd. relay team as he led his club to the overall championship in the men's division.

I-M Track: Qualified Success

By BOB KAGAN

Final competition for the first Intramural Track and Field Meet was held on Wednesday, September 26, and all indications suggest that the event was a "qualified success."

The campus team champions are the Buckeyes in the men's division, and the Van Meter Vikings on the Women's side.

The Vikings, of Van Meter South, placed first largely due to the efforts of Sue Grassonovitz-high jump (3 ft. 6 in.), Joanne Scanlon-100 yd. dash (14.6 seconds), and the second place finish of the 440 yd. relay team.

Participating as an independent entry, the Buckeyes barely defeated Kappa Sigma for the men's title. The hero for the Buckeyes, and the star of the meet, was Melvin Cobb of John Adams House. Cobb individually won two events-120 yd. low hurdles and also the high jump, when he cleared 6 ft. on his third attempt at that height. The Buckeyes and Cobb also ran away with first place in the 440 yd. relay race.

Victors in several other individual competitions were: Debbie Kirchmer of the Monuments and George Washington House as she heaved the shot put 25 ft. 3-1/4 in., Barry Dancewitz of Kapp Sigma, hurled the shot put 46 ft. 3-1/2 in. to win that event for the men, Anthony Lupi of Johnson House ran the 100 yd. dash in 11.1 seconds, Eric Ruth ran a sub-five minute mile, and Gary Gladu of the Stouts and Dickinson House pulled an upset by defeating Rich Herman of Kappa Sigma in the discus throw. With only his second and final throw remaining, Gladu, who had not touched a discus in two years, was in second place behind Herman. He must have had his Gatorade though, for he unleashed a throw of 129.8 in., which was long enough to beat out second-place Herman by sixteen inches.

Peter Graham, of the Intramural Office, was understandably pleased with the amount of participants and spectators who attend the meet. He is quite sure that this event will become an integral part of the UMass intramural program in future years.

Ice Hopefuls

Ex-UMass goaltender P. J. Flaherty has been sent by the Boston Bruins to their farm club in Dayton, thus ending any hopes the South Boston native had of playing in his hometown.

Pat Keenan has apparently decided to go with the Cape Cod Cubs of the North American League, although there is still a small chance he'll go to Dayton too. He'll have to decide by the weekend, as both the Cubs and Dayton open training Monday.

Don Riley was sent by the California Golden Seals to their Southern League affiliate in te.

John Kiah starts a two-week tryout stint with the Springfield Kings on tomorrow, and the Kings have guaranteed him at least a two-week look. However, the Kings organization is strong in goal and Kiah is going to have a difficult time breaking in. He could be headed for the Southern League too.

Ouellette Confident As JV Booters Open

By BOB HIGGINS

It wasn't easy, but junior varsity soccer coach Dave Ouellette has finally cut his team down from the 100 who first tried out to a more workable 30.

Ouellette, a 1973 graduate of UMass and a member of the All-New England team for two years, has had little time to prepare his team for today's opener with Holyoke Community College. He made his final cut Tuesday night, giving him only two days to work with his final foster.

Still, he feels he has a very good team, and said he has been impressed by many players. Two who have impressed him are his goalies, Mark Hanks and Buddy Butler. Each will play a half in today's game.

Coach Ouellette is dressing a lot of linemen for today's game. Among them are Al Johnson, starting left-winger with a very hard shot, Jim Fitzgerald, one of the few sophomores on the team, Jake Williams, John Sidoropolous, Tony Bilodeau, Tom Welch, and Jim Katowski.

The halfbacks will be Bill Rose, Jeff Thompson, Bill Quinn, and Gary Peck. Rounding out the starting lines, at fullback will be Steve Malcany, Dexter Bellose, Rich Deck, Frank Zelzaaro, Steve Tennelli, and Steve Gramaline.

The coach feels that Springfield, UConn, Amherst, and Holyoke will be the toughest opponents. However, he also seems very confident of his own team. Concerning today's game, he stated rather matter-of-factly, "We'll win."

We'll find out today starting at 3:00.

Minutemen Tangle With Ivy

By BILL BALLOU

Fond memories of last year's 28-19 UMass win over Harvard can keep you company throughout the long drive to Cambridge, but memories are all that are left from 1972. Any resemblance between these teams and last year's versions is purely coincidental.

Harvard has lost an incredible 32 lettermen off last year's 4-4-1 team while UMass has lost 16 lettermen.

Crimson coach Joe Restic has been faced with a major rebuilding job almost everywhere, and he's been hardest hit in the offensive backfield, where he lost four starters.

Accordingly, Restic has turned the offense into a ball-control type, relying on short passes and rushing. The man most likely to quarterback the Crimson is senior Jim Stoeckel, who'll be remembered as the man who threw a 59 yard touchdown pass to John Hagety in last year's game.

Stoeckel's an excellent quarterback who runs the option well and also handles the punting.

Behind him is junior Milt Holt, who is known as a strong runner and could see action as a halfback throughout the season.

The Harvard strength, though, seems to be on defense. UMass coach Dick MacPherson rates them as quite solid on defense thanks to a slew of good athletes. "We won't be able to break the big play on them," MacPherson says.

The most dangerous man on the Harvard defense will most likely turn out to be big defensive end Mitch Berger, who, at 6' 4" and 235 pounds, could wind up spending a lot of time in the UMass backfield. Berger missed almost all of last year with an injured knee, which had been operated on during the season, but he had a great sophomore year, during which he gained All-Ivy homers.

This is Harvard's first game of the regular season, although last week they scrimmaged Brown, so they may not be sharp. But, the Minutemen can't be too sure of what to expect.

The Minutemen have some aches and pains going into tomorrow's game, and will be missing Jerry Mondalto (knee) and Dave Yushinsky (kidney problem).

Peil Pennington's leg is still bothering him some, but it isn't expected to interfere with his play too much. The Wolfe Bros. Bob and Bill, are both question marks right now as well as Doug Adgurson.

Replacing Yushinsky at offensive tackle will be big Brad Calnan, a 6'6", 240 pound junior who has waited a while for his chance.

And changing positions will be David St. Onge, who has been playing middle linebacker and will shift to fullback for tomorrow's game. He will start.

Taking his place will be Mike McNiff, who along with Bill Noner and Dennis Kiernan will handle the backer-up chores.

St. Onge played on the defensive line last season, so he's seen the game from just about every angle.

Hopefully he'll add some punch to a so far weak running game, but it would still seem fairly certain that a great deal of the UMass offense will have to rest with the passing attack.

UMass, of course, has three games under its belt, while the Crimson have yet to play. For this reason the Boston papers are building up the Minutemen as favorites.

However, MacPherson and the rest of his coaches don't rate the three games as being very significant and expect a difficult time with Harvard. MacPherson expects it to be a "very good football game."

Harvard leads the series 6-3-1 with their most recent win coming in 1964.

Game time at Harvard Stadium is 1:30 p.m.

The action is rugged in women's field hockey and the UMass women proved equal to the task at hand by defeating Keene State 3-0 in their opener.

Women Stickers Topple Keene

By BETH O'BRIEN

In yesterday's late afternoon dusk, before a sideline-full of fans, the U. Mass field hockey team got their season off to an encouraging start with an impressive 3-0 shutout over an aggressive Keene State team. The junior varsity showed plenty of scoring punch and fine team play as they ousted their J.V. opponent 5-0.

The first half of the late-starting varsity contest consisted of a lot of back and forth play, with UMass having a decided edge in skill. Wendy Alpaugh broke the scoring ice with one of her usually fine, hard shots from her inner position which found the corner of the net. But Keene's defense toughened and though UMass had some good scoring opportunities, the half ended with no further scoring.

In the second half, UMass turned on their scoring plays and came up with two beauties. The first belonged to left inner Elaine Senosk; a deceptively hard push shot that had the goalie baffled.

The second score was a drive from wing Linda Lambdin that settled in the far corner of the net.

UMass held the edge in play again during the second half, testing the goalie time and again.

The UMass defense wasn't as severely tested as they undoubtedly will be in future games, but for all their relative inexperience, they did exceptionally well. Coach Farr was especially pleased with their play, and that of veteran goalie Nancy Barr who expertly handled the few tough shots she faced.

Coach Farr commented after it was over, "It went very well for the first game, I was very pleased. Our stickwork needs a little work, though." About her players, "I was impressed with Wendy (Alpaugh)...we always are. Kathe Germann had an especially good game at right halfback and Nancy Barr (goalie) ahd some nice stops."

Mt. Holyoke is their next regularly scheduled game, on Monday, Oct. 1, and with Holyoke's recent acquisition of some Philadelphia players, they should be tough.

The UMass Junior Varsity completely dominated play over Keene State's J.V., coming out on top, 5-0. Two goals in the first half, the first by right inner Donna Peterson an then by Donna O'Neil set the pace of the game. Keene hardly ever saw the UMass striking circle as the home team relentlessly peppered the Keene goalie.

Trish McCarthy scored the third and fourth goals as she replaced Donna Peterson at right inner. Martha Myer rounded out the scoring with the fifth and final goal. Coach Farr was especially pleased with the depth and scoring punch of her J.V.'s, a team with a wealth of talent for future varsity squads.

Al Rufe: Versatility - Plus

Remember that nasty athletic fee; that extra assessment that comes through on your bill every semester; that has had almost everybody bitching for the last few years? Did you ever wonder who handled all your hardearned money after it got channelled into the Boyden machine?

Well, believe it or not, all that responsibility falls on one man, the Financial Manager of Athletics, Al Rufe.

It is Rufe's duty to handle all financial matters within the department. He controls all monetary transactions, prepares the budget (subject to the approval of the Athletic Department), purchases all equipment, handles all travel arrangements, and oversees the payroll.

All that is a lot of responsibility for any one man to handle. So, instead of making things easier for the man, the Athletic Department, decided to add to his duties by naming him varsity soccer coach.

Rufe was named head soccer mentor late in the summer after it was discovered that last year's coach, Gerry Redmond had also been an instructor in the physical education department and his salary was paid from physical education funds. By the time the Athletic Department discovered that Redmond would no longer be able to coach soccer their budget had already been prepared and contained no money with which to pay a soccer mentor.

Being in such a bind, the Athletic Department looked to its own ranks in an effort to find someone to take over the soccer coaching duties. Although a number of applications were received, the Athletic Department decided to give Rufe the double duty.

Rufe, then, in effect, took the job on a strictly voluntary basis. He has received, and will, to my knowledge, receive no raise or extra pay of any kind even though he is one man doing the job of two.

In these days of greed and desire for monetary reward it is somewhat remarkable to find such a selfless individual willing to sacrifice himself to a position that demands so much time and yields only self satisfaction.

Frank McInerney, head of the Athletic Department described Rufe as "a dedicated individual." The lights are often on in his office until late at night while he completes his duties as financial manager, which he must put aside during the day in order to handle his soccer team.

Some of Rufe's duties have been passed on to others. He is no longer the official travel secretary, nor does he still coordinate the employees working at football games (ushers, ticket takers, program sellers, etc.).

When asked about the overbearing work load he carries, Rufe could only reply, "Sure, I can handle it. I'm single and that means I have lots of time."

Rufe is primarily a businessman. His MBA from BC attests to that. But coaching soccer is not new to him, either. He was head coach at BC for a year while attending grad school there.

One year of experience does not necessarily make a good coach, especially at BC where the sport is looked upon like the plague.

So the jury is still out on Rufe as a soccer coach. It will not be until the end of this season that we find out how the noble experiment worked.

Confident Harriers Open At BC

By SCOTT HAYES

The UMass Cross Country team, defending Yankee Conference champions, opens its season tomorrow against Boston College in an away contest.

The harriers aren't expecting any problems from the BC team, whom they beat 19-44 last season. Cross Country coach Ken O'Brien referred to Firday's foes as "not really strong" and stated that they lack depth. UMass will be running with the results of yesterday's Harvard-Northeastern meet in mind. Northeastern was ranked number one in the pre-season New England Cross Country Poll, while Harvard was second. Providence edged UMass for the third spot, 117-116, in the poll that is based on the votes of the New England Cross Country Coaches. Coach O'Brien's runners will face all three teams next week and hope to rearrange the New England rankings.

Boston College already has one meet behind them, an 18-45 loss to a strong Providence team. Sophomore Jimmy Cappezutto, holder of the second fastest time on the UMass course, leads BS. Cappezutto, a good freshmen runner last year, has run the two-mile in less than nine minutes. The Eagles have two other "good quality" runner besides Cappezutto, on a team that is relatively young and nearly the same as last year's squad. BC's number two runner is Walter Swanbon, who has been timed for the two-mile run in 9.15. Rounding out a comparatively strong top three for BC is Steve Liquori. Steve, another good two-miler, is the younger brother of well-known Marty Liquori. These three runners have performed better in track, however, than in cross country. Other prospects for BC include Keith Francis, and AAU runner and 1:48 half-miler, and William Juall.

UMass will probably be running tomorrow's meet conservatively, or at a 75 per cent pace to insure good performances in some of the biggest meets of the year, next week. Coach O'Brien plans to "win with depth." The team is approaching the meet as an indicator of ability. The meet will also serve as a chance to take a good look at the varsity and according to O'Brien, "To see where we stand." O'Brien also commented that the team has come back in the best early season shape he has ever seen.

Led by co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, UMass looks very strong this year. Coach O'Brien said that Thomas, Gillin, Tom Maguire and Paul Segersten have been running even in workouts and that they are "ahead of last year."

The next three positions on the team are uncertain. Sophomores Phil Broughton and Mike Gillen, junior Tom Wilson and seniors Chris Chambers and Doug O'Connell all have a shot at the number five to seven spots. Coach O'Brien explained that pressure from the number five to number nine runners may result in frequent changes in these positions. The mentor also mentioned that sixteen to twenty runners have a shot at and will be vying for the top seven places on the team.

More Than Just A TV Show

By Jerry Lazar

Kung Fu is more than a popular television series. It is a sophisticated method of self-defense, it is an effective way to keep your body and mind in shape and, to many Chinese, it is a unique and integral part of their culture.

Kung Fu is not taught to those who want to walk into bars and test their strength or to those who delight in showing off their muscular abilities. It is a skill that takes years of practice and devotion tc develop properly.

That is what I learned last week at a Kung Fu demonstration in the Campus Center Auditorium and from subsequent interviews with students of the martial art.

Until recently, Kung Fu was taught exclusively to Chinese. One student told me that the words Kung Fu roughly translate to "the Chinese people working together as a race". Because of the television show, and because of growing U.S. interest in Chinese culture, Kung Fu is gradually becoming a major interest in this country and is beginning to rank up there with its Japanese counterparts, judo and ju-jitsu.

As expected, many people have capitalized on this interest, which has resulted in the spreading of much misinformation on the subject.

"The exhibition this evening," said the program handout, "is staged partly because we wish to show the general public what Chinese Kung-Fu really is so that people will not be misled by quick talking con artists and pseudo-Orientals."

There are no black belts or any other kind of belts in Kung Fu. Anyone who says he has a black belt in Kung Fu probably doesn't know any. There are students, masters, and grandmasters. Masters specialize in a given style. The style and the school it comes from should be stated by the instructor and can be verified in Chinatown of any major city. Masters should be able to state their own Master and their Master's Master. Those Masters should also be known in Chinatown of any major city. The present generation of U.S. Masters practically always have their own Master in China, usually Honk Kong.

The demonstration was jointly presented by Masters and students of two Kung Fu schools — The Kung Fu Academy of Amherst and the New England China Martial Arts Association of Boston. The Boston school was a little late in arriving, so one of the Amherst masters used the time to talk about the study of Kung Fu in general.

"The student of Kung Fu must learn a different kind of discipline," is one of the things he told the fairly large audience. "That discipline, both physically and mentally, must come from within. You must answer not only to your instructor, but to yourself as well."

He explained that a beginning student of Kung Fu will first learn the proper stances and movements and then go on to combinations of stances and movements, using a pre-arranged set of exercises. In the elementary stages, the student will begin by "fighting thin air" and eventually fight a partner. Some students may then learn the use of weapons.

"Weapons are extensions of your hands," explained the master. "If you are lousy with your hands, weapons will not help you."

The master stressed over and over that the knowledge of Kung Fu techniques must not be misused.

"We do not teach how to beat somebody else up," he said, "we

Brel - Alive And Well

Composer Jacque Brel

Let me begin by stating that I had a good time at the UMass theater department's production of "Jacques Brel" Friday night. I suspect, should you go, that you might, too. It will be presented another 11 times this fall so you'll have plenty of chance.

The show is a collection of composer Brel's songs strung loosely together by Eric Blau and Mort Schuman, and sung in English translation by a cast of four, in this case consisting of Norman Brown, Elaine Brown, Susan Anderson and Jon Farris. The songs cover all bases; they're cynical, romantic, cute, funny, incisive; and hopeful, all in turn. It doesn't require a penchant for show tunes to get off on the music. With material like this, how could they blow it?

Director Farris sincerely tried not to. With a few exceptions he keeps staging to an economical minimum, in order to let the songs play through. Yet there are several weak spots. "Old Folks" was a bore, practically devoid of movement or even gesture, and "Brussels" and "Marathon" had several clumsy moments wherein the actors seemed unable to avoid tripping over one another. In its best moments, the staging is a treat.

Parts of "My Death", "The Desperate Ones", and "Carousels" were quite effective in their spare use of interesting effects, particularly three foil mirrors scattered around the set. Other segments of "Brussels" and "Carousels", when executed well (they weren't always) were reminiscent of parts of the movie "Cabaret", a movie I liked a great deal.

Which brings me to one of the major problems with this show. It should not have been attempted on a proscenium stage; no way. "Brel" is a cabaret show, a revue if you like, which under ideal conditions should be viewed in a cabaret, preferably with a glass of beer in hand. I'd love to see it in the Blue Wall or Hatch.

As it is, claustrophobia seems to haunt the proscenium. A spacious, airy set might have alleviated some of the problem, but the one they used was a disaster, cluttered and practically useless. The absolutely horrendous lighting was no help at all.

The actors have to work much harder to overcome these arrangements, and they had some difficulty in doing so. In fact, the lack of energy during the first few numbers was notable. But as the show proceeded, the energy picked up a bit, sparked primarily by Sue Anderson and Norman Brown, definitely Mr. Brown's most notable contribution to the show. Unfortunately, he was much too weak vocally to handle the difficult Brel style. Jon Farris had no trouble with the music, but was an evident suferer from the early general lack of energy. He picked up eventually, and proceeded with a fine performance, especially in "statue".

Susan Anderson, apart from an occasional clinker, was the best; strong, clean, and exciting throughout. W-Elaine Brown was hampered by one of the must unattractive and unsuitable costumes I have ever seen, but gave a creditable performance nonetheless. Perhaps, however, she could be persuaded to sing a little more to the audience, and less at the ceiling. There is nothing remarkable about her double chin. Finally, many, many kudos to pianist Andrew Lichtenberg, who handled a difficult score with ease.

I must reiterate, though, that all in all I enjoyed the show, and my opinion of it's weaknesses is just that; opinion. See for yourself.

The shows are at 8 p.m. Sept. 28, 29, Oct. 11, 12, 13, 25, 26, 27 and Nov. 8, 9, 10. Thursdays are dollar nights.

Day At The Races

Having saturated myself with films and novels, I've begun to seek alternatives in entertainment.

My first experiment drew me to New York for a Saturday afternoon at the races. A morning train brought me to Belmont Park on Long Island, which is one of America's finer tracks. I chose September 15th with its special attraction. At a time when Off Track Betting had diminished the attendance at New York tracks, the horse Secretariat has been drawing record crowds. The racing industry has been working hard to increase attendance using such specials as admission for half a buck with college I.D.

When Philip Morris put up most of the 250-grand for a match race between Riva Ridge and Secretariat, Belmont jumped at the chance. (Rockingham Park in New Hampshire had failed at a similar attempt a short time before.

The crowd was conspicuously different from the usual. I spoke with many spectators and all had come to see the wonder horse in one of the decade's most ballyhooed races. A woman in her seventies explained to me how it was her first visit in years; limited welfare income and the rising costs in transportation made trips to the track difficult she stated. The spectators spent hours coming by buses, cars and trains to number nearly fifty thous.

The afternoon was counted slowly by half-hour breaks between races. Fearful of losing my place on the rail beyond the finish, I didn't move for three hours. Instead I watched the kaleidoscopic changing patterns in the stands, a colorful mass of humanity. Elegant women draped in furs and their escorts in top hats mingled with the T-shirted masses. An exceptional eccentric drew curt laughs and rude expletives. His silver cascading locks and good will fashions provided sharp contrast. With pleading eyes, he begged to ride in the parade to the post — a request unhappily ignored. He spun his oversized spurs and tapped the rail with this crop, impatient for action on the track.

With the approaching moment, the crowd sprung for a better glimpse. Secretariat touched the track with smooth, gliding strides, his muscles rippling beneath the burnished copper coat. He is an overwhelming presence that dwarfs his opposition. As the field disappeared into the gate on the far side of the track, the nasal voice declared "It is now post time."

For those of us lost in the rail side crush, the start was a blur in a deafening roar. The flashing totalizer lights described the unravelling story on the backstretch. Defying the imagination, the tumultuous sound increased as Secretariat passed Riva Ridge. Heading for home, the Big Red drew away from his bay stablemate.

An instant after the finish, owner Penny Tweedy ran onto the track, her heels sinking into the damp sand. Joy radiated from her face as the invisible voice announced the new world record. With this victory, Ms. Tweedy gave $205,000 to charity and a horse to history.

On Amnesty

THE AMNESTY OF JOHN DAVID HERNDON
by James Reston, Jr.
146 pp. $5.95
by Ed Smith

Amnesty, as a political issue in America, is mired in misunderstanding and the selfedifying rhetoric of politicians. It is an issue around which liberals can organize with their half-way proposals. As well, it serves as a focal point to which "Patriotic" Americans can point as exemplifying the disrespect with which the younger generation holds the law. The moral aspect of amnesty has, not unexpectedly, been smothered under a milieu of conflicting interests. The Amnesty of John David Herndon is an important book in that it brings this ussue, in both a moral and political sense, to the reading public from a self-retired veteran's point of view.

John Herndon spent fifteen months in Vietnam and was finally shipped back to the U.S. after being injured during the TeT offensive. When he recovered he was sent to Germany and soon found himself on the levy once again for Vietnam. This time he decided that he was not going back and went instead to Paris. He returned to his company in Germany once to finalize his divorce from his wife in the states and was immediately thrown in prison. Upon leaving prison he was notified that he was again being sent to Vietnam. This time he split for Paris and did not return.

Herndon was not a draft resister or a man running way from something he had only heard about. The fifteen months he spent in Vietnam convinced him that he would not go back there to continue killing the Vietnamese. There can be disagreement over whether Herndon deserted for political or moral reasons, but it would seem to be clear that he did decide to stop killing people.

An organization in the States called Safe Return contacted Herndon and asked him if he would be a test case for amnesty. He agreed and that is where this book began. James Reston travelled with the two leaders of Safe Return to Paris and arranged for the return of Herndon to the U.S. The account Reston gives us is inevitably biased, as he was an advocate of universal amnesty long before he met Herndon. Nevertheless, he does the deserter's in Europe. There is very little that is glamorous about exile in a foreign country whose language one cannot speak. He does provide the reader with a necessary understanding of at least one man's situation through, and how he survived after leaving the army.

Probably the most interesting aspect of the ordeal of John Hermdon is what happened when he returned to the States. He was immediately arrested upon stepping off TWA's Flight 803. Safe Return expected this and was prepared for a court battle based on a defense which would expose U.S. war crimes in Indochina. However, the case never went to court. John Herndon was given a dishonorable discharge and sent packing. He was given the dishonorable discharge which had been disapproved two and one half years earlier in Germany. The government obviously did not want to get involved. It gives one a suspicion that they have something to hide.

Reston goes on in the rest of the book to state his case for universal amnesty. He cites the precedence of Andrew Johnson and goes on to answer the major ciriticisms against amnesty. He answers them well and backs them up with statistics. The most important point he makes through is one of moral significance. The United States was wrong in their actions in Vietnam; they behaved as international criminals. The men who deserted, in excess of 100,000 according to Reston's figures, were not "few, rather the vast majority of them must be men who could no longer stomach the criminal, racist and genocidal actions of the U.S. military in Vietnam. Their crime was, very literally, refusing to continue committing a crime."

The Amnesty of John David Herndon and the amesty of thousands of other men are going to serve as constant reminders of America's atrocities in Vietnam. Their plight should show us all how very wrong the "greatest country on earth can be.

WUMV-TV's Souls And Swines

by Marty Kelly

I owe my WUMV-TV soul to Paul Hamel, our Student Senate Treasurer. For it was Hamel who allowed so many to become that student pig that so many of us desire to be . . .

"It was early in the summer when the idea was posted. It was time for a Rennaissance of video on this campus. WTOY and the image projected from a riddled past just had to go and Hamel was willing to listen".

"Kelley", said Hamel, "I'll give you that $1,000 in budget changes for your god damn sports venture, only because I believe you're trying to get something accomplished on this campus. This is your last draw. If you fail here, I promise you, there will be no such thing as campus video at this university again . . . Good Luck".

So the number one Student Pig created a pen full of subsequent student pigs . . . Kelley, McKinnon, Bunker, Vera, and Sophinos were to then cross the Rubicon . . . achieve that level of involvement that is so necessary at UMass for survival . . . and most of all open up a brand new area of criticism, but better yet knowledge . . . Hamel, everyone's chief Swine, waved the wand, and thusly . . . WUMV-TV was born . . .

And so with a little flicker of hope and a monumental challenge ahead, a student video tape station with a brand new front fender was born. But it took some doing, some sleezing, three months work, and faith from a Student Pig.

The past had to be righted. The name had to go. WTOY conjured up thoughts of something you take down from a shelf and wind up. As my face got progressively uglier in time, as the years faded, so did the confidence in WTOY.

Those who initially laid the cornerstone for TOY decided themselves to get laid in Spain. And so in comparable Bonny & Clyde conniving, the charter bearers left on a holiday to Madrid and neither the equipment nor the charter members were to be seen again.

Then came the ripoff. It was a $6,000 heist and now Hamel had really had his belly of bull fights plane tickets to Madrid, false promises, and now an equipment-shy studio. Last spring we were chopped nearly $50,000 in a proposed budget. We stood pretty limp video wise as mid-semester's crept up . . . And we all but crept out of our RSO account.

"Marty, my name is Bill and how would you like to do play-by-play for us at the NIT tomorrow night against North Carolina."

That was the start of it all. Sports after that memorable night in New York and even more historic the night the Bluewall screen replayed the 72-62 loss to North Carolina, a video rebirth had taken place. Through sport WTOY was to have a viable purpose. Hamel was clearly convinced.

And so this summer the consulting began and Hamel began to loosen his checkbook. But the sports bonanza was to be the precursor. She was to be the seller. WUMV-TV would not be an elitist student pig organization. But she's got five pigs who are willing to give their time for a purpose and an involvement that is so necessary for the success of video on this campus I'm one such pig . . . Bunker, McKinnon, Vera, and Sophinos are in line too.

UMV has crossed that Rubicon. Hamel and the student senate was the first bridge. Your respect is that other reachable goal.

In descriptive form UMV is best by the people that give her her character. Her student pigs . . .

This little piggy made good.

McKinnon and Kelley - from the abstract to the absurd.

McKinnon is a skinny bastard who never said a word in my first and last business course a year ago. He's a Mass Comm nut which is his own funeral . . . But as professor Harper will attest . . . "He's the best I had in TV production class that spring."

Billy knows video. To him filming "Big Screemin' Magoo" is an orgasm. He knows his video. He's into production. The best of Billy McKinnon is yet to come. If you want to learn Billy will help . . . That's more than anyone can ask . . .

David Bunker resembles Jesus just down from the cross. In looks only. David is a torn person. He's into Belchertown. He's into UMV. He finds his work with the mentally ill as an assistant staff psychologist in the UYA program (University Year for Action) more time consuming and literally more rewarding than UMV. Yet David lends us his contacts and his time in planning documentaries for poverty groups in the Springfield area as well as local projects on campus.

McKinnon wants to teach, film, and instruct, while Bunker desires exploitation of social problems. Just through these backliners (veterans of TOY) UMV is structuring much and is certain to provide so much more in the near future sure to be aired on Channel 8 in Amherst and to be picked up on sets by over 3,000 off-campus students. But with Bunker and McKinnon you get Sophinos . . . and that's a find.

Chris, like I, began in the ranks of WMUA radio, only Chris found more success than I because he kept his mouth shut. When not announcing a football game I was suggesting alternate routes to management and being Irish and expressive, and a sophomore I didn't last too long as Sports Director. But Sophinos is more talented anways.

Together with McKinnon and assisted by the rest of us, WUMV-TV is sponsoring a three credit course in video production under the auspices of Juan Caban. But dammit, it's working . . .

Meeting once a week 25 students have the opportunity to hone their skills at the expense of UMV. They break up into production groups such as the one I have in Sports Production and Telecasting and in a very departmentalized fashion, the members of UMV get things accomplished. Whether it's Julius Erving at the Springfield Civic Center, the Western Mass. Pioneer pro football team in Holyoke, Room to Move downstairs, or a Pierpont boogie, UMV is working for your benefit.

Vera brings that Pierpont ideology to our format. You can find it either on the walls, in her toilets, or under anyone's rung, but Pierpont has a lot of dope, too many loose heads, but a lot of class, and they shipped out a bit of that when they gave us Joseph Vera . . . If you're into video, stop in and meet him . . .

And myself . . . Christ I don't know. I've been through all the medias, and sold for the cheapest price whether it be from a microphone or a typewriter to a Blue Wall beer as the going waiver price. But I might have found a real home in front of the UMV cameras although I have an ugly face . . . Give me a mike and I think I can sell a coffin to a dead horse . . . But give me Randy Richardson and Tommy Lehmann (2 n's, he's not Jewish) and Cameramen Ralph Marcus, Steve Orloff, Mike Nathanson, and Billy Jackson, and of course Hillel Himself, Earle "I'm here for five" Barroll, and I'll give you the Harvard football game at the Bluewall Sunday night at 9 p.m. or a facsimile thereof . . .

Randy Richardson is a fertile gift from above. He's into sports production. At one of my pre-Holy Cross meetings he spoke up with JOSH-like intentions and I knew I needed him, but not his wardrobe or hair-do either. And with transfer Lehmann from Bridgewater St., the job gets done . . . Thank God for the walk-on in sports . . .

"It was pretty raw that Friday night atop of the pressbox at McKenzie Stadium in Holyoke . . . But with a few beers at the Drake we wrapped up another video night and talked of the doubleheader with football at the stadium with Maine and basketball that night with Erving . . . In all it was a 21 hour sports production weekend for Richardson and the gang . . . And yet you'll probably want to call them student pigs. Call me a pig, for that's complimentary to my face, but to the UMV—TV Sports and Public Affairs crews, tip your hat . . For they have crossed the Rubicon.

We've sleezed an office from our good friend and pizza vendor Larry Popple at RSO. With a pepperoni and cheese he gave us a studio with keys, carpeting, lights, and trust, in 167 CC. Thanx Larry. For yes, it's a far cry from a plane ticket in a Madrid airport and a burglary that took away our underwear.

Yes, we have a studio and a working financial contract with the Bluewall for money for UMass football. Whether in 167 CC, at the Bluewall with a few cold ones, or at a video marathon at Pierpont (our home away from home in years gone by) or any other dorm on campus, or on channel 8 in Amherst, the student pigs from WUMV-TV, University of Massachusetts, are getting things done. This consciousness can't be taken blindly.

We live in a world that one day our generation will govern completely. In our rebellious natures we strive to run our own life in retrospect to our own little Rubicons that we confront in our plasticity day to day. UMass is a melting pot of uncertainty. For those that are into it, UMV-TV helps give shape, purpose, and social control to that realm of uncertainty to those that struggle in the university's jungle of mores and value systems. An athlete gets into his product for identity, Hamel and Booker and Gregory and Sevini into their Senate for the same purpose, Taylor into Burton for some of the same warmth, but finally we all reach that Rubicon that we either stop and stare at, wished at one time we crossed, or simply let melt in our dreams.

Bunker, McKinnon, Sophinos, Vera, and my gang Randy, Tommy, Ralph, Billy, Stevey, Mike, and of course for the last time easy Earle have all crossed that threshold. We're Student Pigs living in a world we were not afraid to create. UMV will survive because it was born with a strong pair of balls and a solid shot of Irish behind it. Sports will give UMV a campus appeal. But it's our pen of pigs, our TV course, our open studio to everyone, and my ugly face that with Paul Hamel's prayers will make us go beyond Madrid, Spain with, God Dammit, a return ticket.

UMV has crossed the Rubicon . .

That rude face is driving me crazy.

More Than Just A TV Show

Kung Fu is not taught to those who want to walk into Bars and test their strength.

also teach the guiding philosophical principle of Kung Fu."

The show consisted of more than twenty separate demonstrations, and included both males and females — black, white and Chinese — ranging from four years old to the Bobby Riggs age bracket. The audience was equally diverse.

Kung Fu is one of the few areas of Chinese culture which does not discriminate against women. One student told me after the show that a woman properly trained in Kung Fu could protect herself against any man who has not received similar training and could even kill or disable him if necessary.

Kung Fu is also taught to people of all ages. One master compared the study to rowing upstream — "you stop and you move backwards." Unlike professional athletes, claimed the master, Kung Fu skills can be maintained until the age of 70 or 80 if exercised diligently and properly.

Teaching Kung Fu to young children helps them become aware of their bodies and instills an appreciation of their limbs. I watched a four-year-old Chinese girl on stage swinging her arms around Popeye-style and executing kicks which made my lower jaw drop six inches. How cute, I thought. Imagine my surprise when a student later told me that that same girl could shatter the bones in my leg with a single kick if she wanted to. How will she get along with the kids in her first-grade class, I wondered.

"She'll probably be the only kid in the class who won't go picking fights with the other kids," the student predicted, adding that those who know and practice Kung Fu usually don't go around showing off their prowess. They know that they are able to defend themselves when necessary and don't feel they have to prove it to anyone.

"As for me," said the student, "I don't like to fight. If someone tried to start something with me, I'd rather walk away." Knowing Kung Fu, according to the student, gives you some control over your destiny. It gives you the feeling that, no matter what happens, you are able to defend yourself in any situation.

But back to the demonstration. It opened with the Southern Lion Dance, a unique part of Chinese culture which symbolizes courage, strength and good luck.

"In a Chinese community," explained the announcer, "whenever we have an important event, we do a Lion Dance."

The dance consists of two people, one who stands under the large, elaborately colorful lion's head and another who holds up the long robe which is supposed to be the lion's body. The moves are highly stylized, with a mixture of folk elements. The lion's eyes blink and the mouth opens, with the accompaniment of Oriental drums and cymbals.

Next on the program was a woman demonstrating some of the movements involved in Tai-Chi Chuan, a style of Kung Fu which dates back to the Sung Dynasty (1017-1073 A.D.), and is based on principles of physiology, psychology and dynamics for health promotion. The woman's slow, graceful, silent motions looked like they could have been taken from "Swan Lake". There were no facial expressions, only soft gliding patterns with her arms and legs.

Tai-Chi Chuan purports to clear the mind and strengthen the brain. According to promotional literature distributed to the audience, "it leads to lucid thinking, a peaceful mind, a gentle temper, and an increase in personal vital force ... (it) can warm the body in winter and cool it in summer. It promotes deep breathing and develops lungs; it tones up the heart, and it promotes digestion which enables the stomach to absorb nourishment from food more efficiently." Also, according to the handouts, it could help people suffering from "neurasthenia, high blood pressure, anemia, tuberculosis, gastric and ureic diseases, and kidney disorders." Sounds far-fetched to me, but then again, so did acupuncture.

The show picked up when weapons were used. Some of those guys could swing those staffs, swords and spears with more finesse and agility than a champion baton twirler.

"The object of this exercise," explained the announcer at one point, "is to make mince meat out of your opponent."

And so it went. Three hours worth of punches and kicks that my poor prose could never do justice to. Then came the grand finale.

First, one guy broke two cement blocks, one atop the other, with his bare hands.

"Feel my hand," said one student who was sitting next to me at the demonstration. His hand was not calloused and not very rough atiall. I candidly told him I wasn't impressed.

"Well his hands are even softer than that," he said, referring to the master who had just snapped the blocks. I was impressed.

"How does he do it?" I asked another student afterwards. "What principle of Kung Fu did he employ?"

"Speed," was the answer. "Speed and concentration." "It's like if you shoot a bullet through a door, it might come out the other end intact. But if you try to hammer a bullet into a door, the bullet will be flattened."

Then they placed two cement bricks on top of one guy's head and smashed them with a sledgehammer, leaving the guy's brains intact. I forgot to ask what principle of Kung Fu was employed there, and I remain convinced that this was merely put on the program for its shock effect.

Finally, for the super grand finale, they broke two bricks placed on top of a bed of nails which was placed on top of an upside down bed of nails which was placed on top of another guy who was lying on a bed of razor-sharp blades. Nobody bled too badly.

"Imagine my surprise when I was told she could shatter my leg bones."

"Sometimes magicians do this," a student told me afterwards, "but they soak the bricks in vinegar so they crumble easily. But if you had smelled the bricks, you would have seen that they were untreated."

There's an awful lot to learn about Kung Fu and its thousands of variations and positions. A beginner can start at the Kung Fu Academy in Amherst, but the advanced stuff can only be learned in Hong Kong. It is an art full of "philosophical secrets", as one student put it, which orthodox instructors will teach only to serious students.

Like wrestling was to the ancient Greeks and Romans, Kung Fu is to the Chinese. It is a lifestyle, something that, once learned, always stays with you. It involves the use of sensitivity and discretion and, as one student put it, "you use your opponent's strength against himself."

And Kung Fu is more than just a television series.

LATIN WEEK IN REVIEW

by Gary Gomes

What's that? You say you don't know that every U.S. company in Puerto Rico is using their space on the island without paying a single tax? And isn't that illegal? To hold property and not pay a tax on it? Do you know of Pedro Petri (poet) or Eddie Palmieri (musician)? Did you know that, in actual terms, Puerto Rico, while being called a Commonwealth State, is actually a colony housing two U.S. nuclear bases? Or that there is a populated island off the coast of Puerto Rico which is used as a site for target practice by the U.S. Navy? Are you aware of the almost total neglect of Latin Music, Art, and life on the part of most of the U.S.? If so, come this way — you have much to learn.

EVENT 1: The Films

The first film shown, "Puerto Rico: The Colonization of" was a short clip trying to show a cross section of Puerto Rican folk and their feelings about independence. One man said, "We're a Commonwealth. What's that?" Second response: "I'm against independence." Third response: The woman just shook her head — she didn't know what the interviewer was talking about. And the fourth interviewee was in absolute favour of independence. What does that show. Well, one person from the audience screamed out that a vote was taken recently in Puerto Rico, as to whether the people wanted independence, and that 75 per cent voted against independence.

However, look at the responses to the interview. Doesn't seem as clearcut as "They don't want independence." Over half the people who voted for Nixon this time around wanted things changed, and they were fully aware of the fact that Nixon wouldn't bring about change. If you're unsure, stick with the accepted pattern. Brainwash. You can't expect anything better or new, so why even try? And if half those voting didn't realize the implications of what they were voting on, that makes for a pretty shaky "mandate from the people."

The second film (about 30 minutes long), "Culebra" dealt with the use of the isle of Culebra (off the coast of Puerto Rico, and a part of the United States' colonial influence in Puerto Rico. A beautiful sequence of contrast shots take place: you see a U.S. Navy man saying he's had very little trouble with the natives, then it switches to a "Yankee Go Home" spelled out on the pavement.

False treaties signed with Secretary Chaffe are brought up, and the film tells how school children have to be calmed down after they've heard the explosions from the boats' target practice, because they fear their parents might have been injured. And, at the end of the film, it is made quite clear that the struggle is still going on.

The third film, "Blood of the Condor" was a substitute for "Our Latin Thing", which wound up somewhere in Springfield most of the weekend. "Blood of the Condor" was a fine replacement.

The film deals with a group of Indians in Bolivia who are staying with the "old ways" in the force of the governmental turn towards "progress". "Condor" revolved around two plot lines — the first, the head of the tribe getting trapped and shot by the local police, needing a great deal of blood for an operation so that he might live, and his brother's search for the blood. He finally finds the man who might be able to give him the blood his dying brother needs, but the doctor is too wrapped up in a speech he's giving about "progress" to give the man the blood.

The events which led up to the injury of the head of the tribe dealt with a clinic which had been brought in to the area to "help" the mothers deliver the children. Turns out they were using the mothers as Guinea pigs for sterilization experiments, so the males of the tribe decided to castrate the male members of the clinic. Simple as that. It's a frightening film, but one well worth seeing, to view the contrasts between Third World peoples and their exploitation by European techniques.

Charged with Lation Vibration — Eddie Palmieri and Musica.

EVENT 2: MUSICA — Eddie Palmieri and His Orchestra

Second night — and the air in the S.U.B. was charged (beautifully so) with Latin vibration. Configurations and dance techniques never thought of by the boogie crowd were given life and breathed out the forms of Latin essence.

The ballroom itself was set up in a manner I had never seen. Chairs and tables set up in the back so people could sit after a joust with Eddie. The band would switch back and forth, and while keeping a fairly strict Latin beat, would sally forth into improvisations, the most startling being Chocolate's trumpet extravaganzas, and the inclusion of an electric violin over the basic structure. So, the six man percussion section (including the two singers) put down a format you couldn't help but want to dance (and I mean DANCE) to, while the soloists took off into the parallel fields.

When you get down to it, Eddie Palmieri's appearance (while I give deference to the poets for doing a fine job) was the true CULTURAL HAPPENING of the weekend, for the simple fact that a lot of folks here can understand and laugh at or empathize with the poetry of Pedro Petri, one really has to feel the music to get up and dance to it. I felt like a bloody fool some of the time I was dancing, because my moves were so jerky in comparison to people who'd been dancing this way for so long. Culture can be learned, but it can't be learned in one night. So it goes — but you can always have a damn good try at it!

But picture this, if you will — Eddie had to leave the same night to play in New York at 4 a.m. the Sunday morning. And this was after he and his fellow members had whipped up more energy than I'd heard in a good spell of time. They left the audience happy and grateful for the life and community Eddie Palmieri brought to the Ballroom.

EVENT 3: THE POETS

Third day — afternoon. A series of slides is shown to demonstrate the United States' colonization of Puerto Rico — both obvious and covert techniques. Taxes not being paid on property being used by U.S. companies in Puerto Rico; Rockefeller oil drillings off the coast of Puerto Rico; 40 per cent of the Puerto Rican population is forced off the island due to the economic stress the United States places on it; the force-advertising to Puerto Rican people of "the American way" of three cars per person -- the entire deal. Consolidated Cigar is getting the best of it from both ends — paying low to paltry wages to the tobacco pickers up here in the Pioneer valley and surrounding areas, importing Puerto Ricans like cattle to do the work, and keeping the plants operating in Puerto Rico by paying the citizens next to nothing. Ah! American enterprise! Oil spillage on the beaches from Rockefeller and his merry manglers is another example of the defilement of Puerto Rico. And, as is natural when you have any competition, there have been bombings of the offices of the revolutionary newspaper Claridad ('El Periodico de la Independencia' the banner says). And, it would seem, Puerto Rico needs independence from the U.S. — if the island is to even survive, never mind prosper, it has to get rid of all the bloodsuckers that are on the island. More on this later. . .

On to the poets ... Pedro Petri, author of Puerto Rican Obituary, one of the finest poems written about slave wage laborers, who put their money on the lottery and hope to break through someday, but can't, "Because it's against company policy to promote SPICS, SPICS, SPICS", and go to the grave hating each other, not realizing that they themselves are truly beautiful. Petri recited on "The Rise and Fall of the Avon Lady" telling how the Avon lady destroys the natural aroma and that this destruction makes the biggest threat to world peace.

Bob Marquez read a beautiful translation (into Spanish) of Petri's Obituary, and a staggering piece about "The Pure Man" (translated from a Latin American poet's work), expressing the pure man as being an antiseptic creature, one who does not really live. The impure man smokes, drinks, and loves, whereas the 'pure' man becomes a liar. He is as one dead.

Jose Angel Figueroa read several things, among them "Puerto Ricana", a dedication to the Puerto Rican woman, warning about the influence of the "peroxide" loss to beautiful shining hair, to the beauty of the Puerto Rican woman, the colour of her skin, and the strength she has shown throughout the years. He also read a series of poems on the independence (the necessary independence) of Puerto Rico.

LATER

Was the Latin American Festival a success? The fact that it even took place was a success by itself, since it's the biggest (and best) thing to happen on this campus since the Black Musicians' Conference last Spring. And, like the Musicians Conference, it will have ramifications for months and years to come. Perhaps the two best aspects of the Festival were that it 1) coincided with both the anniversary for Cuban and Puerto Rican Independence, and with the march to the U.N. which occurred on Monday to DEMAND Puerto Rico be recognized as a colony of the U.S. and be given its independence, and 2) helped in the establishment of the Third World Community on this campus as envisioned by people like Bill Hasson, Rosa Blanco, and Heriberto Flores — which includes the Spanish-speaking populace of the world.

Perhaps, finally, when the world stops sleeping, we'll realize that the struggle that is now being instituted by the Third World belongs to all of us, since we have been shackled to our greed. But it won't do any good to weep and wish. We need action, NOW!!!!

Do They Care About Us At All?

IN CONCERT
Tina Turner & The Family Vibes
Flo & Eddie
Amherst College, Sept. 22

by Mike Kostek
and Jon Carr

Room 109 is the Fencing room in Amherst College's gym. Since this was September 22, the strange brouhaha of musicians known as Flo and Eddie were in room 109 dressing for their imminent concert with Ike and Tina Turner.

Carr bravely approached and knocked on the door. Sounds of clashing fencing foils and howls could be heard from within. The door opened and there in a chair commanding th passageway sat Mark Volman (he's the fat one). He was wearing an enormous black wool hat with a U. S. Steel emblem sewn on, strumming his electric guitar noiselessly.

"What do you want to know?" he looked up groggily and asked. "How we got our start in show business? How we met Zappa? What our personal long-range goals are?"

Carr was ready. "Oh no. We want to know who your favorite Beatle is."

Staff photo: Tuna Stewart

Flo and Eddie are drunk. Flo and Eddie are very drunk.

Ike Turner is sick. He is sick with bronchitis. His back-up band, the Family Vibes, play like they've been on the road fifteen years too long. Which they have.

Flo and Eddie stepped on every showbiz rule in the book.

Tina Turner and Friends observed every rule extant.

Flo and Eddie were wonderful.

Tina and Friends were awful.

"Oh, my favorite Beatle is definitely George Harrison."

Mark's face brightens as he ushers us in.

Howard Kaylan, the other ex-Turtle, ex-Mother (the one with the beard and grey hair, the one who writes and sings most of their songs) pauses his dueling long enough to tell us George Martin is his favorite Beatle.

We were hard-pressed to take notes at this point, for Howie was splaying the floor below our feet with his blade, commanding us to dance.

We manage to secure our place in the room, and we both corral Howie, seeing as Mark kept... drifting around.

"Making it! Look at his place! My God, we're in Amherst! Hits? No, I don't care about anything; getting drunk and high with honest friends in compatible situations is what I strive for. I don't need people to tell me I'm having a good time. I am having a good time, aren't I? Do you call Ike and Tina making it? Playing Amherst too? Not for me."

Carr interjected (with a smile). "But Ike has a better dressing room than you do."

"Yeah, but" (here Howie whispered to us, taking us into his confidence) "you know that if Ike doesn't have a better dressing room, this place will be burned to the ground by Monday morning."

As Howie continued to discuss the pros and cons of life on the road, his eyes never raised beyond my neck level. He could have been talking to anything. My hastily thought out questions brought no expression to his paralyzed face.

Flo is Mark Volman

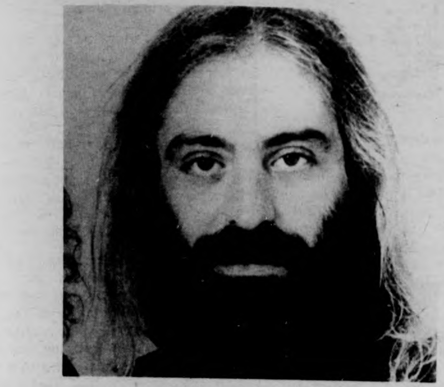
"I've been on the road twenty-six nights in a row now. This boy's voice is gone."

At this point I brought up the apparent contradiction between his longing for "compatible situations" and just what he was complaining about.

"Pain is profit in this biz. You gotta be nuts to do this. We're all nuts." He waveringly gestured to the rest of the room, now coated in an atmosphere that was, uh, unusual.

Carr had gone off to talk to Flo & Eddie's new drummer, John Bredeau, who was telling him how Mark was going to write a Top 40 hit single, thereby getting Flo & Eddie national exposure and catapulating them on to the Concert Circuit Situation.

Howie had taken a look out the window which apparently reminded him. "Amherst! What is this place? What is here? The Patriots train here? Mark!, Mark! Jim Plunkett! Mark!, Mark! The Pub and Chequers are the town's action spots? Where's the raunchy teenage action? Where the crabs hang out. Quicksilver? Is that where they have the long hair and all that? Mark!, Mark! The Quicksilver! Crabs at Quicksilver!"



Eddie is Howard Kaylan

Somehow Kostek managed to tone Howie down to several Conventional Subjects. Like record companies:

"No, we're not happy being on Warners. The trouble is they release forty records a month, and if you're not Deep Purple, you're one of the thirty-nine others. We'll probably wind up on Capricorn as they seem to have people there who care. I don't want to get David Geffined into Asylum. I mean, how far can you take the Colorado Acid Experience? I've got nothing against the Eagles, it's just that everybody who's on that label seems to wind up with round glasses looking like John Denver. Maybe we'll go to UA or Capital or Blue Thumb. So what? They're all names, they're all just record companies."

On their alleged feud with Frank Zappa:

"What happened was Frank got a broken leg. That was it. Nothing else. But these 'feud' stories are so widespread that I don't deny them anymore because they're starting to get interesting."

On recently-departed band members Aynsley Dunbar bassist and Jim Pons: "Aynsley's drumming for David Bowie, and Jim is studying acting in New York."

Flo & Eddie went on stage and had a very good time, if most of the crowd didn't. They made sport of Contemporary Rock Stars, yelled at the audience and sang several songs which, if the crowd could have heard the words (The Amherst Cage is not the best for acoustics; said Mark "If you're gonna play in a place that's acoustically designed for horses to shit in, it's gotta be right.") would have provoked a violent reaction. In between were several oddly sensitive songs (odd, at least in this situation). All in all, it was a sanely crazy set of happy-time, reactionary pop. One of their numbers went: "You wanna boogie? We'll give you boogie!" While they gave the crowd the finger.

The Ike and Tina Turner Review, sans Ike, never got off the ground as their program was marred by delays and lack of tightness.

The show began well enough as the Family Vibes, the predominantly brass combo which travels with Ike and Tina, began by warming the audience up with the "Theme from Shaft". Their playing was okay, offset only by an embarrassing try for humor as the trumpet player prevented the lead vocalist from completing "Shaft's a bad mother..." Then on came the Ikettes, and the audience began to shake in anticipation. But the Ikettes were hurting as they did "Piece of My Heart" out of step and even smiled to each other about their ineptness. The anticipation of Tina's imminent appearance, though, made the Ikettes performance only a minor irritation.

Unfortunately, instead of Tina, we got a long delay, ostensibly because the mikes weren't working property. When the Family Vibes finally came back on, the only change I noticed was that their vocalist had changed clothes.

The Vibes tried to get the show going again with "Higher", only to stop in the middle with a complaint about the spotlights. This lost them their audience completely, but they didn't seem to care as they killed ten minutes with a monotonous instrumental.

After at least a half hour's delay, both Tina and the Ikettes made it on and barely kept the crowd from walking out. Their delay in appearing was announced as being due to microphone troubles and girdle difficulties, but the disappointing gate of less than fifteen hundred was more likely the cause.

The Ikettes returned, did a couple of good numbers, and things seemed to be improving when Tina was introduced, a full hour after their set began.

She's so damned good that she almost made up for the delays and uninspired playing. She ran off a set of fast, rocking numbers and got the audience to dancing. When she asked "Are you ready for me?" the audience response seemed to say all was forgiven. She then did some more good songs, but it wasn't enough to blot out the memory of the bad beginning. The show biz veneer was smashed by the delays, and to tell the truth, half of their appeal lies beneath that facade.

This disappointing concert ended with "Higher", and Tina jived off the stage amid smoke bombs and flashing strobe lights.

Everything was ruined beyond rescue with their last number "Proud Mary". Tina, explaining that Ike was down with bronchitis in L.A., asked for a volunteer to do Ike's part in the song. To her surprise, she got one. A guy from the audience, obviously really zonked, climbed on stage. He missed his parts in the slow section of the song, being more interested in eyeing Tina. When the dancing started he got hustled off the stage by a Family Vibe.

Back in the dressing room, Mark looked at Kostek with, for the first time, a vaguely honest, earnest look. "That wasn't too bad, huh? I mean, it got good after 'Just Another Town', didn't it?"

Indeed. "Just Another Town" is a song "about life on the road. Not the 200 Motels bullshit, but the real thing."

"And the lights they all go down
In just another town,
And you wonder do they know who we are?
Do they care about us at all?"

King Crimson
James Cotton Blues Band
Williams College, September 24

So here we are, four scruffy looking UMies waiting for the advent of King Crimson and James Cotton, waiting on the steps outside of the hall at Williams in North Adams, Mass. Bill, the scruffiest one of us all, says of King Crimson: "They'll put on a good show if they have a good audience." I look around, viewing the Prep school crowd of Williams with skepticism, and I say to Bill: "Does this look like a good crowd to you?" "No," says Bill, and we both look down at the ground in disgust.

Cotton's men took the stage first, cavorting around advanced riffs like they were nothing, and finally breaking into "Watermelon Man" by Herbie Hancock. After the "warm-up", Cotton himself showed and proceeded to wow! the crowd with da blooz. The last time I had seen Mr. Cotton and company, they made Country Joe and the Fish look sick, so I knew they had a lot of their stuff together about five years ago! They didn't disappoint me one iota. The band was tight, Cotton was as fine as ever on voice and harmonica, and my hat is most definitely off to guitarist Matt Moore, who makes about 90 per cent of the British blues speed freaks look downright anemic. A good set, with Cotton hitting into a twelve bar and telling the audience that this was the stuff he'd left behind. (Dig what he was getting at!) As the topper of the evening, Cotton did one of his famous somersaults onstage. Encore.

After the hour-and-a-half Cotton set, everyone was waiting for King Crimson to get straightened out and take the stage. Two mellotrons, about 10 HiWatt amps, two Leslie Speakers and Bill Bruford's percussion set-up (which included square cymbals, chines, marimba, and a rhythm box in addition to his regular kit — also gongs and a sheet of metal set up against a screen). Finally, out comes David Cross (violin, viola, mellotron), Bruford (ex-Yes, on assorted percussion), John Wetton (formerly of Family-on bass guitar and vocals), and Robert Fripp (on guitar and mellotron), founder of Crimson, and one of the most respected musicians in Britain.

Understand now, King Crimson aren't just a bunch of two-bit blues hacks (a la Rory Gallagher) — they're musicians who have, I would believe, drawn on their experiences (Fripp in the new improvisational music that's been developing in England under the guidance of Keith Tippett and Robert Wyatt; Wetton from the various R&B groups in the U. S. and Family's chordal complexity; Cross from classical music and a very personal approach to his instruments; and Bruford from the various excursions of Yes and the tutoring of Jamie Muir, free drummer who recently split Crimson's ranks) to make a unique musical framework.

For this concert, they started with the title track from their current album Larks Tongues in Aspic",Bruford hovering over the percussion set-up like a demented vulture, Fripp concentrating on the guitar, Wetton likewise on bass, and Cross looking aloof but interested. The violin riff eased inward leading to the approach of Fripp's massive twelve-tone guitar solo. After getting the mellotrons together (Fripp was profusely apologetic about the entire thing), they played "Easy Money", a hard-rocker from Larks' Tongues, and slipped quite nicely into three improvised numbers, Cross playing the violin so hard that the string from the bow was snapping. Fripp running up and down with one of the strangest chord strummings I've ever heard. And Wetton is a remarkable bass player, probably of equal technique with Jack Bruce. Sadly this had to end.

The cries of "Mellotron! Mellotron!" were getting harder and harder to deny, and the legacy that's held King Crimson back since the first album was still present. The ballad. So they did it. But Wetton wasn't singing the regular lyrics — rather, he was swearing. He did not want to do it. So what could have been an incredible concert got bugged by a closed audience. After they finished "Exiles", they did a quick retreat with "Larks' Tongues in Aspic, Pt. II", which built and built and built, and Cross's violin solo hit the peak of schizoid feeling that evening, then to the incredible dense and controlled climax. Then fade. They did not have a good audience. They had a bunch of Muzak-fed babies.

Allman Brothers

Brothers And Sisters
Capricorn CP0111

by Ed McGuinnis

Once a sound becomes instituted with a certain band, it is hard to stray too far from that specific sound. The Allman Brothers are a case in point. Brothers and Sisters, their latest album, is a culmination of the rhythm and blues which those Georgia boys have been playing since their beginnings.

Brothers and Sisters, released well over a year since Eat a Peach, undoubtably has differences from the previous album. The most dramatic change heard on the new album appears in the form of piano-playing Chuck Laevell, who seems to have "replaced" the sound of Duane Allman's moaning slide guitar with his fresh antics on the piano. The blues patterns once balanced by the interchanging guitars of Dicky Betts and Duane Allman are now, to a large degree, performed by Betts and Chuck Laevell. The rhythm section and backbone of the music, consisting of Butch Trucks and Jaimoe on drums, Lamar Williams on bass (Berry Oakley does appear on two cuts), and Greg Allman on organ, is as good as ever.

Brothers and Sisters, musically, is not that much different from their previous albums. It is good, with the exception of a couple of cuts which lack enough feeling to generate excitement. Brothers and Sisters is not the Allman Brothers best album, but if you enjoy listening to their music, you won't be offended when throwing the record on your turntable. It contains enough lively innovations and moaning blues to satisfy any fan. It is pretty evident after listening to the album that there is still an awful lot of talent in this band. I can only hope that the Brothers' next album contains better material.

Local Notes

It was a busy summer for area bands . . . James Montgomery Band signed with Capricorn Records (the Allman's and Martin Mull's label) and took some time off from the road to record their first album, which should be appearing soon. They were also the subject of a Boston Globe Sunday Magazine cover story (with James and his harp and his rings and his bracelets on the cover). Globe staffer Nathan Cobb did the writing, and what emerged was a tsk-tsk look at these peculiar, hardworking humans getting drunk day and night . . . Spirit in Flesh reemerged as Metalica (named after their ex-lead singer now manager Mike Metalica. They signed a contract with Columbia and have an album due this fall. One single from the album, "Train" has been released everywhere in the country but here. It seems they aren't too happy with the reaction they've received in this state of states.

"Train" is reportedly hot in Philly and moving along in several other areas. Metalica has gone through several personel changes, leaving only Jim Sullivan, Glenn Hutchinson and Pod (aka Big Joe Podlesney) from the original group. I haven't seen them live yet, but several of their practices sounded like watered-down Alice Cooper. Promotion of Metalica is handled by Yellow Jacket Productions, a Turners Falls-based branch of the still-together Brotherhood. Oh, blessed reflief, Mikey Metalica isn't singing anymore.

NRBQ, Fat and Clean Living all had busy summers which sort of culminated in a beautiful concert/festival by the three bands attended by 2000 people who had a good time sitting on the Amherst Observatory grounds.

Matthew Fisher

by David Sokol

Journey's End
RCA APL1-0195
Total Playing Time: 38:30

After a musical disappearance of almost 5 years, Matthew Fisher is back on the music scene with his first solo album. Best known as the organist with the then exquisite Procol Harum, Fisher also cowrote several masterpieces ("Pilgrims Progress", "Wreck of the Hesperus", and "Repent Walpurgis"), and produced what is possibly the ultimate Rock album, A Salty Dog. Not until recently have we started hearing about Matthew again, first with rumors that his then forthcoming album would be a gem, picking up where A Salty Dog left off, next with his production of Robin Trower's subaqueous sounding Twice Removed From Yesterday, and finally with the release of Journey's End.

JOURNEY'S
MATTHEW FISHER
END

Although Journey's End comes nowhere near picking up where Salty Dog left off (an impossible task, anyway), after the initial disappointment that the record isn't as brilliant as its advertising would have us believe, it turns out to be awfully good. While lacking much of the classical influence which predominated Matthew's Procol style, it is hard to fault the music (all of which was written by Fisher) except that perhaps it is too commercial and occasionally a bit too cute. His lyrics are melancholy, romantic, and autobiographical and his vocals are well done, tasteful, and sincere.

An interesting inclusion is the beautiful title theme from the movie "Seperation". Procol recorded "Salad Days (Are Here Again)", another song from this film, back on their first album. Other high points are the senstive "Hard to be Sure" with a refrain reminiscent of "Pilgrims Progress", "Marie", and "Journey's End".

Throughout the record there is a continual, introspective and personal feeling which Matthew conveys through his words and music, and he does it in a manner which is accessible and understandable. With each successive listening, this record gets better, an indication that commerciality doesn't have to be so bad after all. There are no throwaway cuts here, making Journey's End a consistantly enjoyable and meaningful contribution to the 1973 musical situation.

Greenough A Go Go

by Mike Kostek
In Concert:
Big Screaming MacGrew
Greenough Dorm, Sept. 22

. . . and it's John Dean telling me how college kids aren't dressing sloppy any more. True, true. I don't know exactly why, but here they come, from Baker from Van Meter, from Chadbourne, from Orchard Hill even, all coming into Greenough's basement. Almost all the males are neatly attired (read carefully) in dress shirt (tucked in) and well-preserved jeans. Cautions. The girls, forget it. A few sneakers, but mostly dress creations. One particular bozo is wearing his Deerfield Academy tenny shirt. How crass can you get? And John Dean's telling me that in three years everyone's gonna be dressing conservatively. Hippies come home!

What those people and us were doing down under Greenough was party-ticipating in the dorm's semi-official renovation revelation. Closed all of last term for the remodeling, Greenough was opening up its doors for that most sacred of college rituals — PARTY. Boogie? Maybe.

Greenough is the smallest house on campus (118 select souls) and is not used to anywhere else's lowlife flowing through its bowels. The party soon crowded the basement to the point of immobile despair, and turned the affair into one of those times best appreciated after applying one's self to five or six or seven or eight of the rancid 25¢ draught Schlitzs.

The obvious catalyst of the party was the announced entertainment, Big Screaming MacGrew. They were stuck into a corner of the basement, swelling the rooms with noise, noise, noise. They're not a good enough band to make you forget how rank that 25¢ Schlitz is, but they've got enough chops to get and keep things moving. They can and do zip competenty through the blues/boogie standards energetically enough to make you forget just how many times you've heard them before (except one — fellas, please, lay off the ten minute "Wang Dang Doodle")

Considering the zoo they were to encounter at Cance the following night, it was a tame eve for MacGrew and company. The organist seems to be following in John Mayall's early footsteps, and the guitar player (Greenough's own Brian Duffy) has a style reminiscent of truly Slowhand Clapton. The drummer and bassist rock steady, if rather basically, and Big Screaming does. They've got an interesting repetoire that includes obscure pieces like Charlie Musselwhite's "Up and Down The Avenue" and Count Basie's "OK — You Win". I look for these boys to get quite good As Time Goes By.

. . . and it's still Johnny Dean trying to come up with a suitable metaphor to describe the amount of people packed into the place. "How about 5000 hot dogs cooking on one tiny grill? That way you get the idea of people roasting, too . . ."

JSD Band

by David Sokol

Travelling Days

Warners BS 2723

Every so often a record is released which finds its way to the turntable with far greater frequency than the average new release. Who's Next is such a record which just doesn't get old, regardless of how frequently it's heard. Procol Harum's A Salty Dog, Hubert Laws' The Rite Of Spring, Fairport's Angel Delight, and virtually any recording of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony can be listened to and enjoyed at almost any time, in almost any mood. Most records these days can't be. There are party albums, drinking albums, upper and downer albums, romantic, sensual albums, but there aren't many which are everything at once.

The JSD Band, named for Jim Divers, Sean O'Rourke, and Des Coffield have been playing together since 1969. In the tradition of Fairport Convention (back when their hair was short) and Steeleye Span, Scotland's five man JSD Band play primarily traditional music, and they play it masterfully. Their third album, Traveling Days is impressive in a number of ways, most notably because it is one of those records which always sounds good. There is a vivacious driving quality which prevails throughout this record. Like Steeleye's "One Misty Moisty Morning" or "The Blacksmith", the tunes on Traveling Days are light (as opposed to heavy), lively, and energetic. On top of this, there is a versatility which is greatly lacking in a lot of electric music. The material ranges from their solid up tempo renditions of olde English songs ("Gallway Races", "King's Favourite") to the more jug bandish good time music-sounding "Sarah Jane" and "Fishing Blues" to the slow plaintive ballad-sounding "Dowie Dens of Yarrow" and the album's one original, "Traveling Days".

The versatility and diversity of the music is further augmented by the variety of instruments played, and the various sounds obtained from them. Sean O'Rourke's flute playing sounds Ian Anderson-influenced (at least as sensitive), and drummer Colin Finn must have listened to Dave Matticks somewhere along the way.

My only negative criticism with Traveling Days is with the unevenness of some of the production. Some of the fade ins or fade outs could have been cleaner, and the clarity of the vocals could have been sharper. Other than this I have no complaints. I can't predict a fruitful commercial future for the JSD Band, (neither Fairport nor Steeleye have chauffeur-driven limousines) but as long as they keep sounding as good as this, they'll certainly receive positive critical recognition. So far the year's most pleasant surprise.

Cat Stevens

By Steve Feld

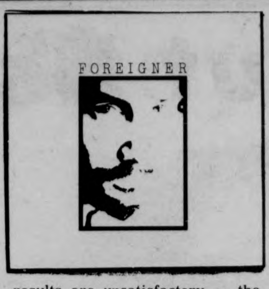
FOREIGNER
A & M SP 4391



Cat Stevens, like his colleague Neil Young, has won his quasi-superstardom on the impetus of a few select songs that have plucked the heartstrings of a fickle but highly susceptible audience. "Father and Son", "Peace Train", "Morning Has Broken", "Moonshadow" and the magnificent "Sitting" from last year's Catch Bull At Four have all contributed to the idyllic and sacrosanct Ambiance that has enveloped every Cat Stevens offering. Since his humble beginnings, the sheer bulk of his work has tended to forestall genuine disdain in his critics, but rather a disturbed ambivalence.

Foreigner marks no exception to the Stevens' oeuvre. Recorded in Jamaica — where the backing is reggae and the dope is as potent as it is inexpensive — Cat decided to drop producer Paul Samwell-Smith and direct himself. The results are unsatisfactory — the overall sound is uncomfortably sparse, due, in part, to the under-recorded percussion. The first side contains the eighteen-minute "Foreigner Suite" which has its ups and downs but provides for a worthwhile sitting. Side two contains four nondescript songs that make for too much of nothing.

"Foreigner Suite" is little more than a melange of bits and pieces of musical phrasing-some intriguing, some elementary — edited together to form an incoherent statement. Taken as such, it shouldn't disappoint or disillusion fans and critics. It has its share of delightful melodies and whimsical wordings, particularly the "Heaven must've programmed you" finale and the reprise of the opening stanzas, while it's admittedly forced continuity manages to escape any overly obtrusive transitions.

The second side fails to make any impressions whatsoever on my consciousness — something Cat has been known to do before. "The Hurt", the single picked for air-play, has met only with modest reactions; comparisons with "Sitting" are foolish. "How Many Times" and "Later" come and go, leaving me speechlessly cold, while "100 I Dream" is immediately forgetable with its socio-portentious Ian Anderson-like lyrics and a second-hand melody.

And so it seems that Cat Stevens is destined for mixed reviews. Only with improvement — extra effort, more discriminating editing, and a good producer — will he record the masterpiece inside him. As far as Foreigner goes, the "Suite" is as good as the rest is bad, but neither sticks in my mind as being very good or very bad.

Music Editorial

by David Santos

When I first read Rolling Stone's concert report on Jethro Tull a couple of issues back, I couldn't help from feeling somewhat distressed. The tone of the article was centered around the reviewers opinion of Tull's latest album, A Passion Play. Since she obviously hated the album, I can see how she could have ever given an unbiased view of Tull's performance. Despite this, I couldn't help but think the worst when I attended Tull's Providence concert.

As it turned out though, Jethro Tull put on a show quite different from the Rolling Stone report. If two words were to be used to describe it, they'd have to be "utterly fantastic". The band played close to three hours. Material ranged from the new album, Thick As A Brick and Aqualung. Audience reaction was unbelievable. A Passion Play alone got close to a ten minute standing ovation. When the concert ended with "Aqualung", they got an even longer standing ovation.

Looking back at the concert, as well as the album, I can't help but cry out in anger against the cheap hatchet job of reviewing A Passion Play. Reviews of the album and stage show have been running about 75 per cent against it. It seems like the critics decided that it's "Gang Up On Tull Day". Radio stations have been acting like it didn't exist. In England, all five major trade magazines gave bad reviews. It's not that I'm against criticism, but it looks like critics didn't care about seriously reviewing it.

A major problem I can see in its acceptence is the huge critical and commercial success of Thick As A Brick. Brick absolutely bowled over the critics. They deemed it a breakthrough towards serious and complex rock compositions. With A Passion Play, reviewers seemed bent on not giving it the time of day. There's an idea tossed around that when a group makes a fantastic album the following disc will not be as good. Hence, the reviewer tends to be already against it even before it's released. If they kept they're minds open about it, maybe Passion would have had a fighting chance.

Tull put on a great show. The band's performance was flawless.

He ranted and raved, moving around like the mad looney he's always been. The other band members turned in stellar performances also.

Unfortunately this article comes a little late. Jethro Tull has canceled all concert dates after September 29th. (This makes Boston the last place Tull will play and should be quite a concert) If Tull freaks are lucky, Anderson might decide to go on the road again — but that's at least two years away. All the critical abuse heaped upon A Passion Play and especially Anderson has affected the band in the worst way. Ian is one of rock's few performers who takes his work seriously. When he gets constantly shot down without deserving it, he can no longer perform with the confidence that the audience will enjoy it. Now you may call quitting the road a copout, but would you continue without being able to no longer give 100 percent? It isn't fair to the ticket buyer and the performers. Besides, giving a slipshod concert would finally give the reviewers what they wanted. Perhaps a quote written by a reader taken from Melody Maker, one of the worst critics, best describes my feelings and possibly the whole situation; "Sure you have the right to critize, but others have the right to listen and enjoy and the excessive criticism has turned sour and robbed us of that right."

My Maria by B.W. Stevenson

If you were mislead by "Shambala" or "My Maria" and were moved to buy B.W. Stevenson's new album and are now asking yourself why, you're not alone. Take the case of Debbie, who wandered into my room after having the album on for only five minutes, made an unusually grotesque face, and asked, "Who's that?" She was not alone in her reaction.

Side A is made up mostly of twangy guitars, tired, worn out lyrics, and music so repititious it's almost sickening. "Shambala" starts side B, and surprisingly enough the album does get better. It ends with a beautiful one minute and thirty-two second song called "Pass This Way" that sounds very much like James Taylor.

My advice would be to put two albums on your stereo, the first being B.W. Stevenson, the second an album of your choice. Listen to My Maria and just as the last notes are fading; reject.

Hard Nose The Highway - Van Morrison (Warners). His summer concert in Lenox being a qualified delight, with "Moving" Van parading most of the tunes from this album out for first-time inspection, things looked very hopeful indeed in regards to this record. But somehow things don't shine, don't dazzle as much on here as on the usual Morrison release. However, criticising Van comes from the highest standards, and Hard Nose still makes 95 per cent of the other current releases look sick. Check out "Snow In San Anselmo". B minus

John Entwistle's Rigor Mortis Sets In (MCA). There are few finer rock bass players than the Who's John Alec Entwistle. While The Who have been biding their time, John's been busy with three 'solo' albums. This one has good old rock 'n' roll in its veins, and features Tony Ashton leading Rigor Mortis in what sounds like a real back-up band instead of merely interested session men. Class of the record are "Made In Japan", "Big Black Cadillac" and a had-to-be version of "Mr. Bass Man". B plus

The Uprooted Tree

by Moe DePalma

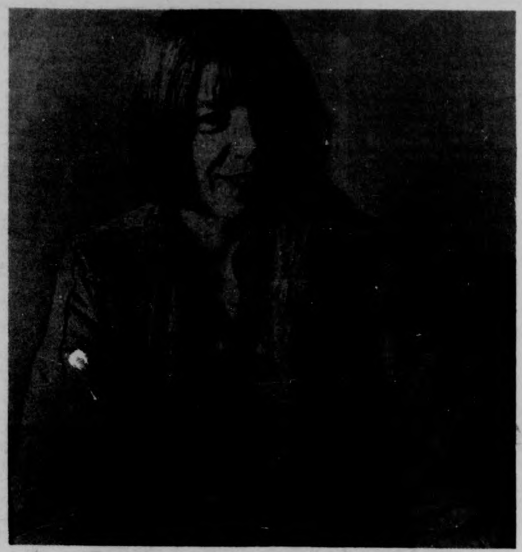
Once upon a time, when I was but a young girl, some transient second cousin on his way from New York to Florida made a three day pit stop at my house. After badgering him incessantly for about three hours one night on an essay I was writing for Sister Marie (Bulldog) Francis entitled Goldfish Are A Girls Best Friend, he told me I had no creative talents. And besides the fact that I could not spell and could not end a sentence I also did not use capital letters. Bulldog had given me three F's and one D on my previous four essays, Mary, Joseph and Me, The Little Deadman on a Stick, Camp Takawita (Debunking the Myth), and Trixie Belden Changed My Life, and I was determined to finally create my masterpiece. Cousin Jerome ended up writing a wonderful expose about my facetious goldfish and I received B-much better. However Jerome the transient second cousin did me a much bigger favor than just getting back into Sister Marie Francis' graces, he left behind three Betty and Veronica comic books which kept me amused for a good half hour and a shredded copy of The Village Voice. It was fun looking through the newspaper, there was a music review of Ella Fitzgerald at the Palace and at the time Ella Fitzgerald at the Palace and at the time Ella and Fabian were my number one choices for favorite female and male vocalists. I also scanned through a column by Jill Johnston. It was written without any capital letters, in long rambling sentences that never seemed to end. It came as a shock. All the things the nuns had been giving me F's for were there, written by someone famous enough to have a columm in a real New York newspaper.

My next essay, the pigeon, the pauper, the park, was pure Jill Johnston, my new idol. I got another F and a little note on the top of the page asking — what happened? So Jill Johnston was chopped out of my life as quickly as she had entered.

Suddenly I was a sophomore in high school and in a creative writing class. Sister James Margarite approved of my strange way with words and gave me solid B's. That was a start. That same year I ventured to New York City for a student tour of the United Nations. It wasn't a bad trip, I got to smoke cigarettes on the bus and see the Easter pageant at Radio City. On one corner newsstand, while searching for a new Betty and Veronica comic book I discovered once again The Village Voice. Turning to Jill Johnston's column it was more positive reinforcement for my daring style of writing. However living in Milford Massachusetts it was difficult to find the Voice and, though I could not read it every week, Jill Johnston and her non use of structure held a warm place in my writing hand for many years.

Ultimately, I was here at UMass, reading the Village Voice every week, writing crazy things for Rhetoric and creative writing classes and becoming involved with The Women's Movement. Jill Johnston again became a very special person in my life. As a writer she was important. She had gone from a theater critic and dance critic in writing personal ideas which were important, innovative and radical. Her politics of being a radical feminist dyke also intrigued me. Once I wrote a paper for a friend, the assignment being to review a movie written in the style of some other critic, and I imitated her. My friend received an A- very good and I felt like cousin Jerome and the goldfish. I also felt this strange sensation of accomplishment and envy of Jill Johnston.



— "tall and thin, yet seemingly powerful"

About two weeks ago I discovered that the university was presenting her as a DVP. I also found out that there was going to be a dinner for her at the Southwest Women's Center before the lecture and finagled myself an invitation. That entire day I was in a state of nervous tension mingled with excitement. I had been told that she was a very strange woman, that she didn't like very many people, that she was viscious and sarcastic, that she was a man trapped inside a woman's body, and much more confidential information.

The Women's Center that evening was in a flurry of preparation and excitement. Every time the door opened I jumped anticipating her entrance. Finally she walked in and was greeted by this strange silence that overcame all present. I sat with my mouth open as she was everything that I had expected and more. She was dressed in basic color coordinated faded blue denim, tee shirt, work boots and some sort of chained medallion with attachments hanging from her neck. She was the ultimate hard assed dyke.

Those women in the room who knew her were at her side first, catching up on old times, renewing friendships past and pouring wine. Jill then glanced around the room and leaping toward strangers one by one introducing herself and saying something either important, radical or innovative . . All this time I was trembling in some dark corner trying to think of something important, radical and innovative to slap on her all at once and then drawing a complete blank, slipping further into darkness hoping that she wouldn't notice me. Staring at her all this time she finally caught my eye and dashed over, hand extended and said, "You look familiar, don't I know you?" Grasping for a word or two and being unable she took my hand, "Hi. I'm Jill Johnston, where do I know you from?" All at once I had this strange sensation that some sort of magical ESP was at work, that because I had felt as if I had known her for the past eight years she too knew me. I finally managed to syncronize my lips and voice and reply, "I'm Moe DePalma". Again she exclaimed that she knew me, and even the name sounded familiar. So I asked her if she had ever read Poor Richards', as my name had been tossed around and played with quite a bit and many people who claim they know me are familiar with the name. But she couldn't place the name with the face, nor with the paper.

I'm sure that she said absolutely wonderful things to me but I was so involved with the fact that Jill Johnston was shaking my hand and talking to me it passed right over. Her physical presence was amazing, she is a very tall thin yet seemingly strong powerful woman. Her hand felt queerly small and frail in mine and her voice not half as deep as I had expected. The rest of the dinner was wild. I watched her do such strange things as fall down, freak out over the fact that a feminist course was being taught in an adjoining room, spill hot coffee down her arm and not even wince, that I had an alligator pocketbook, and she also had pen and paper available to jot down clever statements women all around her were making.

At about a quarter to eight we all set out for the Student Union to hear her speak. It marked the end of a small group environment but without regret, for I had finally met one of my idols and it was wonderful.

What A Film Co-op Can Do For You

Marian Prokop

"The task I am trying to achieve is to make you see."
-D. W. Griffith

With the cost of living what it is today and the lack of good movies available in this area, the avid film-goer has quite a predicament. Starved for films that will appease his insatiable appetite for the cinema, but lacking the finances to get them, he searches for the means to fulfill his need. Thanks to the inventiveness of an organization called the Amherst Film Cooperative, that outlet has been found.

To my surprise, it was founded only last year and despite some problems in business and management, it has managed to gather an impressive variety of movies. Their main reason for being is to provide movielovers the opportunity to see films not usually available in this area at a reasonable cost. This price is $6.00 for new members and $5.00 for charter members (if you belonged last year you're a charter member) and Southwest students, which comes out to a little more than 20 cents a flick. Let's face it, you're not going to find good entertainment at that price very often. But if you're not a member, the films are 75 cents each, so in the long run, it's better to shell out the 5 or 6 bucks in the beginning which makes things better for you and the Coop because you get more movies for less money and the Coop (of which you are now a part) comes closer to some form of financial security.

This semester, a few series are being offered on several subjects: American satirical directors, Hepburn and Deitrich, Chaplin classics, and a miscellany of other films with emphasis on American movies.

The collection on satirical directors started off with the romantic comedies of Preston Sturges, The Miracles at Morgan's Creek, Palm Beach Story, and Hail, the Conquering Hero, but they've already been shown (touch luck for you) and starting on Sunday will be some vintage Billy Wilder movies, The Major and the Minor and The Seven Year Itch starring Marilyn Monroe. The last director of this series is Ernst Lubitsch who is represented by Ninotchka with Greta Garbo in her first comic role, and To Be or Not To Be starring Jack Benny and Carole Lombard.

The Star series has features by two actresses of unmitigated elegance: Marlene Dietrich and Katherine Hepburn. The Dietrich films include two directed by Josef von Sternberg, The Scarlett Empress and Shanghai Express, and Destry Rides Again with James Stewart. Three super Hepburn movies are also being shown, Bill of divorcement, Sylvia Scarlett, and the classic Tracy-Hepburn confrontation in Adam's Rib with screenplay by Ruth Gordon and Garson Kanin. All three were directed by George Cukor.

The Chaplin classics are a series of rarely seen feature films which Chaplin produced between 1918 and 1957. They include, The Kid (with little Jackie Coogan), The Idle Class, The Chaplin Review (Shoulder Arms, The Pilgrim and A Dog's Life), City Lights, The Great Dictator, and Monsieur Verdoux. In all these movies, Chaplin is the writer, producer, director, star, and even music composer. These movies are under a different subscription series and therefore exclusive of the regular schedule which means that you have to get a separate ticket. Film Coop members get in for the low price of $3.75 for a series ticket and $6.25 for everybody else. Individual showings are a buck each.

Every Thursday night is freebie night, sponsored by the Coop. This is a selection of some of the finest comedy and drama of the silent screen era. Already shown were The Black Pirate with Douglas Fairbanks Sr., Keaton's College, Lon Chaney in The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and Keaton's Cops.

Next week is the Russian classic, Potemkin directed by Sergei Eisenstein. Future showings will include D.W. Griffith's masterpiece, Intolerance, Douglas Fairbanks in Matrimaniac, Fritz Lang's Spies, Buster Keaton comic epic, The General, and a few others.

The rest of the movies were selected for both their craftsmanship and their ability to entertain. They range from Ford's The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance to Fellini's The Clowns.

Since this organization is a cooperative, members are encouraged to get involved in its operations. This can be anything from putting up posters to selling tickets. They also publish a Coop newsletter and film notes for most programs. For the community, they provide the means for movies to be shown at nursing homes. If you are a filmmaker, they offer their services as a showcase for your films along with the regular program. If there happens to be a movie that you would like to see, but haven't been able to find or would just like to see again, the Coop may be able to show it.

Projects for the future? Nothing definite because the selection of films is made by the members, but plans are being made, hopefully, for a Buster Keaton series and a selection of new, experimental movies. Attempts were made last year for a women's film series but since no women were on the board of directors, the project was dropped. However, if there is popular support, it may be revived again.

As it stands, The Amherst Film Coop provides the means to see good movies cheaply. It provides film notes for most movies, occasional free flicks, and enthusiasm for new members and new ideas. What more could a movie lover want?

DEAD: "Diana Sands, Who's That?"

By Aishah Raman

(Editor's Note: Aishah Ramah is coordinator of the Black Cultural Center at UMass)

Diana Sands, the Black actress whose most famous role was the sister in "A Raisin in the Sun" died Friday night of cancer at the age of 39.

It became publicly known three weeks ago that Ms. Sands was seriously ill when she was forced to withdraw while filming "Claude", a Third World Cinema project co-starring James Earl Jones and directed by Ossie Davis.

Ms. Sands' career began long before the emergence of "Black Theatre" in America and she was forced to face the difficult task of trying to make a living in the theatre while also trying to maintain her racial integrity and dignity.

The span of this actress's range was stupendous. She could play a comic role one minute and the next minute give a soul shaking performance as the martyred Joan of Arc in the title role of St. Joan. Even the racist tastemakers (critics) had to acknowledge her great talent and she received the Outer Critics Award in 1959, the International Arts Award in 1961, the Theatre World Award in 1963 and the Obie in 1964.

If Ms. Sands had been a different color she would have been acclaimed one of the great ladies of the American stage. Instead, at the mention of her death Black students can unashamedly ask, "Diana Sands, who's that?" Because of the dearth of decent roles for talented Black actresses to play, because of the very, very racist nature of American theatre, Diana Sands was a great artist, a true star, whose light was never allowed to shine its brightest best.

PETE AND GLADYS WITH FANGS

By Robert Nesti
Blume In Love

Written and directed by Paul Mazursky; featuring George Segal, Susan Anspach, and Kris Kristofferson.

Stephen Blume, bearded, brooding, sits on a Venetian terrace and slips deep in reverie about love and its consequences. The camera supplies illustrations: young lovers stroll aimlessly, dogs copulate, an aging, leering homosexual, who could double for Bela Lugosi, gawks at a pretty young man in a tasteless paroday of "Death In Venice." Writer-director Paul Mazursky scrapes the dregs of contemporary social satire and serves them with a chaser. The film's a tale of unrequitted love told in a confusing flashback style; the New Wave comes to Malibu Beach. Nina Blume finds her husband sleeping with his secretary and promptly leaves him. After their divorce he desperately tries to win her back. The idea suggests those, delicate, scatterbrain comedies of the Thirties filled with subsiduary characters whose eccentricities were irresistable. In "Blume In Love" the characters appear to have visciously cut from molds of current stereotypes--leer at the idiots. The film more suggest a malicious television situation comedy, sort of "Pete and Gladys" with fangs, and watch for its bite.

A bad film usually slips the mind; it isn't enjoyable but at least evaporates quickly. An offensive film lingers. Very few films fill this niche: "Straw Dogs" comes to mind, as does "Oklahoma Crude" or "Deliverance"--films that hit you like a bad summer cold which you never shake. "Blume In Love" offends you with the cheerful way its director and scriptwriter chooses to whittle his characters into brittle caricature. It's the world as viewed by the Southern Californian White Male, filled with a snide wit and temperament. An acquaintance once said: "She may be a woman but she'll always be my girl," and this attitude seems to be Mazursky, and his film's alter-ego Blume. Nina Blume has been cited by a number of critics as being the most liberated woman in any American film released this year. If this is liberation, set the table dear. Nina Blume presents compact mirror reflecting the conflicting male egos she attaches herself with. During the early portions of the film she scowls, once she leaves her husband and settles down with Elmo, a drifting beat type, she's been lobotomized.

...."The bloom is gone from this flower child..." Susan Anspach, George Segal, and Kris Kristofferson.

the two stereotypes Mazursky inflicts upon woman: first the neurotic competitor, the underachiever who bums out, gets high, dances on the ceiling and becomes the benign puppy dog bringing the slippers and the pot to the feet of her smiling old man. Nina Blume doesn't even exist as a thinking individual, she's a

The film is structured in flashbacks between Venice, Italy where Blume sits and tells his story, and Venice, California, where his marriage and divorce took place. If that coincidence seems a bit too tight for comfort, then the rest of it may strangle your aesthetic sensibilities. The flashbacks are only confusing: the only constant in all this transalantic footage is Blume's facial hair. In Venice, Italy he has a beard, having become hip; in Venice, California he was a goofy divorce lawyer catering to the whims of bloated, miserable woman like Shelley Winters, who is wasted in a bit but does breath life into one funny line. Chances are despite the awareness Blume acquires in terms of himself and with his wife, he will return to California at the film's end and cater to the whims of more spoiled types. The experience is but a whim in these character's lives. Part of the confusion with the flashbacks is that the Blume of the Past seems no different than the Blume of the Present. The central male oriented attitude is constant throughout. It reaches its moment of finest expression when Blume comes back to his home, becomes quite drunk, and rapes Nina. It appears to be the only way a selfish oaf like Blume can deal with a situation in which he's not in control: take it. Mazursky, though, slips this swill into even a lower gear when he makes it appear as if Nina is enjoying the assault. It's like finding pleasure in being run over by a bulldozer.

The child of this liason turns up to be the glue between the quarrelling parents. Blume convinces Nina of her love after Elmo drifts away, returns to her husband as the strains of Wagner's Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde" fill the Venetian square. Talk about piffling endings--Doris Day never had it so good. In fact the spirit of Doris Day and Rock Hudson pervades the film. If you've ever wondered what has happened to the glossy Ross Hunter sex romances which flourished a decade ago, don't look too far--it's here. The characters talk more seriously and there's a feeling people confuse with frankness happening on the screen, but it's not very real nor very funny. Mazursky just isn't funny. He takes human types and makes them unrecognizable grotesque and his rapport with actors appears to be limited to controlling facial expressions. George Segal, a fine and dence actor, looks desperate and lost much of the time. As if he were looking for something humorous to grab onto. Susan Anspach as Nina hasn't much to do but make like a chamelion for the pleasure of her male company, but her guitar rendition of "You Got A Friend" is excrutiating. KrisiKristofferson as Elmo can do nothing but evoke the image of the individual you completely regretted picking up hitchiking. The bloom Is gone from this flower child, as it does this picture, very, very quickly.

BANG THE DRUM SLOWLY

Perhaps the best received film of recent months; a sentimental baseball story with Robert DeNiro and Michael Moriarty. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

BLUME IN LOVE

Stephen Blume, bearded and brooding, sits in a Venetian cafe and tells the story of his failed marriage and his undying devotion to his former wife. She should be so lucky. As played by Susan Anchpach this woman is the Southern Californian chauvinist's ideal of a liberated woman; the kind who seems possessed by the personality of her current "old man". In the film she moves from goofy neurotic to obnoxiously benign when she leaves her husband, played by George Segal, and moves in with a hippie drifter, played by Kris Kristofferson. Writer — director Paul Mazursky's attempt at a lovely contemporary fable turns into a maleovelent nightmare, mostly because of the contemptuous way he portrays characters and situations. A film which goes beyond simply being insipid to being vulgar. If you've ever wondered what ever happened to the Doris Day — Rock Hudson sex comedies of a decade ago, it's here only supposedly liberated. Academy of Music, Northampton; Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

THE CANDIDATE (1972)

Certainly one of last year's least satisfying films. Director Michael Ritchie attempts a semi-documentary stylization of the rise of a Kennedy-type politician in California. He provides everything except the necessary life. Tepid stuff, with a performance by Robert Redford which makes you wonder whether euthenasea hasn't been condoned by film directors. Is politics this boring? Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, September 29, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE COCONUTS (1930)

The Marx Brothers first screen comedy has an arch and static quality, but is a supreme showcase of the quartet's numerous comic skills. Adapted from their Broadway success, with a score by Irving Berlin and featuring Kay Francis as the slinky lady the Brothers outwit. Lecture Room One, Amherst College, Friday, September 28, 7:30 and 10 and Sunday, September 30,9.)

DUCK SOUP (1933)

The Marx Brothers on war and a devistating satire, perhaps their finest film. Harpo does a Paul Revere routine as he seduces a beautiful woman; Groucho calls for world aid and a menagerie answer and constantly baffles Margaret Dumont, as a millionairess. The film was banned by Mussolini and was a box office bomb. Groucho calls it their "craziest" film. Mahar, Friday, September 28, 7, 8:30, and 10.

FRIENDS OF EDDIE COYLE

Robert Mitchum as a small time hood on the run. A gritty, knock-a-bout melodrama, filmed in and around Boston. Mitchum gives a much regarded performance and many critics have raved, one even calling it the best American film so far this year. With Peter Boyle. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

PUTNEY SWOPE (1968)

Robert Downey's satire on Madison Avenue explores the possibilities of a black takeover of an advertising agency. Downey is filmmaker with drive and flair and the film has a caustic color, it also doesn't really work and putters out towards its end. Its television commercials are gems. Mahar, Saturday, September 29, 7, 9, and 11.

WONDERWORLD

With Yol Brynner. Showcase Cinemas

FROM HERE TO ETERNITY (1953)

This adaption of a best-selling novel was an enormous financial success and won eight Oscars and several other awards. Though intended as an attack on the U.S. Army, it is neither powerful nor truly critical. It marks something of a turning point in Zinnemann's career: formerly a fairly good director, from this point on he played the game according to the Hollywood rules. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke, Thursday, October 4, 7:30.

Putney Swope sees to it his clients get maximum exposure.

HEAVY TRAFFIC

The second full length cartoon feature by the makers of "Fritz The Cat". A brutal, often offensive cross — section of urban living whose gritiness is compensated by its strong evocation of city living. Striking use of interplay between real life situations and its cartoon complement. The adventures of a young Jewish boy in New York which no social type rudely presented. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

KING OF HEARTS (1964)

Philippe DeBroca's lovely gossamar fantasy about the illusion of sanity in the world. It all takes place in a lovely French village during the First World War and stars Alan Bates. The film has an unbelievable rapport with college audiences — it has been running for more than two years at a Cambridge theater and often is discussed as one of the finest films ever made by students, certainly a good deal of fun. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

JOE KIDD (1972)

With Clint Eastwood. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, October 3, 7 and 9.

LADY SINGS THE BLUES (1972)

The film biography of the popular pop singer from the Thirties and Forties Billie Holiday is mounted with care and style in this enjoyable throwback to the three-handkerchief Hollywood bio's of the Fifties. It is reminiscent of I'll Cry Tomorrow and The Helen Morgan Story in its tragic story of an entertainer who slowly destroys herself from problems not truly her own doing its fascinating performance by the female star. A star is born in Diana Ross who may not be Billie Holiday, she is a pop singer not a song stylist as Ms. Holiday was, but is an enchanting screen personality. What is best about her performance is that we are never reminded that Ms. Ross was once the queen of Motown. She performs with a spontaneity in the early sections then admirably the intensity of Ms. Holiday's struggle with heroin. Her acting is the film's best point. Her singing is good, it has a tight, raspy, sensuous quality; but it doesn't suggest Billie Holiday's reading of a song. Diana Ross sings all the Holiday standards, but you have to return to the originals for their definitive interpretation. Director Sidney Furie makes the entire mess very agreeable and, in the end when Ms. Holiday stands on the Carnegie Hall stage quite moving. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

LAURA (1944)

Considered by many to be Otto Preminger's finest film and one whose authorship is in doubt. Rouben Mamoulian claims "I prepared Laura, cast it, directed some of it, and Otto Preminger, who was its producer, decided to take over the shooting... The world of Laura is quite different from that of the conventional American thriller: it is a world of rich apartments, elegance, sophistication, and taste. But the script, and Preminger's typically detached direction, turn the conventions inside out and present a corrosive portrait of greed and cruelty. In fact, it seems that Preminger (and perhaps Mamoulian?) brought to the film the sense of atmosphere and subtle characterizations typical of central European theater. Clifton Webb, as the cynical columnist turned jealous killer, gives one of his best performances. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, October 3, 7:00.

THE MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOT (1969)

A disasterous adaptation of the Giraudoux comedy about the benefits of madness upon the world. Katherine Hepburn plays the madwoman and even the casting of this great star cannot save this Bryan Forbes all star extravaganza from being abomonable. With Danny Kaye, whose performance may ruin his future career, and Giuletta Massina, whose mugging hurts. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, September 29, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE OTHER (1972)

Tom Tyron's silly book about mysticism, gothic terror, and twins at play rural Connecticut during the Thirties is turned into a miserable film by Robert Mulligan. Tyron's trick story has the insight of a three year old's card tricks and is about as enjoyable to watch. Sometime, someone somewhere will make a worse film, but that remains to be seen. Poor Uta Hagen makes a film debut as the strange grandmother which remains an exacting instance of misusing a fine talent. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, September 30, 7 and 9.

NORTH BY NORTHWEST (1959)

The professor, a CIA agent, invents a mythical spy to force the hand of a foreign spy. An advertising executive, Thornhill, mistaken for the professor, is hunted across the USA and gets involved with a girl before the final showdown. North by Northwest is not dissimilar in its shape to The 39 Steps and Saboteur. Its fantastic chase across America, its deft wit, and its spirited style make this one of Hitchcock's best Hollywood films. Best known sequences: the hero lured to a remote Indiana prairie and attacked by a biplane "crop-dusting where there ain't no crops", the climax on Mount Rushmore with the chase and fight on the gigantic sculptured faces of American presidents. Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, October 3.

THE PUBLIC ENEMY (1931)

Tom Powers, (James Cagney) a boy from a middle-class family, is excited by the lures of saloons and pool rooms and becomes a petty crook as an adolescent. Under the guidance of a local gangster, he eventually graduates into organized robbery and the liquor racket. His progress is watched with dismay by his mother (Mercer). He becomes very successful, lives a high life with his women (Harlow, Blondell) in luxurious apartments, but in the end is killed by rival gangsters and his corpse is delivered to his mother's doorstep. One of the most successful of the early gangster films, which, depite its overall dated air, still retains some powerful sequences: the opening pan establishing the boy's environment; the piano player "hero" teaching the boys dirty songs; the final gun battle; the corpse falling in through the opened doorway, not to mention the famous scene where Cagney pushes a grapefruit into the face of the mistress who is boring him. The Globe, Northampton.

NANOOK OF THE NORTH (1920-1921)

The life of an Eskimo, Nanook, his wife Nyla, and their children. Director Robert Flaherty defined his approach after making this film: "I think it is essential to work with unfamiliar material among peoples whose way of life is completely different from ours. If the theme is a new one, the camera can be used to record the most simple effects — and these are often the best. That is why I have taken an ethnological approach. I am convinced it is possible to discover a grace, a dignity, a culture, a refinement among peoples who have been placed by circumstances outside the mainstream. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, Tuesday, October 2, 7:30.

OKLAHOMA CRUDE

Along with "Blume In Love", our pick for the worst picture released so far this year. Faye Dunaway plays an enterprising young woman in the Southwest who attempts to make her own killing in the male oriented oil world of Texas. George C. Scott is her adversary. Stanley Kramer directs in a deliberately old-fashioned way, with gushing oilwells underscoring the sexual significance, but he'd hip enough to have his leading lady talk dirty, not to anyone's pleasure. Palace Cinema, West Springfield.

Wellman Document Examined

By STEVE TETREAULT

The University Governance Document is going to be totally successful, and will hail a new phase in UMass rule. Knock on wood. Better knock twice.

The controversial plan, more widely known as The Wellman Document, was passed by the Board of Trustees last spring, and although people associated with it insist that it's too early to judge effectiveness, fingers are being crossed.

In a nutshell, the document sets up areas of decision making priority for students, faculty, and administration. Once a body makes a proposal in its designated area, the proposal is brought to the Chancellor's office. From there the office has seventy days to either disapprove the measure or send it back for polishing. The reasons for rejection must be in writing. If no action is taken within the seventy days, the proposal becomes policy.

Though all the rosy on-the-record predictions say that the document will be a big success, off-record conversation indicates that the document might have to struggle in order to be totally effective.

First of all, the document has no "official" power, and the people involved are, for the most part, acting in good faith. Under Massachusetts laws, the board of Trustees has ultimate legal power. Indeed, the first sentence of the document reads, "The Board of Trustees has all authority, responsibility, rights, privileges, power responsibility, rights, privileges, powers and duties of organization and government."

Therefore, the Board has full legal right to back out of its part of the document at any time. But they wont. To do so would be political suicide. "There would be a war if the Board reneged," one observer told the Collegian.

However, to take that point a step further, one wonders what would have happened if the Board had voted down the proposed plan. To turn down a proposal that would guarantee "equal rights," at least in word, to students and faculty would look bad indeed. In other words, it seems to some at least, that the Board's hands were tied.

It is fact that the Board was opposed to the initial ideas of the document. The Study Group for Review of University Government (which was the study group's official name) had to fight tooth and nail for consideration of the plan. There was fear on the part of several Trustees that the Board would play a less significant role in decision making. In other words, power would be reduced. "I was surprised that the plan got through in the first place," said a member of the Student Senate.

But if some groups involved cannot realistically back out of the deal, there are ways of reducing its effectiveness. Last week, Chancellor Bromery suggested that an advisory board be set up in order to define what areas fall under the jurisdiction of whom. One observer remarked that most areas are clearly self-defined, with only a few isolated problem cases, such as the parking problem. Another individual wondered whether the advisory board wasn't just another roll of red tape. Any area which can't be clearly defined will be taken to a Trustee meeting, where representatives from all three UMass campuses will discuss the problem.

The last paragraph of the document provides a review clause which states that after two years, the parties concerced will evaluate the effectiveness of the document, what to change, and whether to continue. Considering the politics involved in the situation right now, what are the chances that the document will be successful? "The Trustees are good people," said one person, tongue in cheek, to which another added, "Christ, let's hope so."

Southwest-What Else Could You Call It?

By SHERMAN BOYSON

If you ever wanted to find out why Southwest is called a zoo, then you should have been down here the night that Billie Jean King beat Bobby whats-his-name. The animals were uncaged and making full use of the three essential things of life here at UMASS-water, fire, and toilet paper.

Some of the men (women call them chauvinists) of the community were slightly upset at the trouncing that Ms. King gave to Mr. Riggs. Kennedy, basically a male dorm, started to proclaim their opinion of Billie Jean King with words that my mother never taught me. Collidge tower, Kennedy's female counterpart, joined in with a similar opinion for Bobby Riggs. This was followed by streamers of toiled paper sailing across from one dorm to the other.

The sight from below the two towers was nothing less than spectular. With the aid of a strong wind, the toilet paper was flying out from the dorms until let go. At that point a spotlight from Kennedy's fifth floor followed the streamer's flight to earth. The courtyard at the bottom had the look of a giant toilet bowl.

Meanwhile John Adams (male) and John Quincy Adams (female) were having a similar discussion on the merits of the two tennis players. The language got too much for the girls in JQA, so a fire hose from the Adams tower helped to cool them down. Then someone from coed Washington tower got a loudspeaker going to help down-grade Billie Jean. Even though Adams and the guy from Washington were in agreement about the merits of Ms. King, it turned into a swearing contest to determine which dorm was the better one.

Meanwhile, from the nineteenth floor of Washington, a fire could be seen burning in front of Kennedy. One could only assume that Billie Jean was going up in effigy. In reality, some of the streamers of toilet paper were now being lit before they were let go. When I finally stopped observing about one-thirty, Adams and JQA were still going at it, with an occasional cherry bomb thrown for emphasis.

UMass Sociology Major Publishes Educational Series

Mr. Dustin Harris believes that the "student game" directs school psychologists to many problems and deficiencies of the students....

By DAVE GREENSLIT

Beginning in October, Instructor magazine will publish a series of articles written by a UMass sociology major on student teaching.

Dunstan Harris, who is now doing post-practical work in the School of Education, wrote the series after student teaching in the Compton-Watts area of Los Angeles. He taught social studies to elementary and high school students.

While in Compton-Watts, Harris said he became concerned with the white orientation of school literature, and now seeks to "alter that image." He said writing "came as an accident because of my sociological background," and he now sees it as "an integral part" of his goal to become "proficient in urban sociology."

Harris said he enjoyed his teaching internship and, as a "momento" of his stay in Compton-Watts, devised what he calls "the student game." This is a chart with a series of questions and answers.

As an example, Harris said that students were shown pictures of a Cadillac and a Toyota and asked to make a choice. One hundred per cent chose the Cadillac. This, he said, reflects how ghetto children admire the status of "John the Pimp" on the block. The instructor will then point out the economic advantages of driving a Toyota, as well as the problems involved in owning and driving a "status" car, he said.

Another question dealt with student attitudes toward the local police. Once problems concerning the police were in the open, Harris said the school then arranged for a local policeman to visit the class and talk about the problems with students.

The "student game" directs school psychologists to many problems and diffiencies of the students, according to Harris. He added that it leads to student involvement in such issues as family structure and law and order. He said students also find the "game" interesting.

Harris was born in Jamaica and has been in the United States for 10 years. Although he graduated from business school in New York, his interest in people and "extreme fondness of kids" brought him to UMass and sociology. He earned his bachelor's degree in two years.

His plans include "fictionalizing his experiences" to present his journal in book form. Harris said this will include his transition from Jamaican to American.

Commuter Senate Meets

By SCOTT KATOR

As the week ended, leaders of the newly formed, commuter initiated, Unity Slate met in the Campus Center to discuss prospects for tomorrow's Senate elections. 32 seats in the 120 seat Senate had not been filed for on Thursday and many of the rest were uncontested. Consequently, nominations were extended until 5 p.m. Friday in an attempt to fill vacancies.

Unity Slate proponents, working to fill these spots, found it slow going. As John O'Keefe stated, many students said they were too busy to run, but, if the Senate got something going, they would support it. The Slate is a group of candidates adhering to a set of proposals on economic and political issues concerning UMass and students as an independent segment of Society. Among the main issues on their platform are restoration and expansion of bus service, equal pay for student workers, opposition to tuition , rent, and parking hikes, a university boycott of "scab" grapes and lettuce, optional meal ticket plans and, generally "greater individual control over the learning process" at UMass.

As Alwin Schmidt describes it "The Unity Slate Platform reflects the basic 'bread and butter' needs of all the students, which have long been neglected. The student body must assert itself and exercise more control over the decisions that directly affect them and the quality of their education."

John Pepi, another member, sees UMass badly divided on financial, racial, and sexual lines. "As the situation outside grows worse people turn inward." Smokey Singleton agreed saying "no one can do it themselves. You have to work on your community while you work on yourself."

The Slate hopes to pass most of their proposals soon after the new Senate convenes since, as they see it, the great majority of students are for them. Giving substance to any demands the Senate might make, however, requires student support and participation, something many find conspicuously absent at UMass.

Faculty Newspaper

A News Alternative

HUGH OWEN

A new faculty newspaper, primarily an extension of the present faculty bulletin, is currently being planned by Whitmore as an alternative to the Collegian in reporting to the faculty and staff of UMass.

The paper is in the planning stage at present. No funds as yet allocated, nor any arbitrary date set for initial publication. The present newspaper shortage and lack of a managing editor and staff were a few of the reasons cited by Ms. Katy Gilmore, proposed editor of the newspaper, for the delay in the newspaper's publication.

Initial publication is planned for once every three weeks, then once a week as the staff becomes more experienced.

Grad students, work-study students, and possibly undergrads will be hired as reporters for the newspaper.

Unlike the failure met with the last time the administration attempted to publish a newspaper, Ms. Gilmore expects this paper to be successful. According to Ms. Gilmore the last attempt failed due to its dictation by university policy and lack of any informative reporting.

"This paper," said Ms. Gilmore, "will be a bona fide paper reporting the news relevant to the staff, factually and accurately, not merely an extension of university policy."

Where Do They All Go Home To?

By LINDA J. LEMKIN

Where are the 21,500 students registered at UMass living this fall?

According to Bruce Cochrane of the Housing office, 7,500 undergraduates and 3,700 graduates are now living off-campus, as opposed to 11,300 undergrads and 290 grads living in the UMass dorms.

In a recent MDC interview, Cochrane stated the major problem students find with off-campus housing is the price ranges of the Amherst apartments. The most expensive ones are still vacant, while the less expensive ones have waiting lists. Bugs and thin walls have been constant sources of complaints in many apartment complexes. However, many students feel that these conditions far outweigh other problems and hassles involved in dormitory life.

Another problem students encounter is finding roommates on a large campus for the many new and old students who wish to share apartments.

The dorms seem quiet, so far this year except for the usual noise which always comes from Southwest. There have been no drug raids or bomb scares as yet. Placement of students has been solved for the fall semester.

According to the Housing Office, there have been no major complaints from the dorms other than minor discomforts from the centralized heating system, which is difficult to control.

It appears that all is quiet, the first month of this semester; anyway. But, according to one dorm student, if only the dining commons would close, there would be no problems at all!

State Gets Picasso Works

MOUGINS, France (AP)-Pablo Picasso's priceless collection of paintings by modern masters has been formally acquired by the state.

Jean Chatelain, director of French museums, signed the documents handing over the collection with Picasso's heirs at the painter's home in this Riviera village late last week, it was learned Sunday.

Picasso stipulated that the collection be kept intact and exhibited as a whole in the Louvre in Paris.

Contraceptive Clinic Offers Counseling And Care

By ROBERTA McCANN

The UMass Contraception Clinic, located on the second floor of the Infrimary, provides information, counseling and prescriptions for contraceptives for university women.

The philosophy of the clinic is to meet the needs of university women and to provide the necessary information so that a woman desiring contraception can decide on the method best suited to her needs.

The clinic handles between 72-78 new patients a week in addition to women returning to the clinic for routine pap tests, pelvic exams and refill prescriptions.

The services of the clinic are free. A woman pays only for the birth control device she selects.

Due to the lack of finances, in-depth statistical records on the number of women utilizing the clinic and contraception methods prescribed are not available.

However, a stock check at the infirmary pharmacy for September 1972 to May 1973 revealed the approximate sale of the following:

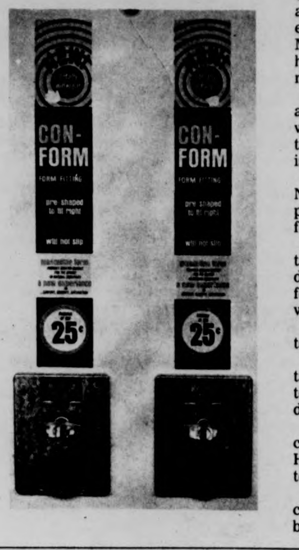
Contraceptive foam-180 units
Condoms-lubricated-9,972 units, regular-2,676 units
Diaphragms-350 units
Oral contraceptives-18,000 individual cycles
Interuterine devices-approximately 500

It should be noted that some students utilizing the pharmacy's low prices may not have been referred by the contraception clinic.

Doctor Daniel Clapp, one of the seven doctors on the clinic staff, noted the existance of peer pressure encouraging women to take oral contraceptives.

"We don't want to emphazise exclusive use of the pill.", said Dr. Clapp. He also, indicated a considerable trend of more women choosing the interuterine device many of whom had been using oral contraceptives.

A university woman desiring the services of the contraception clinic for the first time must attend an educational session. No appointment is necessary and men are welcome to attend. The educational sessions are held in Room 302 of the Infirmary on Mondays at 3:00, Tuesdays at 7:00 and Thursdays at 3:00. The hour long session includes a film relating various birth-control methods and counseling.



Internal examinations and prescriptions are available through appointment only. The Monday night clinic session handles women who desire oral contraceptives or diaphragms. I.U.D. insertions take place on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday night. The clinic is also open on Thursday afternoon.

Each night, two of the seven staff doctors are on duty. Women Nurse Practitioners are also available to give routine pap tests, pelvic exams, refill prescriptions, I.U.D. initial consultations and follow-up visits.

Women who desire an internal examination without contraception can use the facilities of the clinic. However, there is a difference of opinion over whether or not a pap smear is necessary for young women. The percentage of cancer positive pap smears in women under 25 is very small.

Dr. Clapp encourages women at the university to have an internal examination at least once while at UMass.

Some doctors at the contraception clinic do prescribe the controversial "morning-after pill". A woman desiring this pill should tell the appointment secretary so that she will be referred to a doctor who may prescribe it for her.

The contraception clinic also provides problem-pregnancy counseling. The health services fee does not cover an abortion. However, the UMass medical insurance will cover an abortion up to $125.

According to Dr. Clapp, "To my knowledge, there has been no criticism from parents or legislators about the services provided by the contraception clinic."

Being A Freshman

What A Horrible Disease

By SHERM BOYSON

"As ye sow, so shall ye reap". So goes the Bible. Well, you upperclassmen have been really getting down on us freshmen, and you'll get yours yet.

It started that day in Boyden Gym. You guys really had us set up. You stick us in this Bursar line filled with nothing but freshmen. After an hour or so of waiting, you discover that the line doesn't move. All the lines with seniors, juniors, and sophmores move, but not our's. After three hours of waiting, I walked away in disgust. But first, I decided to tell that teller off.

Ever wonder how some of those real thick-shits in your elementary subtraction class got into UMASS? well, when you get to the front of the freshmen line, you find out how the university uses them. About ten of them are stationed in front of the line facing a brick wall. Someone told them that if they guess the magic word the fairy god-teller appears and gives them free tuition.

Being a good freshman means that you get blamed for everything. Like that last rainstorm. The bucketing rain wasn't bad enough when a bunch of uppers came up, heaved my books into a nearby puddle and screamed "This is all your fault! It only rains on freshmen!". Apologies are useless, and I wonder what will happen if it hails.

If you go to the campus center, don't dare to venture inside the men's room, no matter how bad the urge. If you do you'll be promptly followed by a group of uppers who try to sell you the big "balloons". Worse than that, the uppers that followed you are female.

If that doesn't embarass you, wait until they get you in the bathroom. The freshmen are instructed to use only certain stalls. Of course, Those are the ones that are rigged with springs in the doors so that they never close. You sit there, holding the door with one hand, and wiping your ass with the other. If you should use your hand for something stupid, like getting a piece of toilet paper, the door flies open just as a few members of the opposite sex walk by.

We're smart enough to avoid the elevator tickets, but how are we supposed to know that the tower they're sending us to isn't the Grad Research Center, but the Adams dorm.

Misery loves company, but how come all the triples go to DELETE

Misery loves company, but how come all the triples go to the freshmen?

And then there's the courses we're left with. After everyone else is through, we get "Intra-mural Clarinet Competition" and a course on "How to Converse with Dining Commons Ladies while Waiting for your Meatloaf to Rot".

Yeah, we're stuck now-but "Vengeance is mine, sayeth the Lord", and we have four years to get back at you guys.

Senate Sets Ban On Non-Union Lettuce

The Student Senate set a ban, on non-union Iceberg lettuce and grapes last Wednesday night which will take effect after a two-week interim.

The Senate feels they have the moral right since it is students' money which is in question, if not the legal right to determine which lettuce and grapes UMass should buy. However, in reality only the Board of Trustees and its representatives can legally make such a decision.

The Administration had no comment to make on the decision of the Student Senate.

The University food services are bound to a competitive bidding arrangement. UMass sends a request to the distributors for a certain quantity of a product, in this case lettuce and grapes, and they receive a bid. After a bid is accepted the distributors cannot charge more money than the amount first stated.

UMass must accept the lowest bid or buy no lettuce and grapes, a bid which cannot be denied on the basis of union. The unions which are involved are the Teamsters and the United Farm Workers (AFL-CIO), both in California. Non-union lettuce, a brand called Eastern, is also involved.

Nick Apostola, President of the Student Government Association (SGA) cited reasons why they feel an obligation to boycott Teamster's union products. The Teamster's Union has been making "sweetheart contracts" with growers.

Apostola said, "These are ones that benefit the employer rather than the employee-it's a sellout-selling the Chicanos down the river".

In the early 60s, Cesar Chavez organized the farm workers in the UFW and began negotiating contracts calling for better wages. The Teamsters have been harassing the UFW to the Teamster's Union. The pickers in the Teamsters, according to the President of SGA, have been and are being exploited by the growers.

The position of the Student Senate, in support of UFW and in opposition to the Teamsters), is in accordance with Chavez. He says to buy either UFW or Eastern lettuce and grapes when possible and at other times, when neither of these have the low bid, to buy no lettuce or grapes.

Agnew: Investigation Rules His Career

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, according to close associates, believes that even without an indictment the corruption investigation involving him has reduced his future political prospects to "just about zero."

Following a weekend speech to Republican women, the vice president met privately with a group of California Republcan officials and, according to a spokesman, told them he believes his political career has been destroyed by the investigation.

J. Marsh Thomson, Agnew's press secretary, said the state officials disputed Agnew's view of his political future.

The vice president, in fact, may have drawn fresh encouragement from the GOP women waving banners, shouting "We want Agnew," and in some cases standing on tables to cheer him as he again declared his innocence and accused the Justice Department of trying to destroy him politically.

Thomson said that after weeks of little or no comment, Agnew decided to speak out more sharply than ever in his own behalf on very short notice, sometime after he left Washington on Friday.

"He wanted a good forum and came to the conclusion that this audience along with national television was his chance to get to the American people," Thomson said.

Agnew was moved nearly to tears by a three-minute ovation on arrival. After he finished his prepared, relatively bland script, he launched his fiercest public defense to date.

Leaving the hall, he was mobbed by women who knocked over barriers to get to him. Some were "Spiro for President" lapel pins. "It was amazing," said an aide. "Ordinarily you don't worry about losing control of an audience of women."

Agnew, he said, was "gratified by the response but is still trying to take it in."

The accusations against Agnew are that he received political kickbacks from state contractors while a county executive and later as Maryland governor. A federal grand jury in Baltimore began studying evidence against him last week.

A federal judge has given the Justice Department permission to continue presenting evidence but the department has also been ordered to answer by Friday a move by Agnew's lawyers to halt the probe. The grand jury is expected to reconvene Wednesday or Thursdav.

Declaring again that he would not resign even if indicted, Agnew told his audience he is the victim of a vengeful conspiracy by "small and frightened men" who dishonestly implicated him because he would not intercede to stop the investigation of others.

He charged also that high officials of the Justice Department, embarrassed by failure in Watergate and other cases, are trying to make him a scapegoat to restore their reputations and destroy him politically.

He said he would demand that they deny under oath that they are the source of news leaks, and if they could not deny it, he would ask President Nixon to "discharge those individuals summarily."

Although Agnew attacked those who are doing the "leaking" of details and not newsmen who are publishing them, some of his defenders blamed the media.

Reporters covering the convention were constantly challenged by women delegates to "tell the truth about Mr. Agnew." Some women also mentioned Watergate.

One newsman, expressing a derogatory personal view while rushing for a telephone after Agnew's speech, was surrounded by several dozen angry women, at least one of whom threatened to clout him with her purse.

But if the vice president found again that he had no shortage of friends among the GOP rank and file, there were a couple of incidents that might have made him wonder where he stood with the party heavies.

One was a slip of the tongue by former Texas Gov. John Connally who, making his first major speech to a GOP women's group since changing parties, said he hoped Agnew "is completely exonerated and that he indeed is found guildy. . "

Despite a gasp from the audience, a GOP official said Connally did not realize his gaffe until afterward. Later he called Agnew, who was staying at the Palm Springs home of Frank Sinatra, to apologize for the mistake.

Some observers also read ominous meaning into the fact that Gov. ronald Reagan, official host for the event and like Connally a potential rival of Agnew for national office in 1976, did not attend the vice president's speech and gave him only a casual reference in his own speech Friday night.

A Question Of Women Clergy

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - A national convention of Episcopalians went into its first legislative session Sunday with the church's top leadership backing a sharply debated move to allow women to become priests.

A shift in that leadership also was in the offing, which could swing its leverage to the other side of the issue.

This posed an uncertain note as business began for the church's bicameral governing congress, its 896-member House of Deputies made up of half laity and half clergy, and its 200-member House of Bishops.

Any action requires concurrence of both.

A recent poll of most bishops showed 74 in favor of permitting ordination of women and 64 against it, with serveral abstaining or not participating.

Various groups opposing the change, including an Anglo-Catholic or high church organization, the American Church Union, says it could divide the church.

Biship Stanley Atkins of Eau Claire, Wis., has said, "I cannot and will not walk down this road."

As the 13-day convention opened Saturday at the Kentucky Exposition Center, the church's Presiding Bishop John E. Hines put his weight squarely behind proposals both for women's ordination and continuance of a controversial special program of grants to self-development organizations of blacks and other minorities.

Israelis Plea For Austrian Reversal

Golda Meir: "Austria Has Betrayed Her Own Greatness"

STRASBOURG, France (AP)-Israeli Premier Golda Meir said Sunday, Austria has "betrayed her own greatness" by agreeing to Arab terrorist demands to shut down a Jewish transit camp in Vienna.

Addressing 2,000 members of Strasbourg's Jewish community, the Israeli premier said she is asking the Austrian government to keep the camp open and operating despite a pledge to Palestinian terrorists to close it down.

Israel's Arab enemies, "unable to exterminate us, are now trying to attack us everywhere else in the world and are trying to frighten Jews against coming to Israel," she said.

"Whoever accepts the conditions of terrorists, only encourages them to pursue their criminal acts.

"We are greateful for what Austria has done until today to permit Jews to transit its territory towards freedom in Israel...But we cannot ucderstand how one can give in to such blackmail and we note with consternation and deep regret the decision that has apparently been taken.

"We would like to believe that this decision is provisional or perhaps due to a misunderstanding."

Mrs. Meir arrived from Tel Aviv earlier in the day to address a meeting of the Council of Europe Monday morning.

A spokesman for the Israeli Embassy in Vienna said that Austria in any case does not have the power to shut down the camp.

"There are no plans to stop processing Soviet Jews through that center." he said.

His comment came one day after Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, himself a Jew, promised to make arrangements for disbanding the Scheinau camp in a bargain with two Arab guerrillas.

With the pledge, he won the release of an Austrian border guard and three emigrating Soviet Jews whom the terrorists had abducted Friday off a train from the Soviet Union. The Arabs were allowed to leave in a plane supplied by the Austrian government and they landed in Libya Saturday night.

"Under a contract signed in 1964, the Jewish Agency in Vienna took Schoenau castle on lease from a Dutch national by the name of Hulverff, who earlier rented the building, which is owned by an Austrian countess, not by the government," said the Israeli diplomat, who refused to be identified.

"It is therefore incomprehensible to us that the Austrian chancellor should make such a statement under the threat of criminals, of ordinary highway robbers."

Official Austrian sources, while not reacting directly to the position expressed by the Israeli diplomat, defended their right to shut down the camp, 70 miles south of Vienna.

They said that as a private institution on Austrian soil, the facility falls outside the requirements of the Geneva conventions on refugees. There were no official predictions when or even whether Austrian authorities might force Schoenau to stop receiving refugees.

The Schoenau Transit Camp: "But It's Not Up To Us; It's Up To The Russians"

JERUSALEM (AP)-The Jewish Agency declared Sunday that Austria should go back on its pledge to restrict facilities for immigrating Soviet Jews and predicted the move will encourage Arab terrorism.

The Jewish Agency's executive decided at a special meeting to ask Chancellor Bruno Kreisky of Austria to reverse the promise, made in response to Friday's kidnaping of an Austrian border guard and three Soviet Jews on the way to Israel via Vienna.

The Jewish Agency, which runs the Schoenau transit camp near Vienna, is an arm of the world Zionist movement dealing with immigration to Israel and collecting funds from world Jewry. It is independent but coordinates its work with the Israeli government.

The government called a special session of parliament for Monday afternoon to discuss the development and its effect on Soviet Jewish immigration.

Israeli newspapers denounced what they called the Austrian "capitulation" and compared it to pre-World War II appeasement of Hitler.

"Chancellor Kreisky's Jewish origins make his actions all the more disgusting," commented the independent Haaretz.

Moshe Rivlin, the agency's director-general, said the best alternative if Austria goes through with its apparent pledge to close the Schoenau camp would be for immigrants to fly directly to Israel from Moscow or Kiev.

"But it's not up to us; it's up to the Russians," he added.

About 2,650 Soviet emigrants a month have been passing through the camp about 70 miles south of Vienna on their way to the Jewish state in the two years since Moscow relaxed emigration restrictions.

To win freedom for the four hostages held by two Arab terrorists in a small bus at Vienna airport, Kreisky pledged to ban group travel of Jewish emigrants through Austria. As a result, the 15-hour standoff ended without bloodshed and all four captives were released.

As part of the deal, the terrorists got a light twin-engine plane in which they flew around the Mediterranean Saturday looking for a haven. They were permitted to land Saturday evening at a military base near Tripoli, Libya.

The Arab nationalist government of Col. Moammar Khadafy allowed the two to hold a news conference within hours of their arrival and the official Libyan news agency transmitted their remarks. This was a departure from past treatment of hijackers arriving in Libya and was seen as an apparent endorsement of the episode.

A spokesman for the Libyan agency said the two Austrian pilots who flew the plane from Vienna would be allowed to fly home.

The respected newspaper An Nahar in Beirut, Lebanon, said in a Sunday editorial that the operation was a success that Arab diplomacy had failed to achieve despite several years of effort.

Phnom Penh

And The War Goes On...

PHNOM PENH (AP) - Continued fighting was reported Sunday along Phnom Penh's southern defensive perimeter.

Fighting erupted in areas about one mile north and 1½ miles northwest of Dei Kraham near the junciton of Routes 38 and 3 about 10 miles south of the capital, the military command said.

Khmer Rouge harassment shelling and combat also were reported in that region at Tran Khnar.

On the western defensive perimeter of the capital, field reports said government troops attempting a pincer movement with Thmat Pong as its target were forced to retreat from the Ang Taloek pagoda.

Thmat Pong has been the objective of two government pushes, one from the north, the other from the south, in an effort to secure the vulnerable western approaches to Phnom Penh.

The two columns had been as close as 2½ miles from a linkup. Sunday's retreat from the pagoda moved the government southern offensive line about 100 yards farther away from Thmat Pong, field reports said.

Shelling was reported at the airport at Kompong Cham, 47 miles northeast of Phnom Penh, and the command said the government opeation to retake an important textile factory northwest of town was continuing.

Recent field reports from Kompong Cham indicate the government's next objective will be to break through insurgent elements which have encircled the airport for more than a month.

The airport has been supplied by parachute drops and has been under periodic shelling.

Phnom Penh's two vital overland supply arteries remained cut by rebel forces. Route 4 to the sea was severed about 45 miles west of the capital and Route 5 to Battambang province was cut about 35 miles north of Phnom Penh.

In South Vietnam, the government's regional commander in Pleiku said Communist-led forces are planning a major offensive in the central highlands early next year.

Final Decision Delayed On Delegate Selection

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
AP Political Writer

GAITHERSBURG, Md. (AP) - An almost evenly divided Democratic Party committee has delayed a final decision on convention delegate selection quotas after voting tentatively to eliminate any special preference for women, minorities and young people.

That vote, taken Sunday with several members absent, seemed certain to be reversed next weekend when the 17-member drafting committee completes work on revision of the party's 1972 reform rules.

The issue in Sunday's voting was whether provisions urging full participation in the 1976 delegate selection process should refer to the "traditionally under-represented groups," a phrase referring to women, minorities and young people.

Gov. John J. Gilligan of Ohio, who had sided with reform elements Saturday in winning approval of proportional representation throughout the nominating process, took the side of organized labor and other party regulars this time. He urged a more general provision favoring participation of all Democrats without any specific references.

Commission member Jane Solomon of New Hampshire was defeated 7 to 5 when she urged that the provision include a reference both to all Democrats and an emphasis on "traditionally under-represented groups."

Gilligan's proposal was then approved 8 to 5.

A short while later, black Mayor Richard G. Hatcher of Gary, Ind., who had been absent, arrived at the meeting and convinced the group to reconsider its decision when it meets next Friday in Washington.

Both sides agreed that, if all members of the drafting committee were present and voting, Mrs. Solomon's proposal would probably have been approved.

Evangelists Invade Cambodia

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Cambodia is 98 per cent Buddhist, from President Lon Nol's amulet to the peasant's rice-bowl offering to saffron-robed monks.

But there they were, in Phnom Penh's Palace of Sports to kick off their crusade, nine fresh-faced American youths just out of Bible school or college, looking out at about 5,000 Camboidan faces.

And there was Todd Burke, 22-year-old evangelist missionary from Oklahoma City, Okla., gyrating around a microphone on the platform where his young helpers sat.

"I have come to tell you about Jesus so you can be saved," he shouted. "I have come to bring you the truth."

Next to Burke, the interpreter belted out the words in Khmer, sweeping his hand out over the listeners as Burke had done.

"There are hundreds of religions but there is only one way to be saved...Burning candles and incense cannot save you."

Out on the concrete-block benches of the arena, a few physically handicapped were lost in the swarms of children and patches of soldiers in berets and battle fatigues.

"Bring the sick, the blind, the crippled..." the newspaper ads and 12,000 crusade posters around Phnom Penh had read.

"I wanted to see," many children explained when asked why they were attending.

And they had come to hear free music-gospel music to an upright piano by the world-touring Luminaires, attention-holding music from America's Bible belt sung by a youthful sextet of three female, three male voices, broken up by explanation and personal testimony.

"His first name is Jesus," Dianne Dix of Muncie, Ind., told the Cambodians. "He is my friend. Today he wants to be your friend."

When the singing stopped and Burke's preaching got rolling, the crowd began to thin.

"You don't know what the future holds for you. Your country is being torn apart by war. If you do not believe you will die the eternal death," Burke told them.

"Would you like to have Jesus come into your life? If you want Jesus to come into your life raise your hand."

A sprinkling of hands curved up, many accompanied by slow smiles.

Raise Tuition To Expand Aid

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Committee for Economic Development recommends that college tuition rates be more than doubled and an expanded system of student aid be established.

The committee, a private organization supported by business and industry, said such action would be one means of achieving quality education and equal opportunity.

It made its recommendations in a $400,000 report entitled "The Management and Financing of Colleges," issued Sunday. The report follows the same general direction of the Nixon administration, the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education and the College Entrance Examination Board.

The tuition proposal came under fire immediately from the National Student Lobby and organizations representing public colleges, junior colleges and land-grant universities.

Allan W. Ostar, executive director of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, said it is "a direct attack on millions of middle-and-lower-income American families."

"The CED report appears to express the views of a few multi-billion-dollar corporations and affluent private universities," he said. "It does not speak for millions of students, for veterans seeking an education, for labor union and farm families, nor for most public colleges and universities."

The 104-page report recommends that colleges improve their management and hold down costs, which have risen at nearly twice the rate of inflation in recent years, by giving presidents more authority and limiting tenure to one-half the faculty.

The committee emphasized that tuition hikes to cover 50 per cent of instructional costs should be phased in over a five-year period at four-year institutions and a 10-year period at two-year community and technical colleges, and not before a system of expanded student loans and grants is established.

"It is important to recognize that under our proposal the increases in tuition are intended not to precede but to follow or coincide with the availability of funds to the prospective students to pay that tuition," the report said. "We are not proposing that institutions raise tuition under circumstances where the funds for that tuition will not be forthcoming."

Based on 1969-70 university instruction costs averaging $1,992 per student, CED said its recommendation would boost the actual $413 tuition charge to $996 at universities. It would cost $803 per student at four-year colleges and $613 at two-year colleges.

Powerlessness

By PAUL MISHLER

Last spring, it came to our attention once again that decisions which affect the entire University community were being made without any real input by the people who go to school, live, work, and pay for this institution (through taxes and tuition). Instead, groups of "professionals" and "social planners" map out programs and solutions at a high cost to taxpayers and without having any first-hand knowledge of the complexity of the problems or how they fit into the larger scheme of life at UMass.

The particular instance was the parking fee. A highly inflationary plan for dealing with the parking problem at, UMass, if enacted and enforced, the new plan would squeeze money out of already dry sources-students and workers. Workers' paltry cost-of-living increase has already been eaten up by a raise in insurance fees (not to mention the sky-rocketing food prices). And students find themselves struggling to remain financially afloat as tuitions and fees rise while financial aid vanishes from campus. Meanwhile our administrators at the mini-Watergate, affectionately known as "witless Hall", indulge in the bureaucratic art of feather-bedding; creating new positions, heads of new programs at huge salaries (at least over $17,000.00 a year). A big hunk of the revenue that is supposed to go towards the development of better transportation at UMass out of the monies collected through the new parking fee plan would have to go to pay the new program coordinator. This is fiscal responsibility?

Workers on this campus recognize that, although the administration is supposed to represent and act in the interests of the whole community (workers, students and taxpayers) they are in reality acting in an autocratic, unresponsive way that smells dangerously similar to the odor eeking out of Washington D.C. from the Watergate bunch. THOSE WHO GOVERN WITHOUT CONCERN FOR THEIR CONSTITUENCY ARE DANGEROUS!!

The only check on this kind of power accumulation must come from the people, in an organized way. UMass workers realized this all along, and thought they had the support of groups of students and professors. But student groups who gave lip-service to the protest didn't follow through on their part, they made no efforts to educate the student body as a whole

Lock Up, Bob!

Bob Scheier has a nose for news and a hairdo to match. That's the way one Collegian sports writer described him in February when Bob became the Collegian's managing editor. That was eight months ago, but Bob hasn't changed too much since then. Even though he got a haircut last week, he still boasts the closest thing to a white man's afro I've seen and he is still one of the best damned student reporters I've known. Only one thing has changed. As of today, Bob is no longer managing editor of the Collegian.

Bob and I shared an office for the past eight months, and when you work with somebody five nights a week for that period of time, and then he quits, you tend to get a little nostalgic. You start thinking back on all the crap you've been through together, and there's a lot to think back on in the newspaper business.

Many were the times when Bob and I didn't quite see eye to eye on something. Our conceptions of what a college newspaper should be were as different as night and day. There were times when I would flatly tell Bob to go to hell, and there were an equal number of times when he'd direct me to do the same.

You see, Bob's a fairly conservative guy when it comes to putting out a campus daily, but that's because he's a professional journalist and he constantly strives for perfection. If you are one of those who believes that the Collegian is in poor taste most of the time, then you'll probably love Bob.

Bob would constantly accuse me of allowing people to vent their sexual frustrations on the editorial pages, and I would either totally ignore him or explain to him that we are catering to an audience of college students. Bob had a hard time accepting the fact that we're not the New York Times, but in the meantime, he busted his ass trying to make sure that we remained second best.

Washing down those Gelucels.

Scheier's got ink in his veins, to use the worn-out romantic expression. His old man's a professional journalist, and so is his older sister. Bob's been writing for the Springfield Daily News for the past three years, and the experience has made him a top notch reporter. He knows his business. That's why he would get upset when novices like myself would let off-color editorial points slip into the Collegian.

Yes, we had our feuds and we had moments when we wished we could get rid of each other at the touch of a button. It may sound corny now, but looking back I'd have to say that you had to respect Bob. He was one hard working son of a bitch. Things were getting so bad at one point that he was popping Gelucels like they were peanuts. Gelucels, in case you haven't heard of them, are pills you take for ulcers.

And I never helped the situation much. I'd usually be done working about 11 p.m., and as I was leaving every night, I'd tell Bob to be sure to lock up our office before he left, which usually wasn't until 2 in the morning. It was one of those silly routines that sort of becomes a trademark, and it was a way of letting him know that I didn't have to work as late as he did.

But now there won't be as many late nights for Bob, and his stomach won't have those Gelucels to kick around anymore. Bob resigned because he wanted to be a student again. He wanted to make sure he'll graduate come May, since not too many dedicated Collegian people get out of this place in four years.

Bob will still be reporting for the Collegian, and he will be an issue editor every once in awhile, which is what he was three years ago.

Somehow, things won't be the same. And as I stood in our office Thursday night, I couldn't help but feel a bit sad thinking that it was his last night as managing editor.

"You'll still be writing for us, won't you?" I asked him.

"Certainly," he replied. I couldn't think of anything else to say.

"Well, aren't you going to say it?" he asked me.

"Say what?" I said. "Oh yeah......Lock up, Bob!"

Spiro & Co. Go To Pot

Editors note: Charles Camelopard reverted to his old tactics of wiretapping last week. Other than a series of arguments about what was for dinner at the Nixon home, Camelopard's big find was a conference call he overheard between Vice President Agnew, former Attorney General John Mitchell, expatriated Nixon financier Robert Vesco, and Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger. Below is a partial transcript of the conversation lifted by Camelopard's prying ears.

Buzzzzzzz, click, click., click, click...Hello is that you John?"

"Yousa"

"How about you Henry."

"Heil capitan."

"And you, Bob."

"I'm here."

"Bob, this is Spiro, how did the crop come out down there?"

"Not bad. We had good weather since I split in the spring and we may get a small bumper if the hurricane season isn't too rough."

"Spiro again, have you got it picked and packaged yet, we want to get it shipped up here while all this screaming is going on about Watergate and this Maryland crap and before the Justice Department starts looking for you seriously."

"I know, I know, I got 1,000 kilos of leaves and about twenty big baggies full of stems and flowers. They're already to go.

"OK, good, now Henry, have you made the arrangements for transportation of the stuff?"

"Yes, capitan, I haff two zeven vorty zevens ready for the trip. I can haff anything now I am in new job." Nobody asks questions, I ask, they give, zimple."

"Terrific Henry, you may be the only one of us left with jobs if this noise up here doesn't stop soon. How are you going to bring the stuff into the country, through Miami?"

"Goot heavens, no the season in Miami has just started, how about through Canada so I can catch the foliage in New England. I promise nice little chicken I met in Peking airplane ride."

"Alright, alright." You make the plans."

"Now John, are you there?" John? John? (screaming,) JOHN.

"What Spiro."

"Do you have your apartment cleaned out so we can dump all the bags there for a few days.

"Yeah, Martha is on a short vacation, she doesn't even know I still have a key to the place, we can leave all the stuff there."

"Good, very good, now have you taken are of the promotion, do all our New York City contacts know that we got a big load of stuff coming in so that they can pick up some?

"Of course Spiro, you saw what a marvelous job I did of getting Dick re-elected, promoting a small sale is nothing.

"OK, we're all set. They think the French Connection was a big deal. Just remember to keep hiding in the Waldorf and make statements about how busy you are with your defense John." "Alright."

And Henry you just keep flying all over the place and you won't have any trouble.

"Heil, capitan." And Bob, you rascal, don't get a sunburn, you don't know how lucky you are. We have a different kind of heat up here.

"You can't win 'em all Spiro"

Everyone hung up.

Letters To The Editor

Rejoicing In The Spirit Of '76

To The Editor:

There are all sorts of ways to get away from it all these days. You can take a trip in a bus, auto, airplane, or train. There are even a few ships left. Unfortunately, because of exorbitant costs of operation and crushing competition ships and trains are going down the drain as passenger sources. Airplanes are getting very crowded and expensive to travel in. Busses are still hanging in there and appear destined to triumph over the private passenger car. Through legislation and restrictive controls the private auto is becoming very expensive to purchase and operate. The working man has patronized the auto ever since Henry Ford gave him "four wheels and a board". He has idolized the old tin lizzie and protected it from all harm. But the force of government control and environmental problems seem to be sealing its doom. It appears that our government is steadily gaining another victory over our environment. A highway system such as ours without automobiles will certainly be something to look forward to.

Well cheer up, the old tin lizzie will be around for a while and in three years we will be having a national bicentennial celebration. This will certainly be a time for rejoicing. I personally intend to pack a picnic lunch to take to the rejoicing area. It will consist of one California russet potato at 20 cents per spud, one beefsteak tomatoe at 40 cents apiece, one hearts of lettuce salad at 50 cents a serving (this is just lettuce) ½lb. salami at $1.00, and four hamburgers for $1.00. This lunch will only cost me $3.10. (This is wholesale and does not include: rolls, plastic forks and knives, cooking expenses, napkins and lunch basket) I will want to bring along a couple of friends so the total raw lunch will cost me over ten dollars.

Of course our Government hasn't decided where the rejoicing areas will be. One thing is certain, there will have to be 50 of them, one for each state, otherwise states will be fighting among themselves for prime locations. I think that it is safe to assume that the various state parks (and each state has a multitude of them) won't be used because we wouldn't want to disturb the wildlife. I don't think that the multi-million dollar Municipal or Government centers will be used because we wouldn't want to disturb Government or Municipal process. I suppose that we will just have to job it out to a private development company. A small rejoicing area will cost around $100 million dollars. Now since there about 200 million people in the country, there must be about 4 million per state. Divide 4 million into 100 million and you have $25 dollars entrance fee. This means that if you got 4 million people into your state rejoicing area in a years time you will recoup your initial investment. Not including interest fees, salaries and commissions. Of course this is an ideal situation. You will probably only get about 25 per cent or 1 million people rejoicing in the first year. This means you will have to charge $100 dollars per person at the gate. (you could make it a blue plate special) So far it is going to cost me $303.10 to rejoice in '76.

Now to determine where the rejoicing area will be. Well, it will have to be centrally located so that all residents of the state can get to it easily. I assume that for the state of Massachusetts this means Boston. Now lets see. I live in South Deerfield so that means I will have a 100 mile more or less drive to get there. Now if I drive a basic automobile (four wheels and a board) I can get 30 miles per gallong. This means it will take about four gallons of gas to get there. One way of course. Round trip (if I have the money) eight gallons. Lets see, gasoline has increased in price over the last year of 8 cents per gallon of regular grade fuel. It now stands at 40 cents per gallon. Now the Federal governments wants to place an 8 cents more or less tax on gasoline. At the rate of 8 cents per gallon per year increase we can expect to pay 24 cents per gallon increase by 1976. With the 8 cents federal tax this means that in '76 we will pay 32 cents per gallon more than we are paying now. So to go to the rejoicing area in '76 it will cost me around $5.60 for eight gallons of gas. (I can remember not so long ago when you could buy 20 gallons of gas for $5.00 dollars. Of course that was when we had gas wars. And they held a negative connotation to good government so we did away with them.)

Now we will have to determine two things when we get to the rejoicing area. 1. what are we going to do about the car, and 2. where are we going to sleep. We will probably have to park the car some miles from the rejoicing area (environmentalists will have the streets blocked off) and take a mass transportation vehicle to destination. We will probably have to sleep in the car because there aren't going to be any rooms available. We will have to allow two or three days for a complete tour of the rejoicing area (because we may not make it to the rejoicing area on the first try, mass transportation being what it is, derailments strikes and so forth)

So far it is going to cost me $308.70 to get to the festival of rejoicing not including the mass transportation cost (who the hell knows how much that will cost)

I feel it fair to note at this time that I have not included meals along the way, wear and tear on the car, possible injuries due to mass transportation or the crippling effects of air pollution.

So with all things considered, I think that we can safely reduce the partronage to the festival of rejoicing to about the undefeatable 10 per cent who would go anyhow regardless of the cost. This means that it would cost around $1000.00 at the gate. Well that is certaintly something to look forward to...

Even Jesus Got Horny

To The Editor:

After all that Joshing (coming and coming and coming) your editorial wit seems to have given way to anxiety. Your treatment of Josh seemed to me churlish and shallow. As an ecumenical Christian identified with UCF concern for feeding the hungry, freeing prisoners, and driving out the demons of racism and militarism, I could easily envy Campus Crusade for their crowd-drawing power in the name of Josh. Still, I think he deserved a less superficial hearing than offered by editorial commentators Reidman and Weiss.

Granting the cool rap was more Bill Cosby than Billy Graham (so who's complaining!). Granting that the machine gun "documentation" of the Resurrection became overbearing. Granting that the lecture on prophecy pulled in some far-out plums from the fantastasphere somewhere out past Tralfamadore! Granting that the lecture on Maximum Sex left a lot of important things unsaid (e.g., does Jesus love gay men and women? Does "controlling one's sex" lay another guilt trip on those who have just learned the good news that it's OK to masturbate?). Nevertheless, the substance of the talk affirmed the goodness, joyfulness, playfulness of a genuinely erotic sexual relationship, something I have seldom heard from self-proclaimed "evangelicals."

More important, the emphasis on a loving, caring relationship rather than sexual technique was right on. When so few couples get even minimum premarital counseling, and when unconscious attitudes prevent many cohabiting couples from really checking each other out before making commitments, I found Josh's anti-exploitation emphasis healthy and important. The mind is the most important "sex organ"--although the bit about premarital experience imprinting bad stuff on the mental computer seemed to underestimate the complexity of unconscious processes and may have laid another time bomb of guilt in the area of healthy fantasy.

The Jesus Josh extolls, whom also I affirm as Lord, is fully man as well as fully God. To be fully human includes sexuality, which includes the psycho-sexual development of adolescence. Those who affirm the full incarnation of God in human flesh will not be shocked by the thought that the youthful Jesus had sexual fantasies and befriended his own-budding sexuality through unguiltridden, pleasurable masturbation. (Prof. William Phipps goes farther in suggesting that as a young, normal Jewish male, Jesus almost certainly married, but that's another story.)

My purpose in writing is to invite the Campus Crusaders to some forthright dialogue about our common Lord, and to some cooperative ventures in bringing the liberating Spirit of Christ to all who "labor and are heavy laden." But having identified myself with those who follow Christ, I must add my sorrow at Arthur Katz' claim that unconverted Jews would burn in Hell. God help those whose God is so small!

around the issues of the protest against the parking plan. The Young Workers' Liberation League was the only organization that printed leaflets and posters and, along with members of the Liberation Corridor on Orchard Hill, were the only students to support the workers on the picket lines. Where was the Daily Collegian during all this, besides Tripoli's dismissal of the entire problem as "everybody's fault" (a good liberal analysis)? and how come until this time, the Collegian has yet to publicize the issues behind the work stoppage and more importantly what the outcome of negotiations between workers of 1776 AFSCME AFL-CIO and the University administration produced?

The outcome of the work stoppage Sept.11th was threefold. First of all, the administration agreed to send the dispute to the office of Attorney General Robert Quinn for him to make a final decision of its legality. During that time period (these last three weeks), there was to be a moratorium on enforcement of the new parking fee (you've been ticketed, you say?). Thirdly, there was to be no disciplinary action taken against union members and other workers who participated in the action.

Not only did the Collegian not publicize these facts, but they also refused (even after workers and students asked for space in the paper) to investigate the administration's breach of the agreement. The administration sent out a form to all University employees demanding to know where the employees were if not on the job during the work stoppage Sept. 11th, in order that they be docked pay. No one was allowed to not answer. If this isn't disciplinary action being taken against the workers, what is?

University employees under the leadership of the AFSCME union acted in an admirable way, and one which demanded more courage than when students don't go to classes. With families to support, and financial responsibilities, workers were still willing to stand up and say "No" to the parking fee, "no" to an administration which doesn't listen to the needs of the community, and to say "no" to the bullshit line of "let's sit down and talk about this". Workers recognized that when people in power start to act in autocratic ways, you either say "no" right away, or you take whatever they give. They should be supported in their efforts by the rest of the UMass community. It is our struggle too. There are some professors and students who may not care about the increase in their bill of a mere $75 (perhaps mommy and daddy are paying the tab). But the vast majority of us here are working to put ourselves through school, or to help out with the costs. And our wages aren't going up in any way that makes it logical to pay more money for fees. The administration's plan for solving the traffic problem at UMass is a poorly thought out plan, which doesn't look to the right direction for funding (tax the war machine, and big business, not workers and students).

If we agree with the position of the union and workers on campus, is there anything we can do? Yes. The end of the three week waiting period is today, Monday Oct. 1st. It is most likely that Atty. Gen. Quinn will attempt to extend the waiting period, so that he won't have to make a decision. You see, he's running for political office soon, and to decide in favor of the Trustees would alienate workers' votes; vice-versa, and he alienates big business' votes. We should begin a campaign of writing post cards to Quinn demanding that he make a decision now and then he decide in favor of students and workers (his taxpayers, and constituency.)

The second thing we can do is educate ourselves around the issues. In order to facilitate this, a group of students and workers have planned out when all interested people can gather to discuss the issues and have their question answered. These educationals will take place in each of the residential areas and in the student union for commuters. Check out the schedule below and get involved.

USSR Predicts Record Harvest

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Soviet Union appears headed for a record grain harvest this year, although excessive rain in some areas may have reduced the crop, the Agriculture department said Sunday.

"Based on information on crop prospects, weather conditions and harvest progress through Sept. 10, the Soviet Union's gross grain corp is estimated at a record 195 million metric tons, almost equal to the planned level of 197.4 million tons," the department said.

The report, published in the weekly issue of "Foreign Agriculture," said the Soviet crop - including wheat, rye, oats, barley and corn - would exceed last year's reduced harvest of 168 million tons and the previous record of 186.8 million in 1970.

Heavy rains have caused some losses and reduction of quality in the European area of the Soviet Union. Also, the report said, excessive rain in the Siberia-Kazakhstan regions during the first 10 days of September occurred while "significant amounts of unharvested grain" remained in fields.

"Also, long-range weather forecasts call for above-normal precipitation through mid-October in much of this area," the report said.

Soviet grain harvesting progresses in two steps, cutting the fields and the "windrowing" of plants containing ripened grain. Combines then thresh the grain from the windrows.

By Sept. 17, the report said, cutting of grain had been completed on 268 million acres, about 90 per cent of the total. That was more than cut on the same date the past two years. However, about 28 million acres remained to be threshed from windrows as of the date, compared with an average of 23 million the past four years.

If you think time is running out, you're right. Friday, October 5th is the final day for pass/fail and drop/add choices.

As Gas Prices Rise

Can You Afford That Weekend Drive?

By MIKE DUFFY
Associated Press Writer

Price dials on gas pumps began spinning faster throughout the nation over the weekend.

Inflation-pressed consumers, already weary of rising prices at the supermarket, found weekend drives more expensive as many gas stations took advantage of relaxed economic controls to raise their prices by as much as 2½ cents a gallon. That's more than a 6 per cent hike on a gallon of gas.

Others said price hikes couldn't be expected until Monday or Tuesday since dealers are having troubles interpreting the rules.

But many gas station dealers complained that the price hike would provide only temporary relief and that they were still being victimized by the big oil companies and government price controls. Some shut down their stations in protest.

The St. Louis area was virtually without any open gas stations, although dealers agreed to reopen Monday, 36 hours before planned. Houston, Tex., dealers prepared for a three-day shutdown beginning Monday to show their dissatisfaction with the new economic rules.

The Cost of Living Council announced Friday that retail gas prices, held in control by a special Phase 4 freeze, would be permitted to rise by 1 to 2½ cents a gallon. No specific provision was made to allow adjustments for future wholesale price increases.

"We wanted prbably about three cents a gallon. What the Cost of Living Council's giving us, the oil companies will be getting back" said Oren Dewey, director of the Central Ohio Gasoline Dealers Association.

The owner of a Washington area station said he had raised his prices but hadn't heard any complaints from motorists. "I haven't heard anything. I guess everybody's resigned to paying more for everything," said Dean Keay, owner of a station in Merrifield.

He said no immediate price hikes were expected in Chicago, but prices could shoot up to 50 cents within the next month.

Troy Takes His Case To Exec. Council

BOSTON (AP)-Disbarred Dorchester District Court Judge Jerome P. Troy takes his case to the Executive Council Monday.

The council, with a list of 35 witnesses submitted by the jurist and his lawyer Lawrence O'Donnell, is expected to take several days to complete the hearing into Troy's judicial conduct.

Before the panel is a legislative bill of address seeking the judge's removal. Gov. Francis W. Sargent, who twice asked Troy to resign, needs approval of the eight-member council before he can approve the petition.

The first 12 witnesses on Troy's list were expected to testify at the hearing Monday.

A spokesman for Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight, an ex-officio member of the council, said last week that no council members expressed opposition to the appearance of any of the witnesses listed by Troy.

The council has reserved the right to reject any of Troy's proposed witnesses. Additionally, O'Donnell was advised by the panel last week that he would not be allowed to examine the witnesses.

This essentially is the third hearing Troy has had.

The state Supreme Court, following a hearing, ruled July 26 that Troy had committed six "extremely serious" offenses. The court disbarred Troy and enjoined him from again sitting as a judge.

After Troy rejected Sargent's request that he resign, the matter went to the legislature which overwhelmingly approved a bill of address in the wake of a hearing by the legislature's Judiciary Committee.

Sargent submitted the petition to the council which voted to hold a hearing before deciding what action to take.

"Our House" Opens Doors To Youngsters

Our House, Inc., 71 Conway St., Greenfield opens its doors to young people in need of a temporary home. The paraprofessional staff at Our House provides a counseling and referral service to kids between the ages of 12 and 17, as well as a 30-60 day residential program for minors not living at home.

Our House, during its first year of operation in Greenfield, has begun to solve some of the immediate problems of youth in transition. But the larger problem of "Where do these kids go afterwards?" remains unsolved for the most part. In many cases, return to the streets, the detention centers, the courtrooms, or the frustrated families is inevitable. There just isn't anywhere else to go.

One answer is foster home placement. Up until now, services of this kind have been very limited in the county. Most agencies serving young people have concentrated their efforts in adoption: and for the most part, the population that has benefited most from placement services is infants and preschool children. The trend is clear: wayward teenagers seem to have forgotten.

To help support foster families in dealing with the newness of an additional person in their lives, Our House plans to offer training workshops for potential foster people. Follow-up support groups for all involved after the placement is made, and family counselling for those with special problems.

Anyone interested in finding out more about Our House and the possibility of providing some needy kid with a warm, healthy home environment, can call Ilene Bingham, Frank Sacco, or Tom Mangin at 772-6422, any day of the week.

Living Off The State

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK appears in the Georgetown Univ. Voice. It caps a review of the porno flick that moved the Supreme Court into a new ruling on obscenity. The head read, "Deep Throat's Hoarse."

FASHION NOTE is being sounded in the UNoIowa Northern Iowan with a page one column of campus news briefs, titled "Campus Shorts." An illustration proves it.

Among the fringe benefits the $40,000-a-year chancellor gets that the Posters complain about are a rent-free 14-room mansion whose upkeep alone costs almost $100 a week...maintenance and maid service...a cook...new appliances...and a limousine with chauffeur available.

What ticked off the editors, according to their editorial, is that while their chancellor lives it up at state expense, students live "in poor housing at outrageous rents and eating macaroni and cheese at least twice a week...

"Why does the Chancellor need a big Ambassador to drive himself to and from work each day? Let's hope he at least picks up hitchhiking students or faculty members he may see walking to their jobs. Or the cost of a car could be eliminated by having a friend drop the Chancellor off at the appropriate corner and taking the UBUS to school the way the University has encouraged the students to do."

STUDS ARE BIG SPENDERS At Central Michigan U. A market report by CMU Life reveals that CMU students spend an estimated $5,775,750.72 a year in the local business community. The estimate does not include college fees and housing payments.

The largest single expenditure is for supermarket purchases, followed by recreation and entertainment.

Lowest reported expenditure is for "books and supplies."

Too Busy For School... How Does Part-Time Sound?

If family or career commitments have prevented you from pursuing a college education, perhaps the Division of Continuing Education at UMass can help you get started now.

Proceeding on the assumption that old high school records should not prevent the highly motivated individual from pursuing a college education, The Division allows any person with a high school diploma or a Certificate of General Education Development to enroll in their University accredited courses. The subsequent performance of Continuing Education students has consistently affirmed the success of this policy, resulting in a student population with a tremendously diverse background and an unusually high amount of energy and motivation.

A multitude of problems confront the full-time employee who is trying to go to college part-time. Frequently, students in this situation feel that they must function simultaneously in two radically different kinds of worlds. It is an unfortunate fact that in many cases the part-time student's fellow employees have little sympathy with their associate's educational goals; while college administrations and scheduling offices seem to have little understanding of the part-time college student's job commitment with its corresponding scheduling restrictions. Those students not employed full-time still find that other personal commitments make it difficult or impossible for them to become a part of the "traditional" college experience. Continuing Education at the University of Massachusetts specializes in helping part-time students. Their students are called non-traditional students because they are people who cannot pursue a college education full-time right after high school. Prevented from taking the traditional route through college, Continuing Education students are still highly motivated people intent on acquiring an education despite discouraging circumstances.

A student can acquire any undergraduate degree through the Division, provided that they meet the standard matriculation requirements for that degree. The division also has its own undergraduate degree, the Bachelor of General Studies Degree (BGS), designed to be more flexible and responsive than the regular University undergraduate degree. Students earning a BGS degree work closely with an academic advisor, designing 30-credit hours of their own degree work. These hours are in addition to regular degree requirements, usually span several departments, and can include credit for on-the-job training and career accomplishments.

More than 2200 students are enrolled in the Division's fall semester programs, 1500 of them in the evening program held on the University's Amherst campus. The Evening Program consists of a variety of graduate and undergraduate University courses, offered once a week from 7 - 10 p.m., Monday through Thursday nights, and represent a wide range of interests. The Division is currently reviewing course proposals for the spring semester and all faculty, staff, and doctoral students are invited to submit proposals by October 15, 1973. Anyone interested in offering an evening course in the spring of 1974, or in obtaining more information about the Division may contact the Division of Continuing Education at 315 Arnold House, or by calling 545-0528.

Lobsterboat Located

SOUTHWEST HARBOR, Maine (AP) - A missing lobsterboat, the object of a massive air and sea search since Thursday night, was located adrift approximately 32 miles southeast of Mt. Desert Rock Sunday afternoon, the Coast Guard reported.

The missing boat, the Charnsue, was found by a Coast Guard C-130 aircraft, approximately 32 miles southeast of Mt. Desert Rock.

The Coast Guard cutter "Decisive" picked up the operator of the boat--Neal Hupper of Tenant's Harbor, Maine--and his condition was reported as good.

A Coast Guard spokesman says the Charnsue reportedly broke down off Petitmanan Island on Thursday. Four coast guard cutters, five patrol boats and three coast guard aircraft were assisted in the search by aircraft

Assistantship Offered In Central

The Central Area Counseling Center, located in Gorman House, is about to open for its second year, with many programs, workshops, seminars and individual counseling sessions offered to the residents of Central Area and the campus in general. Outreach facilities (services offered by the Center) to area dormitories will be available in the form of team building, specialized counseling, feminist counseling, Third World counseling and life planning, communication and listening skills, organization development and whatever needs are surveyed as priorities of the area.

Staffing will be completed in the next two weeks and opening date is scheduled for October 9th. The Center supervisor, Ms. Parny Hagerman, is looking for interested undergraduates and graduate students with an awareness of counselling skills and a background in above mentioned areas.

Undergraduates participating in the Center can negotiate educational credit for the experience.

A Graduate Assistantship and tuition waiver is being offered to a person who will coordinate outreach programs to the dormitories in the above areas and also be the counseling component for the Freshman Year Global Survival Program. This program has its students primarily in Central Area and has many concerns-problems that arise unique to the program and its students. Anyone interested in such as assistantship and has skills in these areas, submit a resume to Central Area offices located in Hills North (1st floor). All hiring will be done in accordance with Affirmative Action guidelines. Application deadline is Tuesday, Oct. 2. October 9th, Opening day, Central Area Counseling Center brings your concerns and-or just conversation.

For additional information or questions call Parny at 546-4544. All inquiries are appreciated.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn gets a "feeling in the bones," whether it be in connection with a change of weather or mood. Capricorn can ache one moment and be ready to celebrate the next minute. Capricorn comes back, rebounds, gets sense of what will occur and prepares accordingly. On positive level, these natives have foresight. On negative, the Capricorn is marvelous when it comes to hindsight.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look beyond the immediate. Be analytical. Piece together bits of information and come up with complete story. Accent is on distance, communication, philosophical concept. You will be doing some re-evaluating.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Home and costs and how you relate to needs of dependents-these are highlighted. Libra individual plays key role. Accent is on question of who owes, who pays, who collects. Budget talk is overdue. Get to it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Let others initiate projects. Lie low. You are seeing through haze of illusion. Motives are fine but material at hand could be faulty. Select quality. What appears to be easy way could prove more costly than anticipated.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Responsibility, prestige, credit for past accomplishments are featured. Older individual who it seemed was opposed, now comes forward in your behalf. Bring work procedures up-to-date. You get green light.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish, expand, look beyond the cheap-and-easy. Means focus on potential. Refuse to settle for second best; accent quality and professionalism. Aries, Libra persons could figue prominently. Love is in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tie up loose ends. Get expert legal counsel. Don't take situations, persons for granted. Insist on information as opposed to tall stories. Yor own style, needs are important. Know it and assert it. Stress originality, independence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Travel and inquiries may seem to be circular rather than direct. Means some sources are not reliable. You could be asking too much from persons who know too little. Review and revise. Aquarian is likely to be in picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Member of opposite sex could make demands. Evaluate. Have fun without being foolish. Make purchases without being extravagant. Means act age in sense that you are mature. Ask questions. Experiment. Be flexible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lunar cycle high-you make significant contacts, advances. Be ready for changes. Don't attempt to hang on to the past. Remodel. Imprint your own style. Draw inspiration from within. Realize your convictions are important.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Clandestine meeting appears to be on agenda. Key is to separate illusion from factual information. Be analytical. You get wonderful chance to make discovery. You may be somewhat afraid to look--but know that truth is beneficial.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friend could help fulfill aspirations. But realize ultimate decisions must be your own. Check costs. You may be asking for too much in way of financial load. Be sure that what passes as bargain really doesn't contain hidden expenses.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get "break" from one in position to pull strings. You may be called upon to work behind the scenes. Accept. Many are drawn to you. You deal with persons who are regarded as "mysterious." You gain access to privileged information.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural pioneer and have desire for adventure. You are an innovator. You would be more successful in business for yourself rather than in a salaried position. In November, there are indications of move or adjustment in the home. Many born under Leo and Aquarius are drawn to you.

Dukakis Enters Race For Governor

BOSTON (AP)-Former state Rep. Michael S. Dukakis has scheduled a Monday morning news conference at which he is expected to formally announce his candidacy for governor.

Dukakis, a Democrat from Brookline, ran for lieutenant governor on an unsuccessful ticket headed by Boston Mayor Kevin H. White in 1970.

He would be the first to formally announce his candidacy for governor in the 1974 election. Gov. Francis W. Sargent, a Republican, has indicated he will run for re-election and Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, a Democrat, is considering a run for the office.

Dukakis, 39, is a lawyer who served four terms in the House.

The 1970 White-Dukakis defeat followed bitter party in-fighting which came in the wake of a hard fought primary battle in which White defeated the choice of the Democratic State Convention, former Massachusetts Senate President Maurice Donahue.

After hitting homer No. 713 Saturday night, Aaron failed to hit No. 714 Sunday. He did collect 3 singles in 4 at-bats to finish the season with a .300-plus average.

Kasko Gets The Axe

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox announced Sunday that Manager Eddie Kasko had been fired and named Darrell Johnson, who led the Pawtucket Red Sox to the Little World Series championship, as his replacement.

The announcement was made by owner Tom Yawkey and General Manager Dick O'Connell just before the start of the Red Sox' final game of the season. Coach Eddie Popowski managed the Red Sox Sunday, while Kasko, who will become a Boston scout, sat in the stands with Yawkey.

Kasko managed the Red Sox for four seasons, directing the team to third place finishes in 1970 and 1971 in the American League Eastern Division and to second place finishes the last two seasons.

Johnson will be allowed to select his own coaches, the announcement said.

Johnson first became a minor league manager in 1963 at Elmira, N.Y. after a long major league career. He won the Eastern League championship in 1966 with Elmira, and won the International League crown with Louisville in 1972.

This year he missed another title in the International League by just one game. But his Pawtucket Red Sox went on to win the league playoffs over Tidewater and Charleston, and took the Little World Series championship by defeating Tulsa of the American Association.

Johnson first joined the Red Sox organization as a pitching coach under Manager Dick Williams in 1970. He became manager of the American Association.

Johnson first joined the Red Sox organization as a pitching coach under Manager Dick Williams in 1970. He became manager of the Louisville team for the 1971 season.

Many of the young players with the Boston Red Sox played for Johnson in Louisville and Pawtucket in the last three seasons.

Johnson will be the 30th Red Sox manager in the 73-year history of the team

JV Booters Dominate HCC

By PAUL BRADLEY

First year coach Dave Ouelette and his junior varsity soccer team scored a convincing 4-1 victory over Holyoke Community College on Friday in the season's opener for both teams.

The game was not as close as the score indicates as the Minutement dominated throughout, with play almost totally in the visitors end. The UMies missed several opportunities to add to the score against the undermanned Holyoke squad.

Jim Fitzgerald and Tony Bildeau, with a goal each, led the Umass offensive barrage that produced a total of 22 shots on goal. A superb defensive effort, led by halfbacks Bill Rose and Dexter Bellose, held the losers to only six shots at the UMass goalies. The combined goalkeeping of Buddy Butler and Mark Hanks held the visitors at bay when they did put on the pressure.

There were no individual heroics in this game, but in fact it was a fine team effort that put UMass on top.

MDC Supreme

CAMBRIDGE-Cornerback Geoff Kurinsky picked off a Harvard Crimson pass on the 45 yard line and ran it all the way into the end zone Saturday to give the Daily Collegian a 6-0 victory over the Crimson Daily Rubbish in the annual battle of the Press.

A heroic goal line stand by the impregnable Collegian defense, highlighted by a diving two hand touch by safety Fred Weiss, held off a last minute Crimson drive and saved the game for Massachusetts.

The Collegian is now a perfect 1-0 on the season. The Student Senate will be the next victim of the MDC next Sunday afternoon. Then, the media team will travel to UConn to take on the Daily Crier on October 27th.

Mets Clinch Tie In NL East

Mets Split

CHICAGO (AP) - Cleon Jones smacked a two-run homer and made two sensational catches Sunday as the New York Mets defeated the Chicago Cubs 9-2 and clinched at least a tie for the National League East pennant.

The Cubs prevented the Mets from winning the division championship outright by capturing the first game of the doubleheader 1-0 on Ron Santo's run-scoring single with two out in the eighth inning.

This forced the teams to play a make up doubleheader Monday beginning at 12 p.m.,EDT, in Wrigley Field-the only ballpark in the major leagues without lights-with the Mets needing only one triumph to clinch the crown.

Jones' homer in the second game, his 10th, was the 35th this season off loser Ferguson Jenkins, 14-16, and followed a walk to John Milner, boosting New York's lead to 5-2. It was Jones' fifth homer in the last nine games. Jerry Koosman, 14-15, was the winner.

The Mets opened the nightcap with three runs in the first. Wayne Garrett drew a walk and Felix Millan sacrificed him to second. Rusty Staub looped a single to center and took second on the throw as Garrett held third.

Milner was given an intentional walk and Jones hit a bouncer toward third. Santo threw wildly past the plate as Garrett and Staub scored with Milner taking third. Milner scored when Jerry Grote bounced out.

Cards, 3-1

ST. LOUIS (AP) - Bernie Carbo robbed Tommy Hutton of an extra-base hit, then doubled home the deciding run in the next inning, pacing the St. Louis Cardinals to a 3-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies Sunday.

The victory pulled the Cardinals to within one game of the first-place New York Mets.

The 26-year-old outfielder went to the wall for a Hutton line drive with a Phils' runner aboard and the Cardinals protecting a 1-0 lead in the fourth.

After crashing into the wall for a Hutton

After crashing into the wall on the play, the St. Louis rightfielder slammed a one-out double to left-center in the bottom of the inning to establish a 2-0 lead.

Philadelphia broke through for a run on a double and two singles in the fifth but was stymied thereafter by Diego Segui and Rick Wise, 16-12, as the Cards finished their regular season with five straight triumphs.

Lou Brock opened the first inning with a single that he stretched into a double, stole third and scored on Bake McBride's sacrifice fly for a 1-0 St. Louis lead.

In the fourth, Ted Simmons worked a walk off Phils starter Jim Lonborg, 13-16, and raced home from first base on Carbo's hit to left-center field.

Bucs, 10-2

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Jim Rooker scattered nine hits and drove in three runs to lead Pittsburgh to a 10-2 victory over Montreal Sunday, keeping alive the Pirates' slim title hopes in the National League East and eliminating the Expos.

The Pirates finish the season Monday in a make-up game here with the San Diego Padres.

It was the final game of the season for Montreal, which finished with a 79-83 record, best in the expansion club's five year history.

The Pirates fell behind 1-0 in the fourth, but broke the game open with six runs in their half of the inning off Montreal starter Ernie McAnally.

Gene Clines reached first on an error to open the fourth and Al Oliver doubled him home with the first hit off McAnally.

Richie Hebner then walked before Richie Zisk singled Oliver home and Manny Sanguillen walked to load the bases.

Dave Parker followed with a two-run single and Rooker scored Sanguillen from third with a bunt single off reliever Steve Renko. Dave Cash singled home the final run of the inning.

The Pirates scored three more runs in the fifth with the help of Rooker's two-run single and added another run in the sixth

Houk Quits Yanks Again

NEW YORK (AP) - Ralph Houk, who guided the New York Yankees to two World Series titles in his first two years as manager but then the American League team decline into mediocrity during his second stint as field boss, resigned Sunday, the final day of the 1973 baseball season.

In news conference following the Yankees' 8-5 season-ending loss to Detroit, Houk, in uniform with his familiar cigar in his left hand, said in a voice choked with emotion:

"Sometimes when you've been with somebody as long as I've been here, when you don't accomplish what you are after, you get the feeling it is better off for the Yankees, who have done so much for me and my family, to resign."

He said he had no immediate plans and has not talked recently to any other team. He said the decision was made four or five days ago.

"First thing I'm going to do is go down to Florida, put some lines out without any hooks and just sit there awhile," Houk said. His home is at Pompano Beach, Fla.

This was Houk's second time to quit as manager of the Yankees.

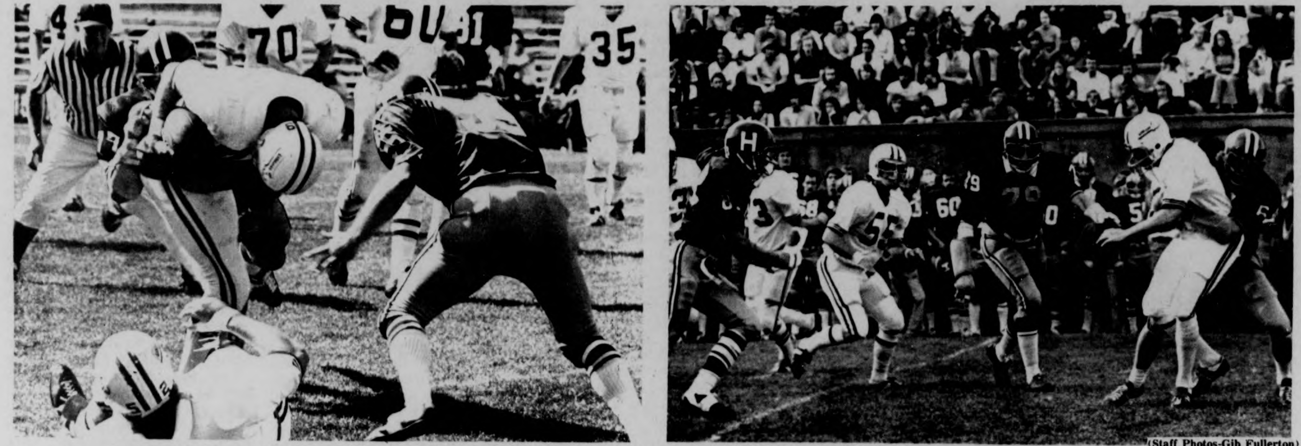
Ivy Strangles Minutemen



(Staff Photos-Gib Fullerton)

....HARVARD CRIMPS 'EM-The pictures tell the story as two Minutemen ballcarriers are swamped by Crimson defenders. The swarming Harvard defense was all over the field, showing great pursuit in limiting the UMass running attack to a mere four yards in 32 carries.

Harvard Overruns UMass 24-7

By BILL BALLOU

Four yards in 32 carries.

Four yards in 32 carries, the UMass rushing stats from Saturday's game, tell the story of Harvard's total domination of UMass on the way to a 24-7 win.

The Crimson outblocked, outtackled, outran, outpassed, outoffensed, outdefensed, and outeverythinged the Minutemen.

It was no fun for Umass fans as the "underdog" Harvards celebrated the opening of their 100th football season by scoring 24 straight points after giving up a first quarter touchdown.

The Minutemen were the only party-poopers in a day of Yankee Conference wins over the Ivy League. New Hampshire, which had never beaten Dartmouth, beat them 10-9, and Connecticut untraditionally beat Yale, by a score of 27-13.

But back to less pleasant things.

It was surprising the way Harvard, led by quarterback Jim Stoeckel, moved against a UMass defense that the week previous had shut out Maine (it's not much of a comparison, but still).

Harvard coach Joe Restic's new "ball-control" offense proved to be a smashing success as it rolled up 406 yards to UMass' 136.

Stoeckel did a job on the UMass secondary, completing 13 of 19 passes, including 8 to big split end Pat McInally. McInally made several key catches, including a 21-yarder for the first Harvard touchdown. Stoeckel also used fullback Neal Miller well, throwing to him for two TD's.

As well as the Harvard offense did against the Umass defense, it's defense did even better stopping the Minutemen.

The UMies picked up just four net yards on the ground and only 132 in the air, as Peil Pennington and Fred Kelleher were just 9-28.

Seldom, if ever, has the UMass offense looked so bad. Occassionally it would break a run, but just as soon as that happened they'd lose an almost equal amount. The ground "game" featured slow-motion sweeps and "six inches and a cloud of dust" plunges.

The saddest part of the day came at the end of the first half when the Minutemen let themselves get called for delay of game as Pennington and Coach Dick Macpherson conferred before the final play of the half which featured Bob Wolfe running backwards and out-of-bounds to run out the clock.

Passing-wise wasn't much better.

After a good start in which the Minutemen drove 61 yards for a touchdown, they did nothing. In fact they completed three passes out of the nine they would complete all day on that one drive that lasted eight plays.

Pennington was cold, no doubt about it, but he wasn't helped too much by a corps of receivers that, in the second half especially, seemed like they were showing the Crimson their impersonations of Dick Stuart.

UMass had its chances, though, as Harvard fumbled twice, both times deep in their own territory, and faked a punt once that backfired with them losing possession on their own 25. But the Minutemen couldn't do a thing with any of those breaks.

But Harvard also made their own breaks, especially by using a hard rush on punts which several times forced bad ones by Andy Dutkanicz.

INCIDENTALLY: Next week's opponent, Rutgers, ripped Princeton, 39-14, as Holyoke's J.J. Jennings ran for five touchdowns. . . . .Boston College beat Texas A and M 32-34 Saturday night, Rhode Island tied Brown at 20, and Holy Cross was pulverized by Temple, 63-34. . . . . .Ed Hajdusek caught three passes for 71 yards in the early going but was stopped the rest of the way. . . . Paul St. Onge, newly installed at full-back, had a tough time when he carried the ball. . . .

Outmanned UMass Booters Stunned By Maine, 1-0

By BOB HIGGINS

The University of Maine scored a goal at 5:35 of the first half and made it stand as they defeated the UMass soccer team 1-0 Saturday at Orono.

The Minutemen had numerous scoring opportunities and actually dominated much of the play, especially in the first half. However, a strong Maine defense and some good goaltending by John Hackett prevented UMass from scoring.

Carl Vercollone played equally well in the UMass goal, and could hardly be faulted for the lone Maine score. The Minuteman defense was shaky during the game, which was the case on the goal. Maine's Ali Cham made an excellent pass to co-captain Bill Sproul alone in front of the net. Sproul booted one to the left of Vercollone, who barely had time to move.

Perhaps the best chance for UMass came with seven minutes left in the game. Junior Jim Vollinger received a bounding pass in front of the goal with the goalie out of position and a wide open net staring him in face. It was a difficult shot, and Jim got his foot under it too much and put it a foot over the net.

Though they tried to keep the pressure on in the second half, it was obvious that many of the players were dead tired. Coach Rufe substituted very seldom during the game, and a number of people played the entire contest. As a result, they looked ragged near the end.

Coach Rufe said after the game, "We played well, but we'll have to make some offensive adjustments." However, UMass outshot Maine, 19-15. It was simply a matter of not putting the ball in the net.

Harriers Blank BC

By SCOTT HAYES

Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, Tom Maguire, and Paul Segersten have been running together in workouts. The four UMass runners must have decided before Friday's meet against Boston College to try to run together in races also, because that's exactly how they finished---in a four way tie for first place.

Thomas, Gillin, Maguire, and Segersten ran the five mile Franklin Park course in 25:21 to pace the harriers to a 15-49 shutout of Boston College. Tom Wilson was the fifth UMass runner across the finish line, with a time of 25:52. Chris Chambers, the sixth man to finish ahead of the first BC runner, completed the course in 26:06.

Keith Francis was the Eagles' first carrier to finish, and he edged Phil Broughton of UMass at the finish, even though both runners were timed in 26:18. Bill Jewell and Austin Boyle, both of BC, rounded out the top ten with times of 26:20 and 26:40 respectively.

CROSS COUNTRY CORNER----UMass runs against Harvard and Providence, ranked second and third in New England Tuesday in Boston. Harvard recently defeated Northeastern, voted number one in the New England, by the score of 21-34. Tuesday's meet starts at 3:30.

Steve Crowe

The Harvard Blues

It was too warm for the raccoon coats and the preppie hats, but everything else one expected of Harvard came to life this Saturday at the 24-7 disaster.

After it was all over, all the fans rushed onto the field, flooding-around the victorious heroes, the band played the alma mater and about twenty happy Harvys sang along. Then the band dragged everyone over to tie ivy covered Dillon Field House, a fancy mansion-like lockerroom where everyone who was anyone mulled around a while watching the pompous band director up on the roof and the players, with cameras flashing, kissing their Allie McGraws.

It was enough to make one want to throw up.

In fact, a lot of things about the Harvard game made me sick this weekend.

The Collegian brought about twenty people down for a 10:00 a.m. tough football game against the Harvard Crimson, fought hard (almost literally when the Crimson started blocking people in the face), babied them when they started crying when we returned the blows, and won the game, 6-0. The score was announced at halftime, Harvard 23, Collegian 2.

Then there was the dink of a sportswriter sitting next to me in the press box who would stand up and cheer for Harvard, yell instructions to the coach (as every good fan would do), scream and cry when a call went against Harvard, and sit with his hands clenched between his knees as he anxiously awaited the next Crimson play.

I felt like taking the football and cramming it up his typewriter and then pushing him over the side and down into the stands where he belonged. But he might have landed on some decent fan down below, so I didn't.

Then there was the ticket issue. It seems it was Cambridge Day at Harvard, and all tickets were sold for $1.00. But no one had bothered to tell UMass and the students were given a special discounted, $2.50 deal. Whether everyone was admitted for $1 at the gate or it really was only for Cambridge residents (would they really bother to take the time to look at the proof of Cambridge residency?) is not the question. The point is that the UMass students never had a chance to hear about this bargain until it was announced at halftime, or, if they were fortunate enough to pick up a copy, they might have seen it in the sports section of the Globe.

And then, maybe the cheapest thing of all, the Harvard press box ran out of Coke early in the second quarter and sportswriters had to make it through thirty minutes of football with a dry throat.

******

That dink in the press box made some super comments. Once after Neil Miller had bulled his way for about a six yard gain, the preppie commented, "Miller is good."

It was this same way for the whole game. Once he made the brilliant observation, "The UMass running game is non-existent."

I naturally cringed at hearing this and began looking for a football to cram, but then I thought a second and of course found it to be the utter truth.

The difference between the offense of Harvard and UMass was like night and day. The Harvard backfield moved so well and deceptively that even a ten year ABC camera veteran would have trouble following the play.

The Minuteman attack, on the other hand, was composed of halfbacks running into each other, blockers pushing defenders into the runner, and a fullback who ran like he was waiting for someone to come at him first.

The dink was right. It's all been said before. And writing about the UMass running attack is becoming almost as boring as watching it.

UMass Mounties Need Horses

By MIKE KNEELAND

Campus Police on horses? That's what a 9-page proposal submitted by a UMass police officer calls for.

Officer Richard Guilmette said his proposal is designed to prevent body crimes such as rape, robbery and assault in areas police cars can't patrol. He said such areas include the heavily traveled woods by the Observatory on Orchard Hill, the area between the infirmary and Baker Dormitory, and certain areas by the stadium.

"I've investigated two crimes of assault on women between the Infirmary and Baker Dorm. myself," he noted. "There have been at least two rapes in back of the stadium."

Speaking somewhat reluctantly since his plan is still only a proposal, Guilmette said a mounted patrol could be effective in preventing crimes and capturing the assailants.

"With a horse we could make routine patrols in wooded areas," he said. "Horses are not limited by snow, mud and other similar factors that limit a police car. And horses are quiet, making it easier to catch the person committing the crime."

Guilmette submitted two plans. One plan calls for six horses and six trained men while the other asks for three horses and three trained men. "It's purely an economical difference," he said.

Stop! In the name of the law...

The 27 year old officer, who holds a BA in sociology from UMass and is presently studying here for his MA in higher education, said the horses would probably be Morgan geldings, costing between $2,000 and $6,000 each.

Officer Guilmette said UConn and Rutgers presently have a mounted patrol, partly to defer crimes and partly to afford students a chance to stop and chat informally with police officers.

Nearly all students polled by the MDC responded favorably when told of Guilmette's proposal.

"We should be willing to do anything we possibly can to make it easier for the police to do their job," said senior Ira Caplan.

Fellow police officer John Schmitter also supports Guilmette's proposal. "Right now," he said, "there are many places we just can't patrol with our cars."

Guilmette received technical advice in formulating his proposal from riding instructors Linda Hamilton and Jan Brubaker.

Vice Chancellor Gage has reviewed the proposal and has asked for clarification on a few minor points.

The proposal now lies in the hands of David Johnston, University Director of Security.

Time Running Out For Agnew Probers

By JEAN HELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Federal prosecutors are racing the calendar to wind up their probe of Spiro T. Agnew beforestatutes of limitations run out on alleged crimes for which the vice president is being investigated.

Legal arguments may be made that the statutes on at least some of the alleged crimes expire in as little as three weeks, it was learned Monday.

Agnew is under investigation by a special federal grand jury in Baltimore for possible violation of bribery, extortion, tax and conspiracy laws while governor of Maryland.

Under federal law, prosecution for bribery and extortion must be initiated within five years of the commission of the crime. After five years, no legal action can be taken. The statutes of limitations on tax evasion and tax fraud are six years.

The statutes on conspiracy to commit bribery or extortion are five years; on conspiracy to commit tax evasion or fraud, six years.

On Oct. 22, 1968, the Maryland State Board of Public Works held its last major session before Agnew left the office of governor. At that session, seven major engineering contracts were awarded totalling more than $5.6 million.

These contracts involved construction of approaches to the Chesapeake Bay Bridge and the baltimore Outer Harbor Tunnel, the two major projects to be financed out of a $220 million bond issue.

All records involving these contracts have been subpoenaed by the Baltimore grand jury.

Should the panel wish to indict Agnew for extortion, bribery or conspiracy to commit either of those crimes in connection with the Oct. 22, 1968 awards, Agnew's lawyer reportedly are considering an argument that the indictment cannot be returned after Oct. 22, 1973-five years after the meeting, sources close to the case reported.

By that reasoning, however, the prosecutors should have until Oct. 22 of next year to pursue allegations of violation of tax laws, the sources said.

It is known that the prosecutors in Baltimore are moving as quickly as possible to present evidence to the grand jury.

Crucial to that effort was the ruling last week by U.S. Dist. Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman that the grand jury investigation may continue while Agnew's lawyers

We're Working On Those Bugs

By KEVIN KITTREDGE

Working "within the system" has become a cliche for some, but an effective strategy for the Western Mass Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG). Working with Ralph Nader's imprimatur, WMPIRG generates research, information and legal action in areas of the environment, public health and safety, civil rights and consumer protection.

WMPIRG is funded by students at UMass, Amherst, Williams, Mt. Holyoke and Hampshire Colleges. They pay $2 per semester on an optional basis. Keeping the contributions voluntary also provides a fail-safe system. If less than 50 percent of the students contribute, the school withdraws support.

Last year UMass undergraduates contributed over $48,000 for 75 percent support. This year graduate students are eligible to contribute and should provide additional revenue.

Because of delayed payments for students such as the GI Bill, government loans and other financial aid, WMPIRG doesn't have a specific figure to work with. The payments are spread out over the year.

"The method of payment hasn't affected us yet," says Ronald Bogard, Director-Attorney. "The initial payment is large enough to allow effective planning. We presently have $15,000 in the till."

The surest way to insure student support is to produce results. Playing David to Goliaths like the Western Mass Electric Co. and the Highway Commission, WMPIRG has produced results.

Fighting a price hike and the lack of consumer representation, they managed to reduce the request by $3.7 million. It also brought to the attention of consumers WMECO's disregard for their rights.

WMPIRG joined with the PIRG group located in Vermont and other groups to block construction of a superhighway planned from Norwalk, Conn. to Burlington, Vt.

The group has also sponsored legislation designed to regulate prescription drug prices. Some drug prices will vary as much as 100 per cent for the same item in different stores. The bill will require prices to be listed in a prominent place.

Dangerous toys came under their gaze last Christmas and resulted in their ban by the Food and Drug Administration. The students also found 136 types of toys that were not banned, but failed to meet FDA standards.

Presently, WMPIRG is trying to make the consumer aware of the small claims court. "Many people come into the office with complaints about unfair treatment by a business or landlord," said Bogard. How to Sue in Small Claims Court in Western Mass is a booklet available from the WMPIRG office that will help consumers settle complaints in court without a lawyer.

Bogard points out that recently these courts have been used largely by collection agencies rather than consumers who are the victims of unfair business practices.

Giddyup!

By JANET HUGHES

Precision, control and agility are all qualities riders will ask of their horses at the First UMass Novice Horse Trials this Sunday.

Based on endurance tests given to cavalry horses, the University Morgans, descended from cavalry horses, will take part in the all day trials at UMass.

Dressage at 8:30 a.m., a cross country run at 10:30 a.m. and stadium jumping at 2 p.m. will be the events at Tilson Farm.

In order to compete, horse and rider must participate in all three events, Ms. Linda Jaskiel Hamilton, head riding instructor at UMass said.

"Each event," she said, "demonstrates a different area of horsemanship."

Dressage exhibits the horse's obedience, the cross country, the horse's speed and endurance and in stadium jumping, the horse's ability to maneuver over a difficult course, she said.

"About 25 persons are expected to compete," said Ms. Jaskiel Hamilton.

The trials are open to all UMass students in the upper level riding programs. Smith College has also entered several students.

A cross country course has been specially constructed or the trials in the apple orchard Ms. Jaskiel Hamilton said. About a mile in length, it will have obstacles of bales of straw, telephone poles, tires and brush.

More difficult jumps are being constructed so that when completed, the course will include a ditch, water jump and drop jump. The course will incorporate the man-made terraces built into the sides of a steep hill.

Ms. Gina Kear, assistant riding instructor at UMass, who has just returned from attending a riding school in England will judge the events.

Grad Senate Satisfied With Textbook Prices

By JAN ALEXANDER

The Graduate Senate resolved last night not to investigate claims of inflationary prices of books in the University Book Store and Text Book Annex.

Senator Arthur Strohl of the chemistry department had looked into the textbook prices and found that on the whole prices in the Annex were cheaper than their list prices except for non-publisher books. These are manuals and books which are printed by a company for their own use. There is a small distribution of these books at UMass which are used mainly in upper level science courses. The Annex adds a 20 per cent increase onto the original price of the books to pay secretarial costs.

Stohl's motion to reduce the prices of these books and to reimburse the students who had already bought them was voted down.

Treasurer Jim Lindley praised the Campus Center Board of Governors which oversees the Services Committee. He said the new Campus Center director was competent and student oriented and that there had been a "change in philosophy and attitudes" in the management of the Center. For this reason, both Lindley and Senate President John Muller felt that an investigation would not be necessary, but that Muller would ask the governors to submit a report on textbook prices.

In other business it was voted that the North Village Resource Center should not receive a $250.00 grant.

Simon Koechakian, director for the Center, was requesting the grant in order to finance a get-together barbeque for the North Village residents. Koechakian said the 240 apartments were rented by about 75 percent graduate students. Through having a barbeque, the director hoped to develop a sense of community within the apartment complex. He mentioned that there were antagonisms between people with children and people owning dogs, and that residents were also concerned about the two year running $15.00 rent increase.

Koechakian went on to say that he was planning programs in counseling services, family management, budgeting and child care, but that these programs were not firm since he wanted "to respond to the needs of the community."

The last motion that was called and voted in was to support the undergraduate senate in their ruling that only United Farm Worker lettuce, grapes and wines will be served by the university food services.

Imprudent, But Not Dishonest

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) -A lawyer who did private work for Judge Jerome P. Troy while pleading cases in Troy's court says he made an error in judgement. But he still thinks he did nothing unethical.

The lawyer testified Monday in removal hearings against the disbarred Dorchester District Court judge, which continue today.

"It was imprudent for me to go before Judge Troy, but I don't think it was dishonest," Attorney Donald Carvin told the Executive Council, which has final say on the judge's removal.

The lawyer received no pay from Troy for a land deal he worked on, and the judge named Carvin to represent indigents at county expense. This relationship was one of six alleged offenses that the Supreme Judicial Court found very serious when it disbarred Troy.

Student Senate Sets Goal Of Unity

1. The Student Senate should be committed to building the Student Government Association into a union of students acting as an autonomous voice for students, with an 1 independent economic base.
2. The Unity Slate is committed to providing resources for the development of cooperative economic projects and services to students, which in the long run reduce the degree of dependence on other constituencies in the university community with which the students may have conflicts of interest.
3. The Unity Slate opposes any further tuition hikes or rents and fees increases.
4. The Unity Slate is committed to the boycott of scab lettuce, and to insuring that no university outlet serves scab lettuce and grapes.
5. The Unity Slate is committed to insuring that the university vigorously enforces programs which are designed to reduce the effects of institutional racism and sexism on women and third world people such as affirmative action.
6. The Unity Slate is in favor of equal pay for student workers.
7. The Unity Slate believes that the bus service should be restored and expanded.
8. The Unity Slate proposes a S.G.A. program of power structure research into the University of Massachusetts, designed to demystify the structure and processes of the University and reveal its true role in the larger social system.
9. The Unity Slate supports maximum student participation in the governance of the university and its programs, and full student control over student matters and those areas funded solely by students. In connection with this, the Unity Slate would vigorously pursue the enforcement and expansion of institutional acceptance and guarantee of students' rights.
10. The Unity Slate opposes cutbacks in financial aid to students in need . Students should organize to resist any such moves.
11. The Unity Slate favors optional meal ticket plans.
12. The Unity Slate supports the demands of the residents of the residential colleges for full autonomy, and for real financial commitment by the university to see them carried out.
13. The Unity Slate opposes inequitable parking fee hikes.
14. The Unity Slate supports the vigorous pursuit of students initiated innovation in the university's academic program, with the goal of providing maximum individual control over the learning process.

Selectman Approve Making Their Communications Public

By MIKE ALLAIN

The Amherst Board of Selectmen last night approved an addition to the town Procedures Manual which will now make public all communication received or sent by the Board.

In a memorandum from Chairperson Nancy B. Eddy, the Subcommittee on Procedures outlined provisions for making correspondence of the Board public while specifying which documents will remain confidential.

Those communications presumed by the Board to be confidential must receive a majority vote from the Board to be labeled as such, while communications believed to be confidential by any board, committee, or individual will be temporarily designated confidential upon request.

The Board would vote at the next regular meeting to decide whether or not the document should retain confidential status.

The memorandum calls for a weekly "Friday packet" to be made available to the press and public at noon on the following Monday preceding that evening's meeting.

This packet will contain communications to be discussed on Monday night, giving anyone interested the opportunity to be informed.

"Lengthy memoranda" and information concerning "substantive issues" will be made available to the Board of Selectmen and the press one week prior to scheduled discussion.

The Board believes that the early release of such material will give the press an opportunity to research background information and publicize both the issues to be discussed and the alternatives available for action.

Also available at each Selectmen's meeting will be copies of the memoranda, letters, petitions, and prepared motions to be discussed. This material will be available for public distribution.

In a seperate action, The Board approved the Town Warrant to be acted upon at the Town Meeting on October 15.

The warrant consists of 29 articles, including a proposal from the Citizens Advisory Committee to amend town by-laws concerning unrestrained dogs.

Should town meeting members approve this proposal, any dog found to be not on the premises of the owner or on the authorized premises of another person will be deemed a public nuisance.

In effect, any unrestrained dog found anywhere but on the owner's premises will be impounded if the article is passed.

Other articles call for the town to raise a sum of money to be added to the account for Elm Tree Care, and Pest Control.

If passed, the town would appropriate money for the clearance of deceased Elms and the planting of new ones.

The Board also approved plans for erecting two phone booths in Amherst Center. Town Manager Allan Torrey said the phone booths would be primarily a public service while still generating "several hundred dollars" in annual revenue for the town.

The design of the phone booths is not yet decided.

Outreach staff member Sally Follansbee addressed a large group of students interested in the social service organization last night.

OUTREACH

You Name It, We'll Get It

By BARBARA VOORHEES

"It's bizarre to hold this meeting in a large lecture hall. This is just the type of situation we want to get you away from."

So said Sally Follansbee, OUTREACH staff member, at last night's mass meeting of students interested in volunteering for full-time positions for credit during the spring semester. The meeting was held in 106 Thompson and will be repeated tonight, same place, from 7:30-10.

More than 100 students attended the meeting at which an outline of the OUTREACH program was given. Following the meeting, five smaller groups met for those interested in the general areas of social services, mass communications, technical and professional areas, working in New York city or Washington D.C.

Individual interviews were set up at the small group meetings.

Ms. Follansbee told the group that OUTREACH requirements for participants included a two page letter which the student should bring to his interview telling his expectations from the program, and a four page paper at the end of the volunteer job. Other requirements will be set up by the major department with which the student works. Typical major department requirements cited by Ms. Follansbee were a journal, a paper or reading assignments.

Another requirement for most students is to take a pre-course and a post-course at the University related to the volunteer job.

A participant in the program must pay regular tuition and $16 in other fees. He will be a registered student. Thus students receiving scholarships, social security money or other financial help will not be cut off from their aid during their volunteer work.

Any student is eligible for the program regardless of cum.

The general arrangement for participants in the program is to receive six credits from the major department and nine elective credits.

A lease on a residential building in Washington, D.C., was signed by members of OUTREACH yesterday. Students working in that city will be able to live in the building for approximately the same amount as a semester of dorm living would cost.

Register A Bike-For Free

By AVIS YUNI

Six free bicycle registration days will be held October 9-11, and 16-18 for students and staff, Diana White of the Department of Public Safety (UMass Police) told the Collegian recently.

From 10:00 am to 7:00 pm on the specified days, tables will be set up in major areas on campus. Tables will be outside the following locations: Oct. 9th-Hampden Dining Commons, Oct. 10th-Worcester Dining Commons, Oct. 11th-Franklin Dining Commons, Oct. 16th, 17th, and 18th-Campus Center.

Students and Staff will be able to bring their bicycles to the tables, have them engraved with their Social Security numbers, registered with the department, and will have a registration decal attached, all free of charge.

Ms. White explained that this is being done in an effort to curb the number of bicycle thefts on campus. The decal attached is essential for the department since it acts as a license plate.

"There is no ready means of identifying a bicycle," Ms. White said. "However it will be easier to retrieve stolen ones with this decal."

The police department puts out a hot sheet each week of stolen bicycles. If they have the decals it will be easier to identify them since the decal numbers could be seen by cruising patrol cars easily.

Last year an engraving program was made available to students. When bicycles were just engraved, with Social Security numbers, they had to be turned up-side down for the number to be seen. This made it very difficult to check for stolen bicycles, Ms. White said.

This free bicycle registration will not be compulsory, said Ms. White, but the police will encourage people to register their bicycles with them. Students unable to register their bicycles on the days indicated may contact the UMass Police for registration information.

Consumers Feel Squeeze As Food Prices Rise

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The squeeze on the pocketbook got a little bit tighter during September, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey which shows the family grocery bill was almost 9 per cent higher last month than it was in March.

Consumers looking for bargains found continuing declines in the price of pork and eggs. But the decreases were offset by jumps of several per cent in the price of cookies, milk, sugar and butter.

The AP checked the prices of 15 food and nonfood items in 13 cities on March 1 and has rechecked at the beginning of each succeeding month, with extra surveys to gauge the effect of special government controls.

Prices in general stayed fairly steady during September, despite the end to the freeze on beef and the imposition of new regulations on other foods. The total marketbasket bill was up in six cities and down in seven, with most changes averaging one per cent or so.

Of the total number of items checked, 36 per cent increased in price from Sept. 1 to Oct. 1; 21 per cent went down; 32 per cent were unchanged; and 11 percent were unavailable on one of the check dates.

The picture for the seven-month period from March 1 to Oct. 1 was gloomier. The marketbasket price was up in every city except Dallas where it declined by one penny-from $9.48 to $9.47 for 13 available items. The average increase was 8.8 per cent.

On Sept. 1, the AP found that the marketbasket bill in every city was higher than it had been on March 1, with increases averaging seven per cent over the six-month period.

The reasons for the increases were familiar to consumers: higher wholesale prices, rising operating costs, increased worldwide demand for commodities. Boosts in one item pushed up prices of other goods.

Chocolate chip cookies, which had been selling for about 60 cents for a 14 1/2-ounce bag in most areas, went up in 11 of 13 cities checked, increasing an average of nine per cent. This reflected higher prices for ingredients.

Sugar was up in nine cities, unchanged in two and not available in two; milk was up in nine cities, generally a penny or two per quart, and was unchanged in four cities; butter was up in 11 cities, selling for over $1 a pound in most areas and was down in two.

On the brighter side there were bargains in pork chops and eggs, which skyrocketed in mid-August, then started to drop as consumers balked at high prices.

Beef prices-which stayed frozen from the end of March until Sept. 10, prompting shortages and warnings of future leaps-went up in a few areas, but the increases weren't nearly so bad as predicted.

The AP survey covered Albuquerque, N.M.; Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle. The check list included: pork chops, eggs, butter, cookies, chopped chuck, frozen orange juice, coffee, paper towels, peanut butter, detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, all-beef franks and sugar.

Penn Central Ailing; Commission Pleads Reorg

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate Commerce Commission asked a federal judge Monday to keep the Penn Central Railroad running until a reorganization plan could be drawn up for the financially ailing corporation.

Liquidation of the railroad, the ICC said in a report to U.S. District Court Judge John P. Fullam, would have "a severe economic effect on the people of the entire northeast sector of the country." It also would "have a ripple effect from coast to coast," the commission said.

Judge Fullam currently is overseeing the reorganization of the Penn Central under federal bankruptcy statutes. He had asked the ICC to prepare by Oct. 1 a proposal that would keep the railroad running without eroding the assets of its creditors.

Otherwise, Judge Fullam said, he would have no choice but to order the railroad shut down. He has set a hearing in Philadelphia Oct. 12 to determine what will be done with the railroad.

Neither Judge Fullam nor the railroad trustees will have comment on the ICC report until after the Oct. 12 hearing.

The ICC offered no plan for reorganization but said it had taken preliminary steps towards restructuring the Penn Central and the other ailing railroads in the Northeast.

It said it would hold a series of hearings in the near future to determine just how much of the Penn Central's 20,000 miles of track should be utilized after reorganization.

These hearings, the ICC said, also would focus on the adequacy of alternative transportation in some areas, on the condition of the Penn Central's equipment and on the public's willingness to provide financial support.

The commission said it felt Penn Central could be restructured into a viable network if external assistance was provided but rejected outright all three proposals presented to it during its more than one month of hearings.

The ICC said its final plan would call for "substantial federal-state monetary and other assistance."

Hospitals Only Haven For "Forgotten Breed"

By ERIC SHARP
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — They sat in wheel chairs in the crowded emergency room, bare backs exposed by hospital gowns and dignity tattered by the admission that they are too ill to go home and too poor to go anywhere else.

They are a forgotten breed, and when two of them died in their wheel chairs last week at Jackson Memorial Hospital's emergency room it was four hours before any of the nurses and physicians noticed.

The deaths of Volton Jordan, 60, and Clarence Brinson, 54, spotlighted the plight of the poor who are too sick to live alone and not sick enough to be admitted to the hospital. Jordan died of a heart attack and Brinson of chronic pulmonary disease as they waited for space in a nursing home.

The staff calls the indigents boarders. They live in wheel chairs, their days filled with noise and their nights spent on stretchers in treatment rooms.

But things are a bit brighter now. A few months ago, the emergency room housed about 30 boarders. But the county raised its daily care payments from $11.50 to $13.50 per patient and the nursing homes will take them now.

Linda Vick, emergency room head nurse, said Monday morning's census of boarders was 14.

"The social service agencies are closed over the weekend, so the boarder population builds up," Miss Vick said. "We put them in nursing and boarding homes as fast as we can. By Tuesday we'll probably be down to four or five."

"Most of them don't need hospitalization," she said. "They just need daily care. But we don't have the facilities for that."

Charley Love, 43, fell Saturday and hurt his shoulder. Policemen brought him to Jackson.

"I feel pretty good. I think I'll get out of here soon," he said Monday as attendants wheeled emergency patients by on stretchers. "These people here the staff are about the nicest I've ever met. They really treat me good. I wish they could give me a room, but I know they just don't have none."

One hospital spokesman said, "This problem exists at big public hospitals all over the country. If we could get the other hospitals in the county to take some of these patients we wouldn't have anyone living in waiting rooms, but nobody wants a patient who can't pay."

Brezhnev-Shultz Meet At Kremlin

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. Treasury Secretary George Shultz held a surprice two-hour meeting last night with Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, a U.S. spokesman announced.

Later the official Soviet news agency Tass said the two men covered "a wide range of questions concerning Soviet-U.S. relations, including the development of commercial...ties."

The meeting, held in the Kremlin, came shortly after Shultz formally opened the third plenary session of the Soviet-American Trade Commission.

Brezhnev's decision to meet with Shultz on the secretary's first day of talks here appeared to reflect the Soviet Union's concern for the embattled commerce pact that has been blocked by congressional opposition to granting Russia most-favored-nation trading status.

The status has been granted to all non-Communist U.S. trading partners, and also to Communist Yugoslavia and Poland. The goods of countries lacking the status are subject to higher tariffs.

Israeli Premier To Plead For Transit Camp

Golda Meir To Visit Austria

By ROLAND PRINZ
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Premier Golda Meir of Israel prepared on Monday to visit Vienna in a personal appeal for reversal of Austria's pledge to close down a transit camp for emigrating Soviet Jews.

Chancellor Bruno Kreisky said he would explain the Austrian stand-"which she seems not to know exactly." But he gave no indication he would change his mind because of Mrs. Meir's plans for the unusual appeal.

The 75-year-old Israeli leader declared in a speech to the parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe in Strasbourg, France, that the Austrian decision represented "a great victory" for Palestinian terrorism and must be changed.

Informants in Strasbourg, where Mrs. Meir is spending two days at the assembly, said she will travel here Tuesday morning in an effort to use her persuasive powers on Kreisky.

But Kreisky reaffirmed that the pledge was necessary and said it was "improbable" that he would go back on it.

"Threatened human lives have to be saved first," he said. "Only then come the others."

Kreisky, himself a Jew, made the pledge after two Palestinian guerrillas kidnaped an Austrian border guard Friday along with three Soviet Jews on the way to Israel. The four hostages were freed unharmed after the Austrian leader gave his word.

Kreisky subsequently said emigrating Soviet Jews will still get individual Austrian transit visas, but the transit facility at Schoenau Castle 70 miles south of Vienna will have to halt operations and group processing will have to stop.

The facility, operated by the Jewish Agency, has been handling about 2,650 Soviet Jews a month since Moscow relaxed immigration restrictions two years ago.

Jewish Agency representatives in Vienna said emigrating Jews were still arriving from the Soviet Union at the regular rate of 40-120 a day. They claimed they had no plans to shut down the camp.

Sources in Tel Aviv said Mrs. Meir likely would visit the facility during her stay in the Austrian capital. Informants in Strasbourg with Mrs. Meir said the visit would be made at her request. They did not say how long she planned to stay.

The results of her plans for a personal plea to Kreisky were uncertain. The Austrian chancellor was quoted on the Austrian broadcasting network as saying he would not be pressured on the matter.

Mrs. Meir's apparently quick decision to travel to Vienna also represented a departure from normal protocol for visits by government heads and seemed to put Kreisky on the spot.

It was another reflection of personal indignation by Mrs. Meir over the danger to Jewish immigration operations posed by the Austrian decision.

Earlier Monday, she discarded a text prepared for an address to the Council of Europe gathering in Strasbourg and voiced her views in an extemporaneous talk.

She told the European delegates that Kreisky's promise was a great Arab victory and "the greatest encouragement to terror throughout the world."

Gas Prices May Rise Again!

By BOB MONROE
Associated Press Writer

Relaxed Phase 4 controls already have increased the cost of gasoline for motorists in many areas, but rising wholesale prices may quickly generate pressure for a new round of retail hikes.

Independent operators of branded service stations in nine states met over the weekend in Las Vegas and called for an indefinite, nationwide shutdown of 200,000 stations until all retail price controls are lifted.

But Charles Binsted, President of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, the only national group representing branded dealers, said his organization had not taken any move in that direction.

And a shutdown protest in Houston over the Cost of Living Council's Phase 4 gasoline regulations drew little support Monday despite predictions that 80 per cent of the stations would close.

In Southern California, two dealers' associations said they would urge a shutdown of their 3,000-member stations for at least a week beginning Friday. The dealers will be asked at a meeting in Los Angeles Wednesday night to lock their pumps until the council lifts Phase 4 price ceilings, said an attorney for one group. "You've got a bunch of angry dealers," said one operator. "They're fed up and they're not going to take anymore."

A spokesman for a station operators' association in Northern California said its members were "livid with rage" over the council's increases to consumers.

The council, in new rules issued Friday, relaxed its regulations to change the base date for ceiling prices from last Jan. 10 to May 15 and allowed dealers to pass along all wholesale increases to Sept. 28. This allowed increases of as much as 2½ cents a gallon.

But three major companies announced wholesale price increases of from two-tenths of a cent to 1½ cents a gallon over the weekend and these hikes must be absorbed by the dealers.

"The ink is not dry on the new regulations and we find that Shell went up one minute after midnight on the 29th, which means the dealers are not entitled to that two-tenths of a cent," Binsted said. Phillips Petroleum Co. raised wholesale prices by a half-cent a gallon and Atlantic Richfield set a 1½ cent increase.

Senators Take Final Stand Against Defense Spending Bill

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate critics of increasing defense spending girded Monday for a final assault on a $21 billion weapons authorization bill.

The measure also calls for a reduction of 110,000 in the number of U.S. troops overseas.

Votes were scheduled on a $750 million overall cut proposed by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., and an alternative $500 million reduction advocated by Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va.

During nine days of Senate debate, administration supporters were successful in defeating proposed curtailment of specific weapons systems.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., urged the Senate note to undo months of congressional scrutiny of individual programs with a "meat-ax approach" that he called impractical and dangerous to national security.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., argued on the other hand that defense spending must be curtailed if the national budget is to be hald within limits without 25 to 40 per cent cuts in such programs as child nutrition, forest protection, health services and education.

Byrd defended his $500 million cut proposal as merely restoring the bill to the $20.4 billion voted by the Senate Armed Services Committee before additions were made on the floor. The Senate added $494 million for the purchase of 50 additional F14 fighter aircraft for the Navy and Marine Corps.

The House reached a $20.4 billion total, $1.5 billion under President Nixon's budget request, by voting to require the Defense Department to make $950 million in overall reductions.

Differences in the House and Senate versions will have to be resolved in conference committee.

The Senate bill would require withdrawal of 110,000 land based U.S. troops from overseas stations by Dec. 31, 1975, including 40,000 by June 30, 1974. It also would require a reduction of 156,100 in the overall active duty strength of the Army, Navy and Air Force by next June 30.

Both houses approved $1.5 billion for continuing the Navy's accelerated schedule for development and construction of the Trident submarine system, completing the first fully equipped submarine in 1978.

The Senate voted $1.1 billion for the purchase of 77 F15 aircraft for the Air Force, compared with 39 allowed by the House.

The Senate bill strips $100 million from the $473.5 million requested by the administration for the B1 bomber development program.

and the Justice Department battle in court over the grand jury's constitutional right to investigate a sitting vice president.

In the meantime, Agnew was to return here late Monday afternoon from a weekend on the West Coast during which he made the strongest statement in his personal defense since he disclosed Aug. 6 that he was under investigation.

Agnew also attacked Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry E. Petersen as the source of a controversial news leak about the investigation. On Monday, the White House said Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson had assured President Nixon that Petersen was not the source of the CBS news report Sept. 22. That report quoted sources as saying Petersen had said of the investigation: "We've got the evidence; we've got it cold."

"This morning the attorney general assured the White House that Asst. Atty. Gen. Petersen was not the source of the statement reported on CBS," said Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren.

Ehrlichman Asked $5000 For Plumbers

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former presidential counsel Charles W. Colson has testified that at John Ehrlichman's request he raised $5,000 for the head of the "plumbers squad," possibly just before the break-in at the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

Colson's testimony about the financial transactions was contained in the transcript of grand jury hearings which was made public Monday. Ehrlichman, who has been indicted with three other former presidential advisers in the 1971 break-in, has denied he knew about the break-in in advance.

Colson said Ehrlichman, formerly President Nixon's chief domestic adviser, called him in either late August or early September 1971-possibly before the Labor Day weekend break-in.

"Mr. Ehrlichman asked me if I could obtain $5,000 for Mr. Krogh and he indicated that the money was needed rather quickly," Colson testified.

Egil Krogh Jr., a former White House aide, has been indicted and has acknowledged he was the supervisor of the undercover White House "plumbers squad" which carried out the burglary.

"I obtained the money" Colson said, "from Mr. Joseph Baroody who was at the time..a partner in the public relations firm that was organizing the Committee for New Prosperity..." Colson said the committee was a private group formed to "generate public support for the President's new economic policy."

Segretti Pleads Guilty To Election Conspiracy

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Political saboteur Donald H. Segretti pleaded guilty Monday to violating federal election laws during last year's Democratic presidential primary in Florida.

In Senate testimony, Segretti was identified as receiving between $30,000 and $40,000 from a fund raiser for President Nixon's campaign.

Segretti's guilty plea was to three charges, including conspiracy and distributing political literature which did not identify the persons responsible for distributing it.

A letter outlining the cooperation Segretti agreed to give prosecutors in exchange for immunity from further grand jury prosecution was sealed by the court at the request of Segretti's attorney and federal prosecutors. No reason was given for keeping the letter secret.

Segretti had been indicted by a federal grand jury in Tampa, Fla., on four counts, but prosecutors agreed to drop one of them.

Among items Segretti was accused of distributing was a letter on Sen. Edmund S. Muskie's campaign stationery accusing two other Democratic candidates, Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota and Henry Jackson of Washington, of sexual misconduct.

Segretti, 32, a Los Angeles attorney, entered his plea before U.S. District Court Judge Gerhard A. Gesell who deferred sentencing on the three misdemeanor charges. Each carries a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Segretti will appear before the Senate Watergate committee Wednesday, chairman Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., announced Monday.

Ervin said the committee cancelled its planned Tuesday hearing because attorneys for two other scheduled witnesses, former presidential appointments secretary Dwight L. Chapin and private investigator John Buckley, told the panel their clients would invoke their Fifth Amendment rights and refuse to testify.

Ecologists Voice Concern Over Offshore Drilling

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Environment groups appear even more concerned about the onshore impacts of proposed oil development off the Atlantic coast than about the risk of oil spills, a top administration environment advisor said Monday.

John Busterud, a member of the President's Council on Environmental Quality, gave newsmen that assessment when asked his impression of the first two rounds of public hearings by his council on the offshore oil issue.

The hearings resume Wednesday in Mineola, N.Y., following sessions last month in Washington, D.C., Boston and Anchorage, Alaska.

The council is studying, by order of President Nixon, the possible environmental impacts of opening the Atlantic coastal offshore waters and the gulf of Alaska to oil exploration and development.

Busterud said the President would consult the council's study, due next April, before deciding whether to press forward with oil development of the two areas.

He said the council's public hearings would be supplemented by several other studies and reviews before a final report, with action recommendations, is sent to the President.

Asked his impression, so far, of the views brought out in the first three hearing sessions, Busterud said the petroleum industry claimed to have adequate technology to prevent drilling accidents, while environment groups wondered wheteer the best technology would, in fact, be applied.

"The environment groups still seem more concerned with the secondary effects than with the hazard of oil spills," he said.

The term secondary effects refers to the wide range of environmental, economic and social impacts that would arise onshore as a result of offshore oil activity, stemming from the establishment of refineries, petrochemical plants, distribution facilities and related economic expansion.

Offshore Rig Explodes

NEW ORLEANS(AP)-A gas well blew out and later broke into flames on a drilling rig in the Gulf of Mexico off the Louisiana coast Monday. Three men were injured.

The escaping gas was still burning Monday night. It was not immediately determined exactly how many men were aboard the rig, but reports from the owners and drillers indicated there were 31.

All the men were picked up by the vessel State Queen, which was in the area at the time of the blowout. The injured, two of them severely burned, were picked up by a helicopter and taken to a Lake Charles hospital.

Officials said the gas ignited three or four hours after the blowout, and the men aboard had sufficient time to escape. It was not known how the well caught fire or how the three men were injured.

Troops Clash Near Saigon In New Communist Offensive

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - Communists and government troops fought the biggest battle since the Vietnam cease-fire 40 miles northwest of Saigon over the weekend, the Saigon command said Monday.

President Nguyen Van Thieu declared the Communists had taken "the initial step to ignite a new offensive."

Waves of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong infantry attacked two government strongpoints near the Cambodia-South Vietnam border in 24 hours of savage fighting ending Sunday afternoon leaving more than 300 soldiers from both sides dead, wounded or missing, the command announced.

Military spokesman Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien claimed 183 Communist bodies were counted around the two positions, the biggest body count for a single day's fighting since Jan. 28.

Government casualties were put at nine killed and more than 100 wonded and missing. One battalion suffered more than 35 per cent casualties.

The two positions between Khiem Hanb and the provincial capital of Tay Ninh were defended by about 500 men.

Government artillery bombarded the 1,200 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong attackers but low monsoon clouds prevented air support.

In Cambodia, Communist-led insurgent forces continued to apply pressure north and south of Phnom Penh.

Associated Press reporters Matt Franjola and Denis D. Gray reported from opposite ends of the southern battle line that field commanders described the situation as critical.

One of them said: "The South Vietnamese and American armies could not defeat the Communists, how can the Cambodians be expected to do it."

At Kompong Cham, 47 miles northeast of Phnom Penh, the military command said its troops retook Tadong Pagoda and the Thmar Kol dike in their push toward the city's encircled airport.

The airport, about three miles nothwest of Kompong Cham, is the last major government installation in the area under insurgent pressure.

This Grape Has A Past

CONCORD (AP)-Clumps of green and purple grapes fill an ancient vine beside a white clapboard cottage here this fall, just as they have for the past 123 years since Ephraim Bull developed the first strain of Concord grapes.

The vine never made Bull wealthy, but its offsprings came to dominate the domestic wine industry.

The vine is a minor landmark in the town whose history is highlighted by Revolutionary War battles and 19th Century intellectuals.

Bull had crossed a tough wild vine that grew behind his cottage with other vines until he came up with the strain he was looking for in 1849.

The tart-early-ripening fruit that was able to withstand tough New England winters was publicly introduced in 1855 and spread across the United States and to Europe as the Concord grape.

Others became rich cultivating his strain, but Bull became only bitter. Two other varieties he developed, Esther and Rockwell, never caught on.

In 1895, Bull died a poor man in Concord's Home for the Aged. His Sleepy Hollow Cemetery tombstone reads: "He sowed, others reaped."

On a fence outside Grapevine Cottage on Lexington Road a plaque that says: "Ephraim Wales Bull planted seeds of a wild Labrusca grape found growing on this hillside which after three generations through his work and wisdom became in this garden in September 1849 the Concord grape."

Death Penalty Restored

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts House passed and sent to the Senate Monday a bill restoring the death penalty for persons convicted of murder.

The bill was approved on a 143-82 roll call vote after an amendment to restrict the death penalty to persons already in prison who commit murder was rejected.

The amendment was offered by Rep. Garreth J. Lynch, D-Westfield, who said that currently there is no way to punish someone already serving a life sentence if he commits a murder while in prison.

"We can only give him another life sentence," he said.

Presently the legislature is awaiting an advisory ruling from the state Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the bill.

Poor Attendance Reported As Dorchester High Reopens

BOSTON (AP)-Dorchester High School, the scene of racial problems last week, was reopened Monday for its 400 seniors, but less than half of them attended.

The school was closed last Thursday following a series of confrontations between blacks and whites.

The school's approximately 500 junior and sophomore students are not scheduled to return until Wednesday.

Monay's session was devoted mainly to discussing measures proposed to maintain order at the school. Parents, community leaders, teachers and students met during the weekend to discuss plans.

Mayor Kevin H. White approved hiring 10 security aides, and they are expected to be on duty Wednesday when the entire student body is scheduled to return.

William Harrison, associate superintendent of schools, said he expects uniformed police to be on duty at the school for approximately one week.

Two officers and several faculty members with student checkoff lists were at each of the five gates leading to the school Monday.

There were no incidents reported at the school Monday that pertained to the earlier problems.

Last Thursday, seven persons were treated for injuries at a hospital, and six others were treated by a school nurse. Police arrested 10 persons and charged five of them with possession of dangerous weapons.

Help For Handicapped Is In Distant Future

BOSTON (AP)-Help for the state's handicapped and retarded children provided under a new state law may still be two to three years away, according to Dr. Joseph P. Rice, associate commissioner of special education.

Dr. Rice told some 100 members of a special task force working on regulations to implement that law that the first year of its operation will be one of stock taking."

The so-called Bartley-Daly bill passed during the 1972 session of the legislature is scheduled to go into effect next September, and it could take nearly that long for the five state agencies involved to agree on how it is to be implemented.

The law reclassified children formerly known as blind, deaf emotionally disturbed or retarded as "children with special needs."

More than change in name, however, the law talks to the needs of children not to their deficiencies," said Ann McGonigle of the special education department.

Dr. Rice warned that full implementation of the law would take two to three years.

"But if in two years we still have pockets of unserved children," he added, "I will lead the vanguard into the courts."

The regulations proposed by the task force must now be approved by five state agencies-the Departments of Public Mental Health, Health, Education, Public Welfare and Youth Services.

They will come up for a vote of the state Board of Education in December after which there will be public hearings on the proposed rules.

The regulations will deal with such issues as transportation of handicapped children, one of the most costly and frequently criticized areas of state care. A legislative commision has rapped programs for spending more on transporting handicapped children than on educating them.

Under the law,education programs at state institutions are expected to be beefed up when the Department of Education will take over responsibility for the programs from the Department of Mental Health.

Parent groups and such organizations as the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Children have questioned the quality of education programs at such institutions as the Fernald School and Belchertown State School and lobbied for improvements.

Racial Imbalance Law May Be Given A Breather

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-A bill to suspend the state's racial imbalance law is on the calendar once again today, as the Senate reconsiders last week's 22-12 vote by which it failed to override the governor's veto. The measure would suspend the nation's only racial imbalance law for one year, giving breathing time to Springfield, which is under pressure to bring its schools into line with the law.

The Senate gave final approval and sent to the House Monday another bill that would effectively gut the racial imbalance law in Boston by requiring a referendum vote on any changes in the city's school districts.

The 23-14 roll call means that an override vote on a probable veto by the governor would be a very close thing.

Backers of the bill insist that it has nothing to do with racial imbalance.

"This bill gives a person the right to vote on changes in school districts, whether he is white or black. That's all it does," said Sen. Arthur J. Lewis, D-Boston, calling it a home-rule measure.

The Senate gave final approval and sent to the House another bill with home rule implications: an act granting fire-fighters and policemen the right to binding arbitration. The measure, approved on a 32-3 vote, would require a municipality to abide by the decision of an arbitrator in disputes with firefighters and policemen.

Sen. William L. Saltonstall, R-Manchester, objected last week that "after all the efforts we've put into building democracy and community awareness in this state, this bill reduces the power of local governments to control their own affairs."

The Senate gave final approval and sent to the House two gambling bills that received initial passage just two legislative days ago.

On a 22-11 vote, it approved a bill that would add 60 harness racing days in four Western Massachusetts counties.

Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, who has opposed all gambling and lottery bills, said some unnamed backers stand to profit hugely from its passage.

Sen. James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, said he didn't know who the bill's backers might be, but that the state stood to gain $5 to $6 million in additional revenue from it.

On a 28-5 vote, the Senate approved a measure that would legalize the game of beano on Sundays.

Kelly called it a harmless bill to offer Sunday recreation to the poor and lonely.

But Locke saw more sinister implications. He said the removal of stricutres against Sunday beano chips away at one more of the built-in safeguards that were placed on the 1971 measure legalizing the game.

Dean Allen To Advise Wood On Educational Programs

President Robert Wood announced today that Dwight Allen, in addition to his responsibilities as Dean of the University's School of Education at Amherst, will take on additional duties advising the President on a University-wide basis.

Dean Allen will assist the President regarding a variety of issues relating to educational innovation and outreach, both within the University and in cooperation with other colleges and universities in Massachusetts and throughout New England.

To begin with, President Wood has asked Dean Allen to assist him on three specific projects:

1. Evaluating the pace and status of educational change within the University;
2. Serving as the President's chief representative on the inter-institutional Professional Advisory Task Force which is involved in planning for a Massachusetts Open University; and
3. Working with the New England Public university presidents and their Joint Operations Committee to explore regional approaches to improving teaching throughout the area.

In announcing the appointment, President Wood said, "I know this new association will be constructive and fruitful, and of invaluable assistance to the University as it confronts the difficult educational challenges of the 1970's."

The Flu Is Coming! The Flu Is Coming!

The University Health Services has been advised by the Department of Public Health that Massachusetts will experience an epidemic of influenza this year. Both the London strain of Influenza A and some Influenza B are expected.

The U.S. Public Health Service has not recommended immunization against influenza for individuals under the age of 50 who are in good general halth. For students who have chronic heart disease, chronic lung disease, chronic kidney disease, or diabets, immunization against influenza can be obtained at the University Health Services. You may call the Appointment Desk at 5-0057 for an appointment. Because our supply of the vaccine is limited, we give first priority to those students with chronic medical conditions.

Brother Indicated In Cavalieri Murder

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP)-A witness in the murder trial of Edward S. Lykus testified Monday that 13-year-old Paul Cavalieri was shot and killed last fall by his own brother, not by the defendant.

William Delaney, 31, of Taunton said the victim's brother, Anthony Cavalieri, told him the shooting had occurred in a car after an argument between the two brothers. Delaney said Lykus, Richard Pardiff and the Cavalieri brothers were present during the shooting.

Delaney testified while the New England Superior Court jury was excused from the courtroom.

Delaney said Lykus told him all four were high on pills. He said Lykus told him where $49,000 was hidden and asked Delaney to pick it up.

Lykus, 20, of Woonsocket, R.I., is charged with the kidnap-murder of the Cavalieri youth, who disappeared from his North Attleboro home last Nov. 2. The victim's parents paid a $50,000 ransom, but their son's body was discovered April 12 in North Attleboro.

The Joys Of Apathy

By BOB ROSSMAN

Question-who needs ulcers? Answer-nobody. Ulcers are not just the gimmick of the older generation, but they are infiltrating our ranks more rapidly than anyone would care to believe. Oh, you say that we're old enough to have them? After all, college has a lot of pressures like keeping up the ol' marks and trying to figure out where you'll be and what you'll do when you get out. But take a look at your younger brothers and sisters, who are only in high school. They've got pressures too. Adolescence, marks, meeting the opposite sex, and the thought of college (which we all know ain't exactly no thornless bed of roses). I have a friend who's a senior in high school that has an ulcer. I thought at first that it was unusual, but he was telling me how some of his buddies have ulcers too. They get together and have Maalox parties.

If something doesn't happen soon, I can definitely see the trend getting to the point where a doctor delivers a baby, and when he whacks the kid, the kid cries so hard that he grabs his stomach, and pukes all over the doctor. That's bad enough, but the doctor's already had his ulcer since med school, and barfs back all over the kid. Big mess-and unnecessary.

I can't claim to be able to cure ulcers, but I can offer a remedy for their prevention-APATHY. It may sound all too simplistic, but if it is, why are their still so many ulcers floating around? That's easy. Too many people believe apathy is a bad thing. But when used in a conscientiously applied program apathy is really good.

Take the government (please). If we just left it alone, we wouldn't have the Watergate hearings cluttering up afternoon television. But no, we had to go screw things up, and now the housewives of America can't watch their favorite soap operas every day. Or, we read about how people of the country got out in force, and campaigned vigorously for George McGovern. Look at how much good we did for him. If we just sat back, he probably would have at least carried South Dakota.

Take school. People who have majors that demand diligent and continuous work are always worrying, "Are these problems right?", "How did I do on that last exam?", and finally, "I wonder what professor Hitler

Is V.P. Necessary?

Now that Agnew has got himself in a real mess, many political analysts across the country are taking the opportunity to demand changes in the laws concerning Vice Presidents. One commentator has gone so far as to recommend abolition of the office completely. While this position has its attractive qualities, it also poses some problems. I suppose the Vice Presidency is the most agonizing and least understood office in Washington, as I'm sure Tom Eagleton would agree and he never made it to election day. "A pitcher of warm spit" is the tasteful phrase John Garner used to describe his office, and God knows even Nixon didn't have much fun as V.P. The political rewards of holding that office are questionable as well, not since 1836 has an incumbent Vice President succeeded in winning the top spot through the electoral process.

In 1972, former Massachusetts Governor "Chub" Peabody ran a separate campaign for the Vice Presidential nomination. He is now on a committee, chaired by Hubert Humphrey, that is attempting to come to grips with the V.P. selection process, and hopefully make some reasonable demands for change. The Eagleton affair brought before the public the behind the scenes conniving that takes place at party conventions, raising the question of the criterion used for selection. Is ability the issue, or is geographical base and vote getting potential more important. It has always been assumed that a ticket must be balanced, but never considered at whose expense. Undoubtedly, if a candidate for the Presidency were not dependent on his running mate for attracting votes, then the course of history would have been significantly altered. The most frequently mentioned example of this is whether John Kennedy would have chosen Lyndon Johnson if he had not been concerned about votes. It would seem, and indeed did to many of Kennedy's aides, that Johnson would have been more help to a Democratic President as Senate Majority Leader than as running mate. But of course there would have been no administration without first winning the election, and that was the main concern. It has been suggested that in 1968 Spiro Agnew was selected to run with Nixon because he was relatively unknown and could do little harm to the ticket. As one Nixon aide put it "we really wanted him (Nixon) to run alone".

So this is the stuff that Vice Presidents are made of, and it is no wonder that a committee is studying the problem. Some possibilities for reform have been promoted, some of them are: A separate campaign and separate vote in the general election for the V.P. candidate:, or a separate campaign at the convention and in the primaries:, or the second largest vote getter at the convention receiving the nomination for V.P.:, or finally, eliminating the office altogether, with the Speaker of the House second in line of succession to the President. All of these proposals have their good and bad points, but the last suggestion to eliminate the office seems to me a bit radical. After all, if anything happened to the President, it could mean a different political party in the White Hose, and the way we operate things it could take forever to get things moving again. The other suggestions leave open the possibility of two running mates of conflicting ideologies, or from the same section of the country. It is necessary for a President to get along with his Vice President, and to avoid an atmosphere of distrust or disloyalty. The only thing that could be worse than the present situation is to have the two top people in our government carrying on a struggle for power. It could lead to public contradictions of policy statements, attacks by each other in the press, and in short a situation not unlike the "banana republics" to our South. Let's face it, if Agnew can rip the Justice Dept. apart, imagine what he would do if, say, Pete McCloskey were his President!

I feel a reasonable alternative would be a candidate for the Presidency running for that office strictly on his own. Once elected, he would be free to chose a running mate without the pressures of vote getting potential. The choice could be subject to Congressional approval, and the limitations could be two: no member of his family, and no resident of his home state, and of course the normal requirements as prescribed by the Consitution. A rushed decision might be avoided this way, and it could hopefully lead to a more active role by Vice Presidents in the future.

Another question at present, however, is if Spiro Agnew resigns or is forced out of office, should a Democratic controlled Congress approve a nominee who is a potential GOP Presidential candidate? I say why the hell not? Partisan politics should have nothing to do with approval, only qualifications to hold the office should be considered. And besides, history has shown that V.P.'s have enjoyed little success in using that office to ascend to the top spot. In that light it is perhaps the wiser course for the Democrats to approve the likes of John Connally, as it would probably do him more harm than good in the long run.

Social Stagnation?

By DENNIS SIMKOWSKI

The University becomes a maligned community of higher learning, a perfunctory perpetuity, a concrete and mortar bastion when pervasive proportions of an unnecessary additive turn up in the mix. (Pardon the Agnewesque) To put it more succinctly, is the goal of the University constructive social change or social stagnation? That is for you to decide, for the course you choose will embody your total existence. Or will it be a fragmentation, a contradiction, a feeling of emptiness? Will it be the path of least resistence, one mapped by the illegitimate power structure, pentagod, Mars, Mammon and the "team"? Indeed, there are team players within the academic circle and by their fruits they become known.

We may observe the tip of the iceberg...certain academicians on this campus are in direct complicity with the Warfare State. Their bankrolls are now being fattened at the expense of whom in the future? The excuse offered by the players of the game usually centers on academic freedom but that freedom is in no way absolute. There are conditions. Academic freedom is the liberty to pursue and teach relevant knowledge and to discuss it freely without restriction from school or public officials or from other sources of influence. Classified government projects will NOT BE DISCUSSED OPENLY, unless the individual wants to lose his subsidy and face indictment.

Aside from covert faculty operations, there's the UMass branch of the US Army. Here are some excerpts from Army releases dated 9-21-73:

---(A Lieutenant Colonel) was cited for the role he played in managing and supervising the request for and preliminary development of the army's proposed advanced attack helicopter. He is presently a PHD candidate in aerospace engineering at The University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

---(a Major) was honored for the duties he performed while serving with the deputy chief of staff for intelligence, United States Army Europe. While currently assigned as an instructor with the US Army ROTC instructor group at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst....

They were "cited and "honored" in ceremonies conducted by the Professor of Military Science at this University. (Incidentally, a "distinguished military graduate" of the game "will be assigned to the Fourth Mechanized Infantry Division" after he completes the Signal Corps Officers' Basic Course at Fort Gordon, Georgia. There he will receive reinforcement of the UMASS INDOCTRINATION.)

The Warfare State's educational game plan is a REAL BUMMER!

Unity Slate

By BARBARA BUGLEY, JOHN O'KEEFE, AND JOHN PEPI

The Unity Slate is coming! We wouldn't josh you. Soon to be running for the Student Senate is a large group (35 on and off campus) of brothers and sisters who feel the necessity to campaign on specific issues directly relating to the student concerns.

Some weeks ago, a number of students, in response to this need, began to formulate plans for a Unity Slate. Out of this slate developed the following platform.

1) The Unity Slate believes that the bus service should be restored and expanded.

2)The Unity Slate opposes any further tuition hikes or rents and fees increases.

3) The Unity Slate believes that the purchase of meal tickets should be optional.

4) The unity Slate opposes cutbacks in financial aid to students in need. Students should organize to resist any such moves.

5) The Unity Slate is in favor of equal pay for student workers.

6)The Unity Slate opposes any parking fee hikes.

7) The Unity Slate supports the vigorous pursuit of student initiated innovation in the University's academic program, with the goal of providing maximum individual control over the learning process.

8) The Unity Slate is committed to insuring that the University vigorously enforces programs which are designed to reduce the effects of institutional racism and sexism on Women and Third World people, such as the Affirmative Action program.

9) The Unity Slate is committed to the use of United Farmworkers grapes and lettuce in all University outlets.

10) The Unity Slate supports maximum student participation in the governance of the University and its programs, and full student control over Student matters and those areas funded solely by Students.

11) The Unity Slate supports the demand of the residents of the residential colleges for full autonomy, and for a real financial committment from the University to see them carried out.

12) The Student Senate should be committed to building the Student Government Association into a Union of Students, acting as an autonomous voice for students; with an independent economic base.

13) The Unity Slate proposes a S.G.A. sponsored program of power structure research into the University of Mass., designed to demistify the structure and processes of the Univ. and reveal its true role in the larger social system.

Look in your dorms for people running with the Unity Slate. Elections are Tues.-Wed.-Thurs. in the Cape Cod Lounge for Commuters and in the dorms for others.

VOTE FOR STUDENT POWER!

Barbara Bagley, John O'Keefe, and John Pepi, are members of Unity Slate.

USCC

By CHRISTOPHER SANDS

Last spring an arrogant looking fellow with a pointy chin and a conservative haircut was taped in living color at the studios of WHYN channel 40 Springfield. In a voice that would have blown any speaker with a low frequency response he claimed attendance at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. After this punch line of special effects he pulled a reverse on the audience and delivered a brief, fairly concise argument against tuition bills before the state legislature. It was, in part this "monumental" rebuttal which allowed UMass students the continued privilege of getting high on education and the fumes of the Stockbridge manure pile at a stable figure of $300 per year. However, people were tickled more by the comedy than cause as many a TV room errupted with the question, "who was that fagot on channel 40?"

Well, the gentleman whose sexual tendencies are in popular declaration is a member of the USCC (University and Student Communication Council) a RSO (Recognized Student Organization) group. It was set up several years ago in response to student demands for more responsibility in matters concerning student life. The purpose of the USCC, which is funded by the Student Senate, is to keep the student body of all state schools aware and responsive to issues which may affect them directly or indirectly. In short the USCC is an "unofficial student lobby" that is run and supported by students. These goals are achieved by testifying at legislative committee hearings, conferring with state politicians and issuing public statements of opinion.

Last year's activities included testifying before the education committee, writing up and mailing newsletters to the state's legislators, researching education bills for representatives, comenting on radio programs and yes, taping a couple of TV rebuttals. As you have probably figured out by now this letter is a sneaky attempt to arouse some interested souls to become involved with the USCC. It's a good opportunity to help your interests as student or potential political slickster. There will be an informal and brief meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 105. Even if you're "iffy" about it come and talk to the folks anyway.

Christopher Sands is a member of USCC.

gave me for the course?". That's four years of aggravation and ulcers-but, for what? You go out into the real world and start to worry all over again. Who needs it? If you really want to save your health, all you really have to do is transfer to the school of education. You never heard of anybody taking all those pass-fail courses getting ulcers, did you? 'Course not.

Then there are those who worry about every little thing. These worries build up. Here's some advice. Get some people together and head for the Bluewall. Have a lot of laughs and get drunk. When you finally wake up, youll have a much better out look on life (that is unless you're hung over, wich is also good because you won't care about anything anyway). If you don't indulge, sleep is a very good substitute. One good way to accomplish this is to start all the studying you've been putting off for so long and worrying about.

Apathy is the coming thing. I can notice the trend. When I tell somebody that I write for the Collegian, the response is, nine times out of ten, is, "so what?". These people have the right idea. After all, milk is great, but I wouldn't want to make it the staple of my diet. So the next time you tell someone about your problems, and he says, "Who cares", thank him. You have no idea what a good friend he is.

Freshman Bullshit Blues

One day last week, while strolling around the base of that great idol that the University has just so recently erected, a symbol to the ETERNAL PHALYNX, also known as the new Library (which was just the excuse for this oddly shaped monument), I ran into an old friend of mine standing, gazing blankly upward to its crest. His name was Louie Fishtank, one of the famed Lexington Fishtanks. The Fishtanks as you probably know have a glorious history in their lineage. Louie's great grandfather, George Washington Fishtank, made his fortune with Boss Tweed in the famous Tweed Ring during the Grant administration. His Uncle Lance Fishtank grew wealthy during the depression in selling steel to the Japanese. His father Fred Fishtank has waxed well selling hashpipes and assorted paraphenelia. Knowing as I did of the Famous Fishtank streak of insecurity and unbalance found in all of their clan, I approached my friend cautiously, realizing his probable troubles as a freshman.

"Hey Louie baby!!! What's happening!" I delicately screamed.

"Not much. Sure is a long way down!" Louie said still glaring fixedly upwards. This statement puzzled me-as we were looking up, so it was a long way up and not down.

"What's troublin ya Lou. School getting ya down?" I offered.

"I haven't gone yet. Say by the way, they haven't named this thing have they?"

"No, not yet. Why?"

"The Fishtank Memorial Library! Sounds kind of nice don't it?"

"Look, Lou, you need a drink! let's go down to the Hatch and throw a few down the hatch!!!" I chortled, pleased with myself for that pun.

"Alright," he said and walked off briskly, and I followed at his heels.

"I'm bummed out!" was the first thing that Louie said once we got our drafts. "This whole fuckin scene sucks!!!"

"I know it does, Lou, but ya gotta hang in there, stick em! hit em low! hit em fast! and hit em hard! Sure it's third and twenty but---don't punt!!!" giving him the old Boyden Banter I was accustomed to hearing. "Anyway, what in particular is bumming you out?"

"The Dining Commons. Why should I have to eat that garbage every day and night? A Fishtank is used to better. Who ever heard of a Fishtank eating macaroni and cheese, and three straight days no less. It's been barf on a bun without the bun every night this week."

"Right you are on every count!" I chimed in encouragingly.

"And you know what I'm gonna do? You know what? I'm gonna have a hunger strike until the University gives me a free pass for the T.O.C., Steakout, Jolly Bull and Domino's Pizza!!! That's what I'm gonna do.....or....."

"OR what Lou! OR what?" I couldn't help inquiring.

"Or I'm gonna get me the next plane to San Francisco and be no. 500 off the Golden Gate Bridge. You know since no. 499 jumped a couple of weeks ago, they've had constant patrols, roving television cameras and lots of tourists. A Fishtank's got to go in style!! Anyway, that'll show the University!"

"Lou Lou! You are fucked up!!!" (I said trying shock treatment.) "That won't show a thing. Why they'll be glad of it---you know---it'll put UMass in the News. What you got is a bad case of the Freshman Bullshit Blues, the infamous FBB's which cuts so many a promisin Umie down before their prime (I said trying to bolster his stupid ego). I've got just the solution. What you want to do is fight fire with fire. Fight bullshit with bullshit. Fight bureaucracy with beaurocracy. Fight ego tripping with ego tripping. Fight arrogance with arrogance, and most important of all, fight worthlessness with worthlessness!!!"

"How?" Louie jabbered, his eyes glowing with desire, his mouth foaming in anticipation, "How, Man, How!!!"

"Simple, join the Student Senate!!!"

Letters To The Editor

Respect Yourself, Man!

To the Editor:

Tired of having your phallus used as a stepping stone for high heels (or nowadays, combat boots)? Get out from under. Get back on top where you belong.

When I walk around the UMass, or just about anywhere these days, I see the same thing. Males groveling before a bunch of females for a smile or date or piece. And I know full well that if any of their man friends acted towards them or pulled the same bull on them that these women do, the services would be held at noon of the same day.

But it's fashionable these days for not only females to be women's libbers (at least to the point that suits their own personal desires) but for men to "buy some of it." Be just enough of a sympathizer to "be allowed" at the same table, but with a quiet John Wayne reserve that you can take home with you and look in the mirror and think about bygone days, and try to convince yourself that you still respect you, that you're still a man. No good my friend.

Respect yourself, man. Without it you've got nothing. And that's just what women are doing these days. Trying to leave us with nothing. And doing a darn good job of it to. Somewhere in this quagmire there may be a woman who really wants to live on an equal plane with a man. But I doubt it. "Why settle for equal when you can be superior!" They nit-pick at women's gripes about their upbringing, orientation, job opportunity, discrimination. Like it all belongs to them. Men have the life of Riley. We know better.

Women don't want to be on top man. In the final anaylsis they want to be dominated not domineering. But like any ineffectual sexist with a litte power, they let it go straight to their crotch. They go wagging it around in one hand and have a ball-pen hammer in the other. They're ball busters man. Watch out!

So what do you do? You stop playing their game. Their game their rules, they got to win man. Don't follow after wth eager eyes and listen to inane conversations, hoping for a little attention. Get away from them. You don't need them. They need you. It's a question of who does the leading.

Women want to be equal? Don't pay for their drinks while they stick theirs in the bank. Don't take them to Valle's and have to eat crow for the rest of the week. Put them on the same plane. They say something you don't like, do something you don't dig on, react like you would towards a man. See how long they want to accept a man's responsibility towards life without the crutch of saying "but I'm a woman," or "but you asked me out" or when things don't go quite right just be a little looser and you're bound to get some clown to take you in for awhile. All it costs is a little sex, no emotion.

The point is there is absolutely no way that man and woman can coexist as equals. Every now and then you may find a cat and dog that live in the same house peaceably, but it's not common.

In any relationship someone dominates. I don't care if it's by 1 per cent or 100 per cent it's not equal. No bunch of namby-pamby pseudo-intellectual male castrators are going to hold a club over the heads of men.

We can live together as soon as males realize the difference between being a boy and a man and accept the attitude and responsibility of manhood.

God Loves Jews, Too

To The Editor:

I am reported in a Collegian column by Matt Tackeff (Sept. 2) as having said at the Agape Week's evening featuring Arthur Katz that "the Jews would be forgiven by God in the end". I do not deny that statement, but standing alone it gives a completely false impression of what I intended to say and think I said. I said that the message of the Epistle to the Romans in particular, and I think of the Bible as a whole, is that all,---Jews, Christians, pagans---all will be forgiven in the end. God is revealed in the Torah and the prophets and in Christ as being so forgiving that the concept of Hell as a final destination for anyone is repugant to believers.

My statement as reported in Tackeff's column seems perhaps to give the impression that I am saying that Christians are now forgiven and that Jews and others who are not Christians can look for forgiveness only in the future. I would correct that by saying that all of us, Christians and non-Christians equally, are now forgiven our defiance of God's will as we truly repent of our rebellion and strive to be obedient, and are now forgiven our ignorance of God's will if such ignorance is not our fault. However, all of us, Christians as well as others, have present sins that we refuse to repent of through a firm belief that they are not sins; and all of us, Christians as well as others, have our way of refusing new truths that God would have recognize and accept. Therefore all of us have some lack of and some need for God's forgiveness now, a forgiveness that god's character and power guarantees us all in the future.

I do associate with Katz and the Christians who sponsored Agape Week in the claim that whoever comes to acknowledge Jesus as the most complete revelation of God that men are capable of receiving will receive tremendous blessings as well as new challenges which are not available to those who have not made this acknowledgement; but speaking as a member of the Christian community, I apologize to the Jewish community for any implication that Agape Week may have given that Jews are in any way less beloved by God than Christians.

Have No Car, Will Travel

To The Editor:

Yes, it's true that Amherst was not built for cars. And, as James Cope, town planner says, "building new roads is not the best solution to our traffic problem. The best solution is to make the automobile unnecessary." Then why build the Northeast Bypass at all? Why tear up trees and farmland and meadow, create arguments about where to end the road--just to spread the noise and air pollution and traffic around? Instead, the town and university should cooperate on a bus system that would truly make it possible for everyone to travel to campus without a car.

Eating The Little Ones

To The Editor:

There are those who say the SOCIALIST LABOR PARTY is all wet in claiming that the wealth of the country keeps on concentrating into fewer and fewer hands.

Well, a wire dispatch from Washington reports last year resulted in 39,000 fewer farms than in the previous year.

The BIG ones are eating up the little ones.

This proves the SOCIALIST LABOR PARTY is right.

THAT'S ANOTHER reason why the program of the SOCIALIST LABOR PARTY--REAL SOCIALISM--NOT as in England, Russia, Sweden, etc.; is needed more than ever before.

Now that a truce has been declared in Vietnam, let's see if capitalism can make it without the stimulent of war.

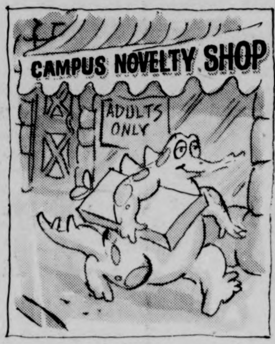
MORE THAN ONCE UPON A TIME

ONCE A KNIGHT FELT COMPELLED TO GET IT ON AND TELL IT LIKE IT IS SO HE COULD GET HIS HEAD STRAIGHT AND PUT DOWN ANY BAD VIBES THAT MIGHT BE GOING DOWN BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HIS ROOMMATE, A DRAGON. AND HE DID SAY: "LOOK, MAN, YOU OWE ME SEVERAL CARLOADS OF SCHAEFER BEER AND IT'S ABOUT TIME YOU DID SOMETHING FOR ME. IF YOU GET ME A DATE, I'LL FORGET ABOUT THE BEER."

AND THE DRAGON DID AGREE AND DID REPAIR TO THE PHONE BOOTH OF THE LOCAL TAVERN WHERE THE NAMES OF SEVERAL WILLING MAIDENS WERE LISTED. BUT ALAS, HE MET WITH LITTLE SUCCESS FOR THE KNIGHT WAS KNOWN BY ONE AND ALL TO BE, IN THE PARLANCE OF THE UNIVERSITAS, AN "INNYSKAY EEPCRAY."(1)

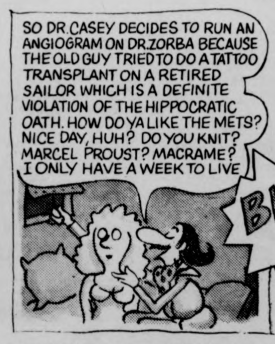


BUT, NOT WILLING TO FORFEIT THE CHANCE TO ERADICATE HIS DEBILITATING DEBT, THE DRAGON DID REPAIR TO THE CAMPUS NOVELTY SHOP.

WHERE HE DID ACQUIRE A SUITABLE MATCH FOR ONE SO GIFTED AS THE KNIGHT..

AND THE KNIGHT, IN PREPARATION FOR HIS "RENDEZ-VOUS"(2) DID GROOM HIMSELF MOST FASTIDIOUSLY AND DID PUT ON ICE PLENTY OF SCHAEFER BEER, LONG KNOWN TO BE THE PERFECT ELIXIR FOR "TRYSTING"(3) BECAUSE IT HAS FLAVOR THAT COMES ON BRIGHT & CRISP, EVEN AS EVENTIDE FADES TO MORN.

BLAME IT ON THE BOSSA NOVA BLUE TAIL FLY SORRENTOOO AS HAWAII GOES, SO GOES THE NATION . . . BECAUSE IT HAS HAIR UNDER ITS WINGS... SO HE DECIDED TO KEEP THE DOG.
AND SO HE DID BEGIN TO ENTERTAIN THE MAID IN HIS CHAMBERS. HE DID COURT HER WITH "THE BEST IN FOLK MUSIC," "BIG HITS OF THE FORTIES," AND THEN DID REGALE HER WITH HIS POLITICAL WISDOM.



SO DR. CASEY DECIDES TO RUN AN ANGIOGRAM ON DR. ZORBA BECAUSE THE OLD GUY TRIED TO DO A TATTOO TRANSPLANT ON A RETIRED SAILOR WHICH IS A DEFINITE VIOLATION OF THE HIPPOCRATIC OATH. HOW DO YA LIKE THE METS? NICE DAY, HUH? DO YOU KNIT? MARCEL PROUST? MACRAME? I ONLY HAVE A WEEK TO LIVE
BLAM
UNDAUNTED HE WENT ON TO RECITE "GREAT MOMENTS IN MEDICINE" AND WHISPERED SWEET NOTHINGS. WHENCE HE DID MAKE HIS MOVE.

PROVING ONCE AGAIN THAT: "IF BEAUTY IS ONLY SKIN-DEEP, IT'S GOOD TO TAKE YOUR ARMOR OFF FIRST."

1. INNYSKAY EEPCRAY: (PIG LATIN) NOT SOCIALLY DESIRABLE. 2. RENDEZ-VOUS: (FR.) THE SIMULTANEOUS CONJUNCTION OF TWO SUBJECTS AT THE SAME POINT IN TIME – YOU. 3. TRYSTING: (OE) THE GETTING OF IT ON.

John Hancock's Problem Is Solved

BOSTON (AP) — Scientists and engineers have wrestled for years trying to keep the windows from falling out of the tallest building in New England. Now a spokesman for the firm erecting the 60-story John Hancock Tower says a solution has finally been found.

Albert E. Prouty, vice president of John Hancock Co. said today the arthitects I.M. Pei & Partners have developed a method for reglazing the building's 10,300 windows with half-inch thick reflective tempered glass.

Completion of the tower has been delayed because insulating glass units originally used for the windows blew out of the building in high winds and shattered.

Henry N. Cobb, principal architect for the building, said reglazing the glass will provide maximum safety and comfort and will not alter the appearance of the building.

Full Parking Enforcement Due Oct. 9

Full enforcement of all parking regulations at UMass will begin Tuesday, Oct. 9, at 7 a.m.

Exempted will be peripheral lots 11, 12, and 13 (near the football stadium, Fraternity/Sorority Park, and the baseball field) where cars not bearing new parking decals may legally park until Tuesday, Oct. 23, when the second cycle of parking requests has been processed.

Until Oct. 9, vehicles may park in their newly assigned lots or in lots to which last year's stickers entitle them. After that date, vehicles may park only according to lot number on new parking decals. All temporary parking decals will have their time limits extended to Oct. 9, according to H.J. Littlefield, Jr., UMass director of planning.

The UMass Parking and Transportation Office this week completed processing about 12,000 applications for parking registration. "We feel the first-come, first served-commitment to any member of the University community has been met," said Director Littlefield.

He explained that by Oct. 4 all those who have requested parking assignments should have received either their decals or letters informing them that their first, second, and third lot choices were filled by the time their applications were reached. This rejection letter will give information on lots remaining open, and information on campus bus service from these lots to various points on campus. Complete on-campus but schedules will be distributed next week.

"Modifications and improvements to the parking and transportation system (including possible resumption of bus service to South Deerfield and Belchertown) await observations of the system in full operation, and input from the consituent campus groups through their representatives on the newly constituted Parking and Transportation Council," according to Mr. Littlefield. The Council will accept comments from individual members of the campus community.

Artist Paul Robeson Remembered

"A Salute to Paul Robeson" will be held tonight at Bowker Auditorium at 8. An evening of music, poetry and film has been organized by UMass Professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp, the Institute for Pan-African Culture and others in the Amherst community. It will reflect the character of the life, times and work of Paul Robeson and the magnitude of his personal achievements.

Paul Robeson, son of a slave, escaped by the Underground Railway at the age of fifteen in 1860 and later became pastor of the Witherspoon Street Presbyterian Church after working his way through Lincoln University. He has been acclaimed internationally as one of the most gifted artists of the 20th century.

Robeson's creative performances on concert stage and theatre were applauded from his earliest debut in 1924 in "Emperor Jones" and later in "All Gods Chillun Got Wings". He has since performed in India, China, Africa, Europe, the Caribbean and the Americas.

Professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp, coordinators of the Salute to Paul Robeson, have designed an excellent program, to which the University community in Amherst is invited. Admission is free.

The program is as follows:

1. A film on the life and work of Paul Robeson.
2. The Boyer Brothers - the spiritual and gospel duet who have appeared in more than 32 states in the United States and in Europe. Their latest album is Mine Eyes Have Seen The Glory.
3. Mr. Roland Wiggins - an accomplished pianist, who headed the Center for Aesthetics in the School of Education, University of Massachusetts.
4. Mr. Edward Boatner - a concert artist, composer, writer, producer, who is a peer and personal friend of Mr. Paul Robeson.
5. The Voices of New Africa - the choir which performed Max Roach's We Insist: Freedom Now Suite last April, will again bring its talents to the community under the guidance of Dr. Horace Boyer and Professor Max Roach.
6. The Mass Approach - a vocal ensemble from New York City which was highly acclaimed at the World Youth Festival this summer. They will sing work songs and popular folk songs in the tradition of Mr. Robeson.
7. Sister Sonia Sanchez - poetess of the sixties, who has recently been appointed to the faculty of Amherst College in the Afro-American Studies Department.

The focus of the program will be the inspirational work of Mr. Robeson as a source of strength in the creative life of the Black community. There will be a presentation of an art work done by Professor Nelson Stevens on behalf of IPAC, and Ms. Elma Lewis of the Elma Lewis School of Fine Arts in Roxbury, has been asked to receive the award by Mr. Robeson on behalf of the family.

The first lecture in the Paul Robeson Lecture Series will be tomorrow night at 8 in Mahar Auditorium. It will be presented by Mr. Lamont Yeakey, Assistant Professor of History at City College of New York. Professor Yeakey will speak on "Paul Robeson and the Student Movement."

Scientists Claim Kohoutek Comet Will Produce Most Striking Sights

CAMBRIDGE (AP)-The best view of the comet Kohoutek probably will be in mid-January according to new calculations of the orbit, the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory said yesterday.

Scientists believe the comet has the potential for being one of the most striking astronomical sights of the century.

Dr. Brian Marsden of the observatory said recent observations indicate the comet will reach perihelion, its closest approach to the sun, Dec. 28.

He said the comet's greatest brilliance and longest tail should come one or two weeks after the perihelion pass. The comet then could be brighter than any star and have a tail 10 to 30 degrees long.

The observatory said that amateur astronomers without telescopes probably will see little of the comet until early December, and that the best viewing for astronomers in all sections of the United States should be from Jan. 10 to 20.

The comet was discovered March 7 by Lubos Kohoutek, a Czechoslovakian - born astronomer. At the time the comet was 400 million miles from earth, and the observatory said its sighting nine months before perihelion means the comet must be of "exceptional size".

Comets are believed to be left over from the construction of the solar system and to be composed of compact conglomerations of frozen gas and dust.

New Teaching Bill Signed Into Law

BOSTON (AP)-A bill designed to provide educational certification according to an individual's demonstrated teaching ability was signed into law yesterday by Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

The measure provides for the issuance of a two year provisional certificate and a permanent one upon the recommendation of an evaluating team.

The measure, which establishes a Division of Educational Personnel, also provides for hearings and appellate procedures if a permanent certificate is denied.

Additionally, it provides for an advisory commission for the operation, certification and placement of educational personnel.

Study Business Overseas

The School of Business Administration of UMass is offering a new 3-credit course in International Business during the January 1974 intersession. The course is designed for seniors and graduate students in the School of Business Administration but should be of interest to persons with a background knowledge in economics and business who are interested in the international dimensions of business.

The group will visit American and European firms in London, Brussels, Amsterdam, and Duesseldorf between January 3 and 28, 1974. Organizations were chosen to appeal to students majoring in any of the four business areas: accounting, finance, management, and marketing.

Of special interest to accounting students will be a visit to the London office of Coopers & Lybrand, a major international public accounting firm and to students majoring in finance visits to the Bank of England, the Continental Illinois Bank, and the London Stock Exchange-all located in the ancient City of London. In Dusseldorf officials of the Dresdner Bank, the second largest bank in West Germany, will discuss the economic functions of German banks and take the group on tours of the Duesseldorf Stock Exchange and the foreign exchange market.

Doubling Up

A new program is beginning this fall to teach couples specific ways to build strong, exciting relationships. The program will focus on such areas as trust building, massage, maintaining individuality, meditation, hearing and being heard, mutual problem solving, resolving conflicts, developing intimacy, sexuality, and mutual creative expression. It will take the form of a workshop held in eight 2-hour sessions, each Tuesday night Oct. 23-Dec. 11.

This workshop is designed for those heterosexual couples who are either married or in some other extended relationship. It is offered free as a service of the Student Development and Career Planning Center. If you are interested, please contact David Andes by October 15 at 545-0333 (M-Th day) or 1-369-4649 (other).

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Like Taurus, the feelings of Scorpio are easily bruised. The two are opposite--Taurus and Scorpio--but there are many similarities, too. Taurus collects, consolidates, takes a position based on familiarity with the territory. Scorpio crusades, wins allies, gathers financial support and then lays down the law. Together, the team of Scorpio and Taurus is formidable. New projects, pioneering concepts result from co-ordinated efforts of these two determined, powerful zodiacal signs. Although opposite, the attraction is strong and many natives of these signs marry each other.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on understanding, greater degree of family harmony, more maturity on your part. Be diplomatic. Remember special anniversary. Make gesture which shows that you do care, are concerned. Taurus, Libra persons could figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid rush. Be selective. Strive for quality. Be ready for unusual period of questions, answers. You may be involved with the media. Pisces, Virgo persons are likely to play featured roles. Avoid wishful thinking.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Practical issues dominate. Law, agreements. Co-operative efforts are featured. Sagittarian is in picture. Emphasis is on responsibility connected with marriage, other commitments. Don't skip or seek short cuts. Be thorough.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Finish--complete projects. See beyond the immediate. Potential is great--know it and act like you know it. Health, work and relationships with persons who share your interests are featured.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Creativity is highlighted. Emotions tend now to dominate. Key is to strive for balance, but don't give up principles. Get going in new directions. Your style is important. Your ways of doing things gain plaudits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Home, property, security, getting money's worth--these are emphasized. Refuse to sell yourself short. Build on solid base. Deal with older individual who does have your best interests at heart. Cancer, Capricorn are in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Movement, travel are featured. Ideas are plentiful. Key is development. Deal with close neighbors, relatives. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could figure prominently. You get good news and your views are vindicated.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on what might be a money complication. Pay and collect and be practical about it. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio may be involved. You get what you need as opposed to what might be desired. Message becomes crystal clear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lunar cycle is such that your judgement is on target. You analyze, deduce and perceive what is correct. Personal magnetism soars. Be direct. Make public appearances. Show off colors and clothes and personality.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You find what makes you secure. You reject what threatens. You learn who you are and where you are and why you go in specific directions. Not easy but illuminating. Not all joy but plenty of wisdom. Taurus, Libra persons are in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent is on hopes, wishes. Some persons express desire to help you. Be receptive. Money situation is brighter than might be apparent on surface. Romantic involvement is distinct possibility. Protect self in Clinches.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Results are featured. Past efforts pay dividends. You see, perceive, get assignments and fulfill obligations. Not a cakewalk but you know yourself and feel your own presence. Older person pays meaningful compliment.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have innate desire to make loved ones comfortable. You go in for self-sacrificing. Many who really care do wish you would take better care of yourself and worry less about the world. December will be one of your most significant months of 1973. Persons born under Cancer and Capricorn are drawn to your sphere. You are charming, sympathetic and tough.

In-case you're wondering, this is not a huddle, but a scrumm, which is used to put the ball in play in rugby. The UMass "A" squad didn't scrum so well as they were defeated by Williams, 9-0.

Ruggers Split Pair

By WADIE BAHOU

The UMass Rugby team traveled to Williams College this past Saturday to play two games and managed a split as the "B" team avenged the "A's" loss by winning 24-7. Earlier, the "A's ", who once again had troubles with their offense, were shutout 9-0. the only consolation lay in the fact that the "A's" have yet to allow a try to be scored against them, as all nine points came on three penalty kicks. Wing forward Terry O'Hara was outstanding on defense as was the entire UMass squad, but the loss of inside center Burt Glenn slowed down a lazy and tired UMass offense.

The second game however, bore little resemblance to the first. The "B" team, which is looking better with each game, jumped off to a quick 12-0 lead and then coasted to its seventeen point victory. This, however, still not indicative of the final score, as UMass continually had the ball in Williams' end. The first two tries were scored by forward Chip Connors, with another try by Eckels, set up by Barney Schneider, all but insured another victory for the "B's".

Later in the game, Tony Kalinowski added a try and Al Solish converted four points to close out the scoring. The Ruggers now have an overall 5-1 record and have three home games this Saturday against a tough Norwich University squad.

Atlanta Stands For Aaron

ATLANTA (AP)-Henry Aaron remains No. 2 on the alltime home run list, but even in a one-game failure to equal baseball's most revered record, the 39-year-old slugger stirred the hearts of more than 40,000 fans.

"It was the most touching thing I've ever seen in baseball," said Ernie Johnson, a member of the Atlanta broadcast team who pitched for the Braves when the club was based in Milwaukee.

Aaron, the son of a retired Alabama dock worker, jogged to left field for the last inning of the 1973 season moments after popping out to second base. Then it happened.

Starting in the left field bleachers, a crowd of 40,517 began rising in tribute to the 20-year veteran who had fallen one short of tying the legendary Babe Ruth's home run mark of 714.

They stood in the rain for three minutes applauding and undoubtedly would have continued had the umpires not ordered a resumption of play.

"It may have been the most moving experience of my time in sports, which didn't begin yesterday," Furman Bisher, sports editor of The Atlanta Journal, wrote in Monday's edition. "They stood and they cheered him, not for hitting a home run, not for popping out behind second base, but for being Henry Aaron."

Aaron acknowledged the ovation in the same manner he has handled the intense pressure that rested on his shoulders during the closing weeks of the season-with plenty of class. He waved to the crowd twice during that time, evoking even louder applause.

"Maybe what I've done is create some new fans for baseball," Aaron said. "At first, there was a lot of that mail from people, older people who didn't want me to break Babe Ruth's record. The younger generation took notice of that and supported me. I think they want to relate to me, to see me have a record, not someone their granddads saw play."

Although he missed the big one, Aaron completed an incredible season. He had three straight singles in the game, extending a personal streak to six consecutive hits as he lifted his season batting average to .301.

He finished the year with 40 home runs, 84 runs scored and 96 runs batted in-all this in only 392 at bats. The production is unsurpassed in baseball history by a man his age.

Johnson Replaces Kasko

BOSTON (AP)-Darrell Johnson, who waited patiently in the wings for the big chance, took over as manager of the Boston Red Sox Monday, vowing to do the job at hand with a team that has been a bridesmaid for the last two years.

"I'm not a hard-nosed guy and I'm not a pacifist," Johnson said at a news conference. "I'll handle each situation as it comes up."

Johnson, a coach under hardline Dick Williams until the latter's firing in 1969, was named Sunday to replace Eddie Kasko, who was booted upstairs to an executive scout position after four years as manager.

"I'll be myself, and the end result is what counts," Johnson said. "Sure, this is a dream come true. When you're in the minor leagues, you always hope to make the big leagues. Now I have a job to do."

Johnson, a 46-year-old journeyman catcher, prepped for the Red Sox' job in many ways. He was a coach under Dick Williams in 1968 and '69. When Williams was fired in 1969, Johnson remained with the club.

Durocher Resigns

HOUSTON (AP)-Colorful Leo Durocher resigned Monday as manager of the Houston Astros, probably ending a flamboyant career as player and manager that spanned almost 50 years.

Astro General Manager Spec Richardson told a news conference that third base coach Preston Gomez, formerly manager of the San Diego Padres, had been signed to a one-year contract as Durocher's successor.

"I think he just had enough and wanted to go to Palm springs and play a little golf," Gomez said of Durocher, who did not attend the news conference. "I was very surprised. I was packing this morning to return to Los Angeles when I got a call. I walked into Spec's office and Leo shook my hand and told me congratulations. I didn't know what he was talking about."

Gomez, quiet and unassuming, will take a low-keyed appraoch to managing, a drastic change from the often-controversial Durocher.

Gomez said he had no wholesale changes in mind, but added, "there are a few things that will change, but that's between me and my coaches."

Gomez said he wasn't ready to make a decision on his coaching staff.

Durocher, 67, had told friends he was thinking about ending his major league career and retiring to a home he was building in Palm Springs, Calif.

Durocher, who resigned as manager of the Chicago Cubs during last season, took over the Astros for the final 30 games of the 1972 campaign. They finished second in the National League West to the Cincinnati Reds.

The Astros started the 1973 season with high hope of winning their first pennant, but they finished fourth when hit by pitching woes and inconsistent batting.

Field Hockey Sportsday

Although the UMass-Springfield hockey rivalry did not come to a head in Saturday's field hockey sportsday behind the North P.E. building, UMass sampled most of the competition they will be facing this season and fared pretty well.

Coach Jane Farr sent two teams into the round robin competition, mixing JV and varsity lines and experimenting with different positioning.

The UMass I squad posted a convincing 3-0 win over Dartmouth, and played to a scoreless tie with Bridgewater and Plymouth State.

Meanwhile, UMass II downed Worcester State, 2-0, , Westfield State, 1-0, and played UConn to a 0-0 tie.

The games were shortened to 25 minutes and attracted a sizeable crowd of Umies as well as the partisan groups brought by each team.

Both UMass squads earned the distinction of not being scored upon in their 6 games, and it looks to be a good season ahead.

Fail To Hold Early Lead

Women Stickers Tied By MHC

By BETH O'BRIEN

So what can you say about a game in which the UMass girls saw their 3-1 lead against Mt. Holyoke disintegrate to a 3-3 tie in the final minutes of the game?

Disappointing? Definitely. UMass has to beat teams like Mt. Holyoke to stay in contention for a top spot in New England alongside Springfield and Southern Conn. So a 3-3 tie is disappointing.

UMass dominated the first half play with a crisp, fast-paced running and passing game that netted them a 2-1 lead. Center Kathy O'Neil intercepted a loose pass in the center of the circle and slipped a reverse-stick shot around the goalie for the first score. Wing Jeanne Lourie deflected a perfect centering pass from inner Wendy Alpaugh for a score and UMass was riding high.

The UMass momentum carried over to the second half as O'Neil got her second goal on a shot which the Holyoke goalie lost in the dust around the cage, and it was 3-1 UMass.

Mt. Holyoke came alive while the UMass defense loosened, and within minutes, UMass was on the defensive as Holyoke pressed for a score. They got it; a clean shot that beat goalie Nancy Barr on the short side. Realizing they weren't quite dead and buried yet, Holyoke went all out for the tying goal, and, after quite a struggle, got it.

When the final whistle sounded, UMass was left hanging onto the 3-3 tie, in a game they should have won.

In a see-saw J.V. battle, directly preceding the varsity game UMass shut out Mt. Holyoke, 1-0. Donna Peterson scored the only goal, though an aparent score by center Donna O'Brien was called back. The goaltending was tight and the play was even. with neither team dominating for very long. Like the varsity's, it was a running game, though the UMass passing left something to be desired. The UMass J.V.'s proved to be a scrappy team that didn't let go of a win easily.

The next game for both the varsity and J.V. is on Thursday beginning at 3:30 at home against a tough competitor, Bridgewater State.

Harriers Face PC, Harvard In Tri-Meet

By SCOTT HAYES

The UMass Cross Country Team will face two of New England's top teams today, when they travel to Franklin Park in Boston. There they will run against a strong Harvard squad and Providence in a tri-meet. Harvard and Providence were ranked second and third in the New England preseason poll.

The Crimson, led by Rick Rojas, upset top-ranked Northeastern 21-34 last week. Rojas placed first against UMass last season, and was the top New England finisher at the IC4A's. Behind Rojas, Harvard has junior Jim Keefe, who finished second against Northeastern. UMass must beat the next three runners, Andy Campbell, Dirk Skinner, and Jim Hughes, if they are to win.

Erratic Providence will be a question mark entering today's meet. The Friars ran past BC last week, only to lose a twenty point decision to Connecticut on Saturday. Tom Smith, who finished second against Harvard and UMass a year ago, leads the Providence team. The Friars will also be looking for outstanding performances from freshmen Mike O'Shea and Phil Campbell, both from Ireland.

UMass will rely on Friday's winning foursome, consisting of Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, Tom Maguire and Paul Segersten. Last year, Thomas, Gillin and Maguire finished sixth through eight as Harvard rolled to an easy win. The addition of several outstanding freshmen and the fact that UMass was not affected by graduation, could give the Minutemen the edge in today's varsity meet.

Seven UMass freshmen finished in a tie for first place as the UMass Junior Varsity team shutout BC 15-50. Paul Doiron, Chris Farmer, Mickey Hawkes and John McGrail, four of the seven who were tied for first on Friday, hope to help junior Tom Wilson in an attempt to finish seven men before Harvard's fifth runner crosses the finish line.

CROSS COUNTRY CORNER---- The Minutemen are due for win over Harvard. Last time UMass defeated the Crimson was way back in 1953. Their series record against Harvard is only 3-14. Jim Cappezutto, holder of the second fastest time for the UMass course, dropped out of Friday's race with a cramp. He was BC's top harrier.

Segersten, Maguire, Thomas, and Gillin finished together in the BC meet with a time of 25:21 to tie the fourth best time for the BC course.

Yankee Stadium: The Old Makes Way For The New

NEW YORK (AP)-They started teariing down "The House That Ruth Built" Monday, and nostalgia was so thick you could cut it with a Louisville Slugger.

"Why should we?" said Claire Ruth, the widow of baseball's greatest home run hitter.

"It's just like changing coats. When your fur coat wears out, you get a new one.

"You can't stop progress," agreed Eleanor Gehrig, whose late husband was a Yankee immortal, playing a record 2,130 consecutive games in the famous pin stripes. "I am happy to see progress."

Mrs. Ruth was presented a soiled white and black rubber home plate and Mrs. Gehrig was handed first base at ceremonies marking the demolition phase of the $27 million, city-sponsored renovation plan.

Mayor John V. Lindsay, the man who conceived the facelifting job in an effort to save the Yankees for New York City, presided over the ritual in front of home plate.

During the next two years the famed Yankee Stadium will be given a complete renovation. The Yankees will play at Shea Stadium in 1974 and 1975 and come back to the refurbished ball park at the start of the 1976 campaign.

Amazing Mets Clinch NL East

CHICAGO (AP)-The New York Mets, in last place as recently as Aug. 30, clinched the National League's East Division title Monday-one day after the scheduled close of the regular baseball season-with a 6-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

The Mets will now face the West Division winners, the Cincinnati Reds, in a best-of five playoff for the National League title. That series begins Saturday in Cincinnati.

The winner will advance to the World Series, which begins Oct. 13, against the winner of the American League playoff between the Oakland A's and Baltimore Orioles, which also starts Saturday.

Cleon Jones hit his sixth homer in the last 10 games and Jerry Grote hit a two-run single as the Mets took a 5-0 lead behind their ace right-hander, Tom Seaver, in a game played in a steady drizzle at Wrigley Field. Seaver was lifted after giving up a two-run homer to Chicago's Rick Monday in the seventh, making the score 6-4, but Tug McGraw, the Mets' bull pen star, came on to hold the Cubs in check the rest of the way.

The victory gave the Mets an 82-79 record and made the result of Pittsburgh's Monday afternoon game against San Diego unimportant. Both Monday games were necessitated after regular season games were rained out this past week-end, leaving three clubs in contention for the pennant.

The St. Louis Cardinals finished in second place with an 81-81 record. Pittsburgh was 80-82 after losing to the Padres, 4-3.

The Mets and Cubs were originally scheduled to play a double header, but after the Mets clinched the title by winning the opener, the second game was canceled.

The Mets' climb to the pennant was marked by superb pitching from starters Seaver, Jon Matlack, Jerry Koosman and George Stone and reliever McGraw. And despite having a team batting average of just .245, the second-lowest in the major leagues, the Mets got timely hitting from just about everyone on the squad in their stretch drive.

In the three weeks beginning Sept. 4 the Mets won 16 games and lost just four, climbing from fifth place in the six-team division to the top. The Mets moved into first on Sept. 21 when Seaver beat Pittsburgh 10-2 at Shea Stadium, and never dropped back.

For Mets Manager Yogi Berra, whose job appeared in jeopardy just one month ago, it was the second time he has taken a club to a pennant. Berra won the American League flag in 1964 in his only year as manager of the New York Yankees.

"A Stiff Hit Of Jamaican"

By MARTY KELLEY

For the Yard-Bobby Kennedy Jr. told the story with the flowing locks, "H" adorned sweatshirt, and white sailor bells. Between the martinis, sweet smell of Cambridge dope, catapaulting missiles, and odes to John Harvard, a mystique with an uncanny grip continued to prevail. . .The old Yard may have been haunted as of late, but still, the party yawned in Harvard Hall unto a happy sunlit Cambridge morn'. . .

And so the Johns' of Harvard fame, 10 minutes form the Square and the culture that they impose, had reason to rejoice. It was comedy. It was funny. It was typical Harvard. But in a society and a generation that calls for salesmanship, the Harvards' had the answer...On and off the field...

We can no longer sell the straight T and Boob Wolf and Burn Street off the left side for -½. . .We can no longer sit with a blank stare as we role it up against Vermont or St. Joseph's School for the Blind. In defeat there's a lesson to learn. Harvard taught us multiplicty...on offense and salesmanship. It was corny, it was pompous, it was dangerous, and of course to us quite humiliating. . .but Harvard had the answers and the showmanship to give us college football for the year 1973. . .a contemporary style. . .the script and lines were stolen from the stoned square itself. . .

College athletics and football in general. . .well, there's immediate danger in getting jocked for all time. Our society no longer identifies with that shoulder to shoulder ideology. ABC won't look any eastern than Penn St. for TV revenue. Wine and a sleezy date draw better along the banks of the Charles River than city football. . .But don't tell that to the wealthy Johns'. . .Their coke is accented with a stiff hit of Bacardi's. . .And take a good whiff of their corn cob pipe. . .

The Harvards give college football the present day aroma it needs. That stiff breeze emenating from you Charles gave the ancient arena that Jamaican flavor from endline to endline. From section to section the "J" was passed and so were a few Cambridge coeds. But with the undersexed and straggly cheerleaders (someone said they were ugly but I won't throw stones) into flamboyant routines, false announcements on the PA system (Barroll and Kurinsky really did beat their football team 6-0), and the fight for the football at the open end, Harvard football was ever-present for the scrambling youth of America and Mike Brophy's flag. . .

Speaking of Manager Brophy. . .Adding insult to injury three little black culprits ripped off a football from the Minuteman bench and had Brophy in the most humorous triangle of his disguised life. . .They got away to a Cambridge ghetto, Brophy lost the football, his hat, his integrity, and his Minutemen their self-esteem and any hope of Boardwalk '73. . .And if you don't think recruiting suffered, go back to the days of your high school prom when you wondered what college you'd attend. . .MacPherson lost that too. . .

We simply can no longer measure the athletic performance in statistics. Sure, the offensive line continued to embarass Penning. . .(forgot how to spell it). . .So our backfield wears lead shoes. From Cambridge I'll remember most how I was particularly entertained, somewhat awed, but thoroughly convinced that Harvard football taught us Aggies a lesson that won't be displayed in the scoreboard but in the lumbering decades to come. . .

The story was in her Ivy, proud but shitfaced alums, their Kennedy's, their money, their cocktails, and their pride. . .and that ten minute walk to the Square. . .

Norman Bigelow Wows Magic Fans

Staff Photo/Larry Stein

Norman Bigelow awed fans last night at the Student Union Ballroom. Seven minutes to get out of a straight jacket.

By SHERM BOYSON

There's a razor thin line between bravery and stupidity. Norman Bigelow, who entertained a crowd of nearly a thousand people in the Student Union Ballroom last night, is on the bravery side of that line.

The ballroom filled very quickly for the performer who is appearing was part of the distinguished Visitors Program. Bigelow, claiming to be the reincarnation of the original escape artist Harry Houdini, entertained the standing room only crowd with about 90 minutes of what his master of ceremonies termed "escapology".

In various acts Bigelow escaped from a 360 gallon tank of water he was hanging upside down in, unchained himself from a table while a lit path of gun powder was rushing towards the pile of explosives under the table, and released himself from countless numbers of chains, belts, and straps to avoid being reddled by a time released door of knives.

Surprisingly, the more dangerous acts, such as releasing himself from a set of chains while a boa constrictor was tightening around his neck, seemed easier to perform than the old straight-jacket trick, which took him seven minutes to do.

Mr. Bigelow's show was filled with many sensational touches which helped bring the audience to a level of excitement. The show opened to the music of 2001-The Space Odessey, as Bigelow jumped out of a coffin-like box held by two hooded assistants. Bigelow, twenty-nine and husky, was dressed completely in white, in a very striking contrast to the dim lighting and his two black clothed assistants. His master of ceremonies, Richard Dennis, did all the talking. Bigelow never uttered a single word, using gestures to communicate his commands.

An unusually high level of tenseness was over the entire audience. The final act was one in which Bigelow was strapped to a door by a series of bindings. Another door, set with 21 knives, would spring shut on him if he didn't escape in the three minutes allotted. A clock allowed the audience to follow the countdown as one of his hooded assistants sounded of each fifteen second interval. When it was down to the last fifteen seconds, and Bigelow was still not free, the audience jumped to their feet and screamed for him to hurry.

Bigelow's appearance was preceeded by his assistant, Richard Dennis, who performed various magic acts. Some of the acts were very good, such as a fire eating demonstration. But when he tried to make a dove appear out of his handkerchief, it was obvious to all that the doves were coming out of his coat.

He was upstaged by a volunteer who did a better job of hamming it up, and a dove who kept interfering with one of his card tricks.

But there was no question as to the star of the night. Bigelow held the audience spell bound as he went from one spectacular act to another. A twenty-one year veteran in the escape business, he never lost his calm, even when the straight-jacket act seemed to go longer than it should have.

The show was only impaired by its location. The ballroom did not provide a high enough stage for the size of the audience and vision for many was often impaired. Some persons tried to stand to get a better view, but were quickly shouted down by the people behind them.

Norman Bigelow may or may not be Houdini reincarnated. But he certainly is a great showman and crowd pleaser, as anyone in attendance last night can attest to.

Women's Dorm's? Right On!

By ROBERTA MARTONE

Although most girl's dorms on this campus are scorned, they have their benefits. One of the benefits of Knowlton House is its 21-year-old single, male Head of Residence---Marian Kowacki.

Kowacki said the initial reaction to his residence position is surprise. Most people want to know how he got the job and whether it was a mistake due to the spelling of his first name. "It is no mistake and he obtained the job through the usual process of selection of a Head of Residence," said Kowacki.

Several residents in the dorm have remarked on the change in atmosphere, saying that they feel more able to confide in a Head of Residence who is about the same age as them. One resident said that there seems to be more unity in the dorm as a whole. Very few objected to the fact that the position was being filled by a male.

Kowacki said he hasn't received any static from the parents of the girls living in Knowlton. He thinks the reason is possibly because most parents assume he is married and over 21-years old.

As to his reactions on living in an all girl dorm, Kowacki said, "I have to be aware of my values and how they involve the women in the dorm. I am presently taking a Sexism course in order to be more aware of the people I am living with."

Kowacki said it is hard to separate his personal life from his job because the Head of Residence position is not a "9 to 5".job, "I want to make dorm life more of a social center in accordance with the interests and needs of the people living in here, while still maintaining some sort of demeanor."

The "problems" that have arisen are no different than those facing any other Head of Residence, he said. "You get new people adjusting to new life styles. But, actually, this isn't really a problem. It's more of a process. This is where the floor counselors are a real help to me." The adjustment situation applies especially to Knowlton House because 85 of the 160 residents are freshmen.

Kowacki, who was an undergraduate at UMass last year, and is now enrolled in a special Graduate program on campus, said, however, his Head of Residence position is of primary concern. "The job is what I am here for, although I am entitled to take one course per semester along with six weeks of courses in the summer." The graduate program Kowacki is enrolled in is a special Masters program relating to job placements.

Kowacki summed up by saying, "Everything seems to be going along fine. I feel comfortable in my job and therefore, I enjoy it."

Commuter Vote Poor In Senate Election

By BONNIE COHEN

The opening day of Student Senate elections has been characterized by a disappointing number of commuter students turning out to vote. Out of almost 7500 commuter students, an estimated 160 votes were cast in the Duke Room in the Student Union. According to election official Steve Barbanel, "If this present trend continues, we will have less votes this year in three days of elections than we had last year with only one day."

Besides voting on their 30 representatives to the Senate, students also have the opportunity to make known their preference on yearbook funding, or whether or not to have a yearbook at all. Despite this important referendum, the commuter students showed an apparent lack of concern about the elections. Speaker of the Senate David Booker feels disappointed with the first day turn-out and wonders, "how do you change the heads of people who, all they want out of college is classes and the Collegian over a cup of coffee at the Hatch?".

Officially, there are 29 students running for the 30 available seats open to commuter students. However, there have been some students running write-in campaigns because they did not get their nomination petitions in one time to be included on the ballot. Even at this late date, those involved with the elections feel that a write-in candidate stands a very good chance of becoming elected if they work at it.

Barbanel and Booker have some plans for the two remaining days of election to get more people to vote. They feel that visibility has been one of their chief problems and therefore plan to put up more signs in and around the Student Union to make more students aware of what is going on in the Duke Room. They also plan to continue their full page ads in the Collegian. Other than that, they are just doing a lot of hoping and wishing that more commuter students will come out and vote on Wednesday and Thursday, the final two days of elections, to vote. Speaker Booker has some final words to those students who have not yet made their opinions known--"PLEASE VOTE!"

State Officers Found On More Than One Payroll

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A number of state officers are drawing income from more than one public payroll. Some others work for companies which do a substantial business with the state.

This year, for the first time, the officers wre required to file a list of all outside income sources with the executive Office of Administration and Finance.

There is no similar reporting requirement for legislators or other state employes.

The legislation defined state officers as cabinet secretaries, commissioners, department heads, and members of various boards.

George Tully, of the office of administration and finance, said the files are incomplete and there is no accurate method of checking up on officials to see if they are reporting properly.

The original bulletin which went to the state officials said, "Any officer of the Commonwealth failing to file said report shall be given a hearing and dismissed if found delinquent without sufficient cause."

At least one officer made a report but neglected to mention some of his ouside interests. William DiPesa, a member of the Board of Public Accountantcy, lists himself as a director of the Mt. Washington Co-Operative Bank. However, he failed to say he is also president of the Charles E. DiPesa and Co., which has done a number of audits for the state on federal contracts.

"But how the hell would you ever cross check," Tully asks. "There isn't even a list of state of officers. And besides, some people don't know themselves whether or not they're considered state officers."

State law says, "A person shall not at the same time receive more than one salary from the Commonwealth," but several officials listed income from more than one state source in 1972.

A spokesman for the state personnel office says that at least some of the boards or commissions are set up in such a waht that the payment for part-time jobs is considered expenses rather than a part-time salary.

In addition, the spokesman said, "payments from the special 03 accounts for consulting work aren't considered salary. "They have to sign a form saying they did this work outside regular working hours."

State Comptroller Arthur H. McKinnon, who was deputy commissioner for fiscal affairs when he reported, received an extra $5,317 from the Commonwealth's Division of Civil Service for preparing and marking civil service exams, $1,500 as chairman of the board of the Everett Co-Operative Bank; $863 from the W.H. Doty Trust; and $1,815 from unspecified "part-time professional services."

Robert Lynch, a member of the Board to Facilitate the Use of Public Buildings by the Physically Handicapped, received two arthitectural contracts from the state, totalling $5,600. He receives a part-time salary of up to $1,250 for the board's occasional meetings in addition to reimbursement for expenses.

John Olsen, who receives $16,023 as a supervising district engineer inspector for the Department of Public Safety, is also paid a chairman of the Board of Boiler Rules. He is paid up to $1,250 for the board's occasional meetings, but the legislation specified that in addition to reimbursement for any expenses he might incur.

Richard C. Gilliland, director of the state's Divison of Employment Security, earned an extra $5,246 from the federal governmnt.

Public Safety Secretary Richard E. McLaughlin listed several outside sources: In addition to consulting fees to the federal Department of Transportation, McLaughlin received $3,655 in 1972 from the Massachusetts Air National Guard, and he was a director of the Rumford Insurance Co. of Providence, R.I.

Two members of the rate setting commission who received $6,000 for the part-time job, were also on other public payrolls during the 1972 reporting period.

James Callahan listed $13,961 as director of a community study of social services for Worcester and another $9,783 from a state job.

Richard Connors listed an additional $21,000 as project director of the Boston Alcohol Safety Action Program.

There is no state law saying a state employe cannot do outside work for federal or municipal governments, and the state law prohibiting employes to appear on two states payrolls is not being strictly interpreted.

Mass Bicentennial Gets Western Opinion

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts' plan to celebrate the nation's 200th birthday by preserving two areas of natural and historic interest has run into opposition from some residents in the western part ofthe state.

The bill, which would provide a $25 million bond issue for projects on the Boston Harbor Islands and the Holyoke Range, was given its second public hearing at the State House yesterday. This time it was the House Ways and Means Committee which scrutinized the bill to set up a Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission to oversee those projects.

The commission with a nine member board of directors appointed by the governor would expire in 1977.

Some $20 million of the funds would be used to develop and preserve the Boston Harbor Islands for recreational purposes, Commissioner of Natural Resources Arthur Brownell said. That would include a water transit system to take people from the mainland to the islands, he added. All of the islands involved in the planned development are already controlled by the state, Brownell said.

The Holyoke Range, which runs through Hadley, South Hadley, Amherst, Granby and Belchertown, was the subject of most of the day's testimony.

A Tribute To Paul Robeson

By BRENDA GRAY

"Come And Go With Me To My House" A song that was sung by the New Africa House Choir and received a standing ovation in Bowker Auditorium. Last night the essence of a true spiritualist was captured, last night in tribute to Paul Robeson, actor, singer, orator and Great Black Othello of 1924.

The concert was very inspiring to many people in the audience, a standing room-only crowd. The message that was delivered was the same one that Robeson, through his creative endeavors tried to give to the world before he died....To be truly free we must first of all truly love ourselves, spiritually, physically, and mentally.

Guests at the performance were Sonia Sanchez, The Boyer Brothers, The Voices of New Africa House Choir, The Mass Approach, Roland Wiggins, Mr. Edward Boatner and Sister Elma Lewis of the Elma Lewis School of Fine Arts.

Acklin Lynch, host of the concert, said that there are many Paul Robesons of tomorrow on campus and all they need to do is to seek out some of the great black artists that we have here. Named were Max Roach and Archie Shepp the coordinators of last nights concert. Music is most assuredly a sign of the times. Paul Robeson who often did his songs in other lango was most assuredly ahead of his times. During his stage performances he did some of his songs in different languages, trying to relate to all people. This is "Profiles in Black"

New Public Aid Application Required

By JEFFREY LEVIN

University students desiring aid from any Massachusetts public assistance program, including the Food Commodities Distribution Program will be required to follow a two-step application procedure, according to the Massachusetts Public Welfare Department.

Stan Boris, an official from the Welfare Department declared that under the old method of selecting recipients of food commodities, students came to apply unprepared. They frequently left information vital to their eligibility at home. Another problem inherent in the old method was the variations in the application procedures in the various cities of the Commonwealth.

The new two-step procedure was designed to be a statewide uniform policy.

According to Boris, a student takes the first step by going to the nearest Food Commodities office.

He or she is then told all the information about the program and the requirements for obtaining eligibility. Then he must produce documents from his school stating that he is a student, the extent of any financial aid that he is receiving and his local address. These documents can be in the form of a letter or an identification card.

In addition, he is told that a letter from his parents stating their support of him, if any is required.

The student takes step two of the procedure by returning to the office after a short period with the documents for completion of the application.

Under the present Food Commodities Distribution Program, a recipient receives a Food Card which he must present to the distribution center before or on the date specified on his card, when he presents his card, he is given a one month supply of commodities.

According to an aide of Gerry Dunn, Supervisor of the Springfield Welfare Regional Office, if a recipient brings his card to the center in the month following the one specified on his card, he will be denied his food supply. A person whose card lists the day of October cannot obtain his supply on November 1 because it is a new month and the inventories will have been recorded.

It was learned that the Food Commodities Distribution Program now in operation in Springfield is slated to be phased out at the end of the fiscal year. A Food Stamp system is scheduled to be implemented in July 1974.

Farmer's Almanac Has New Tidbits

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

LEWISTON, Maine (AP)-Know how to poach a fish in your dishwasher? Could you tell time on Mars?

These are a couple of the more far out tidbits of information to be had in the 157th edition of the Farmer's Almanac.

However, Ray Geiger, now in his 40th year as editor, describes his publication as "an antidote to pornography," and says his greatest contribution during the past four decades has been to put "a good, wholesome magazine" in millions of homes.

The no-dirty-jokes conservatism of the almanac "is probably a little too much for the way most people live now, but it definitely has its place," said the loquacious 63-year-old "philom," a title he has assumed which means "lover of learning."

"The almanac will never drive magazines like "Playboy" and "Oui" out of business. However, Hugh Hefner might take notice that our readership has expanded from 86,000 when I took over in 1934 to five million this year," he said.

The latest edition of the 48-page almanac is just out. Weatherwise, it predicts a snowier, colder winter than last year.

Besides the weather, recipes, jokes, household hints and farming data, the 1974 almanac includes such tidbits as how to poach fish in your dishwasher:

Dot the fish with butter and sprinkle of parsley; wrap in heavy aluminum foil. Find the flattest part of the rack or fold down partitions if you have them. Place the fish in the dishwasher and let run through the whole cycle. The fish should be perfectly poached at the end of that time.

"You have to make sure the washer maintains heat of 160-180 degrees," said Geiger. "The process works beautifully. I've tried it!"

Another favorite in the new almanac, he said, is a brief comment on the origin of kissing. The almanac says it derived from men's craving for salt. The cave man found that he could get salt by licking his neighbor's cheek.

"He quickly found it more interesting if the neighbor was female," Geiger quipped, "Then everybody forgot about salt."

Casting your ballot is like . . . . a warm body on a cold night.

Kriesky Turns Down Meir Appeal For Emigrants

By ROLAND PRINZ
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Chancellor Brune Kreisky turned down a dramatic personal appeal yesterday from Israeli Premier Golda Meir that he reverse his decision to close group transit facilities for Soviet Jewish emigrants.

Kreisky told newsmen after a 1 1/2-hour meeting with Mrs. Meir that he had proposed as an alternative that the United Nations be asked to assume responsibility for the nearby Schoenau Castle transit camp for Soviet Jews en route to Israel.

Sudden Visit by Mrs. Meir

The Austrian government agreed last Saturday to close the camp in return for the release of four hostages held by two Palestinian terrorists. The decision prompted strong protests from Israel and the sudden visit by Mrs. Meir.

The Israeli premier, looking tired and grim Tuesday night at Tel Aviv's Lod Airport after returning to Israel, said she was "very sad" about the kidnap affair and its aftermath, but added that the Austrian decision to close the camp would not affect relations between the two countries.

We Will Find Another Way

"Israel does not believe in solving problems by breaking relations. We will find another way," she said.

The Israeli premier said the most convenient solution would be to fly Soviet Jewish immigrants directly from Moscow to Tel Aviv, but stressed that "it depends on the Soviet government."

Kreisky said he cabled Austrian Foreign Minister Rudolf Kirchschlaeger in New York Tuesday, instructing him to propose that the U.N. high commissioner for refugee questions be asked to assume responsibility for the camp.

An official at the high commissioner's office said it was uncertain whether the Jews passing through Austria were refugees since they had legally left the Soviet Union and had an assured destination.

Later diplomats said Kirchschlaeger met with U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, but what they discussed was not disclosed.

Kreisky said there was "no special reaction" from Mrs. Meir regarding his suggestion that the United Nations take over the camp.

Questioned closely on the matter, Kreisky added that Mrs. Meir was "not very impressed by my proposal. Perhaps she did not think it was very realistic."

Kreisky said the decision to close the camp would not bar the travel of individuals through Austria. "Only special facilities we have been able to grant so far will no longer be available."

The Austrian leader has said he decided to close the Schoenau camp because the government fears it cannot provide adequate protection for the Jewish emigrants against Arab terrorist attacks.

But Abraham Karlikow, Europiean director of the American Jewish Committee, said in Vienna on Tuesday that the Austrain decision has made the risks greater for Jewish emigrants.

"The day Schoenau closes, every individual Jew arriving in Austria becomes a far more ready target for terrorism, a readier potential hostage," he said.

Grand Jury Quickens Agnew Investigations

BALTIMORE (AP) - The special federal grand jury investigating allegations of bribery, extortion and conspiracy against Vice President Spiro T. Agnew is quickening its pace in search of kickback evidence, planning two working sessions this week, starting Wednesday.

First of the new testimony, a courthouse source said, will come from a reluctant witness, William J. Muth, a former Democratic Baltimore City Councilman who has been active in raising funds for Agnew campaigns for governor in 1966 and as vice president in 1968 and 1972.

Muth, apparently resorting to Fifth Amendment protection, refused to answer questions last Thursday when the 22-member panel finally started the case involving Agnew, two months after the vice president was formally notified by a Justice Department letter that he was under criminal investigation.

The source said Muth, new office manager for an engineering firm, would be granted immunity and forced to testify under threat of being sent to jail for contempt. It was not disclosed what Muth is expected to tell the jury about his connections with Agnew.

Muth told newsmen last week, after leaving the grand jury room, that the Agnew investigation "is a lot of bull-----."

The jury previously has been meeting regularly only once a week, on Thursdays.

Since Aug. 23, when it handed up a 39-count indictment against N. Dale Anderson, the Democrat who succeeded Agnew as chief executive of Baltimore County in 1966, the jury has been in session only three times - including last Thursday when it opened its criminal probe of the vice president on direct orders of Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson.

A day later Agnew's lawyers moved to halt the grand jury investigation, and also to silence all public discussion about alleged evidence already before the jury or scheduled to be presented, if it ever is.

U.S. District Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman Jr. of Norfolk, assigned specially to handle the Agnew phase after all nine federal judges in Maryland disqualified themselves because of friendship with the vice president, has fixed Oct. 12 for a hearing here.

Findley Urges Action On Agnew Probe Soon

WASHINGTON (AP)-Rep. Paul Findley said yesterday that if the House Judiciary Committee does not act within seven legislative days on a motion of inquiry regarding Vice President Spiro T. Agnew he will seek to have the committee discharged from further consideration of it.

The Illinois Republican introduced a resolution of inquiry Monday directing the attorney general to provide the House with any facts indicating that Agnew has accepted bribes or failed to declare all of his income for tax purposes.

The resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Under the rules of the House, he said, the committee is required to act within seven legislative days or risk having the resolution taken from it.

The recommendation is then subject to the approval by the full House.

"If the committee fails to act within the allotted time, I shall introduce a privileged motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the resolution," Findley said.

"In that way, members of the House will have an opportunity to decide whether an investigation of the conduct of Vice President Agnew should be undertaken, or whether Congress should stand idly by."

Champs Uncle Charges Less

BOULDER, Colo. (AP)-Robert Lange Sr., the uncle of the disqualified 1973 Soap Box Derby champion, agreed yesterday to an adjustment in charges against him for encouraging his nephew to cheat in the race.

Boulder Dist. Atty. Alex Hunter had filed charges of "encouraging a minor to violate a state law" after Lange admitted he made the decision that James Gronen should use an illegal device to give his soap box racer a faster start.

Under what is called a nonjudicial adjustment, Judge Horace Holmes will draw up a set of orders which Lange must follow and Lange waives his right to a jury trial on the misdemeanor charge.

If Lange fails to follow the conditions of the order he may be sentenced without trial. The maximum penalty is up to one year in jail and a maximum fine of $1,000.

Holmes set Oct. 23 for the release of the orders which Lange must follow.

Gronen, 14, who lives with Lange, was disqualified from the national All-American Soap Box Derby when race officials found a magnetic nose in his gravity-powered racer. The electromagnet gave the racer a faster start when the metal starting gate was dropped.

Questions And Answers To Fuel Shortage Issue

By STANLEY BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Yesterday's White House announcement of mandatory fuel allocations was designed, energy adviser John A. Love stated, "to let consumers and distributors know that positive action is being taken" to cope with fuel shortages.

But the average consumer may still be wondering what "mandatory allocation" is all about.

Here, in question-and-answer form, is an exploanation of the fuel shortage and the programs adopted to meet it:

Q-Is there really a fuel shortage, or is it just you newspaper guys trying to create headlines?

A-The Interior Department has just studied the situation and reported the nation will be short of distillate oils by about 100,000 barrels a day this winter. Propane gas is already in short supply. Natural gas supplies cannot keep up with increasing demand, and some companies are refusing to take new customers.

The pressure is increased by antipollution rules that will reduce the burning of some fuels because they give off too much sulfur.

The President's top energy adviser said Tuesday that "it is clear that the nation will"-not "may", mind you- "will experience some fuel shortages this winter and perhaps over the next few years."

And Stephen A. Wakefield, assistant secretary of the interior for energy and minerals, predicted "the strong probability of a gasoline shortage next summer."

Well, I know about natural gas, but what is "distillate oil"?

A-If you lived in New England you would know. It means a variety of refined oils including diesel fuel, jet fuel, kerosene and especially home heating oil. And homes really need reliable heating in the winter up in New England and the Upper Midwest. A lot of hospitals, factories and businesses depend on it too.

Q-Where does propane come in?

A-Most people don't have much to do with propane, but farmers need it to dry their crops, and some families living in isolated homes or trailers use it for heating and cooking. Industrial vehicles, such as forklift trucks, and other equipment sometimes have to use it in enclosed areas where the exhaust of gasoline or diesel fuel would poison workers. Propane is even turning up more often in natural gas pipelines; the utilities add it to meet short surges in demand in what is called "peak shaving."

Q-What is the government doing about the fuel problem?

A-Well, for one thing, it is asking every citizen to reduce his use of fuel and energy as much as possible: to lower air conditioner and heater settings drive less and drive slower to save gasoline, insulate your home, things like that.

The government itself is trying to cut its fuel consumption by seven per cent.

Beyond that, it has offered to let the states ease up on their clean-air efforts, temporarily, so high-sulfur fuels can continue to be used.

Yesterday, the White House announced, after a lot of hesitation, that it was imposing a mandatory allocation system on propane gas and will impose it within a few weeks on heating oil and the rest of those "middle distillates".

Q-Mandatory what?

A-Allocation. That means the government will control the distribution-

Q-You mean they will ration everything? Where did I store those World War II stamp-books...

A-No, no, no. Not that kind of rationing. At least, not yet. Under mandatory allocation, the government will only control fuel distribution at the wholesale level. You won't need ration tickets or anything. You just purchase fuel as usual from your dealer.

ANNOUNCES RESIGNATION--Nicholas Makarezos, deputy Greek premier, announces his resignation Friday in Athens to newsmen. Makarezos said he quit because of disagreement with President George Papadopoulos. He denied impending appointment of civilian premier and directed resignation of military men expected afterwards was the cause of his action and called for support of the expected government change.

US-Soviet Trade Talks Involve Jews

..MOSCOW (AP)-President Nixon's top finance man had a lengthy talk with the Soviet premier yesterday about trade relations troubled by a dispute over treatment of Soviet Jews.

In another part of the Russian capital, uniformed police overwhelmed 10 Jewish demonstrators with a shouting, shoving charge and arrested the Jews who were protesting Moscow's refusal to let them leave for Israel.

The talks at the top were between U.S. Treasury Secretary George P. Schultz and Premier Alexei N. Kosygin. Nixon's envoy was sounding out the Russians about economic cooperation.

At the conclusion of the meeting in the Kremlin, Schultz said: "We discussed the principal economic questions in a probing but very friendly atmosphere."

The conference with Kosygin was the second high-level session with Soviet leaders in 24 hours. Monday night Shultz was summoned to the Kremlin for a talk with communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev in what Pravda indicated may have been a frosty encounter.

The communist party newspaper characterized the meeting as "businesslike." It had reported the first Brezhnev-Shultz session last March as taking place "in a spirit of mutual understanding."

Resident Moscow diplomats saw the cool language as possibly reflecting official dissatisfaction.

An end to discriminatory tariffs is a key part of the landmark Soviet-American trade agreement signed in Washington a year ago. Congress is insisting in exchange that the Soviets permit free emigration of Soviet Jews and other citizens.

Ten Jews who attempted to unfurl homemade banners in front of the office of Tass, the Soviet news agency, were smothered by about 30 policemen who stormed from inside the Tass building. Observers said the rough treatment may have been staged by opponents of Brezhnev's opening to the West.

Dairy Farmers Boost Wholesale Prices

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The nation's dairy farmers have boosted wholesale prices by up to two cents a quart and some producers say the latest increases could start showing up at the supermarket within the next few days.

An Associated Press survey showed that milk producers in all parts of the country raised prices at the beginning of the week, generally about 60 cents per hundred pounds of milk. There are about 50 quarts in 100 pounds.

The two largest associations of milk producers led the way.

A spokesman for Associated Milk Producers, which has its headquarters in San Antonio said the increases were put into effect "to provide some economic incentive to dairy farmers to stay in business." He said rising costs had forced many farmers out of the dairy business and reported that production is currently about three or four per cent below last year's output.

Mid-America Dairymen, Inc., the second largest producer, also announced increases effective Monday and said the boosts affecting 13 Midwest and Southern states would range from 8 to 10 cents per gallon.

The Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, representing 1,000 dairy farmers in the middle Atlantic states, announced Monday that prices charged to processors would be raised about two cents a quart.

Nixon May Go To Europe By Year's End

WASHINGTON (AP)-A casual remark by President Nixon to Italian tourists has revived prospects that a new Atlantic declaration will be in shape for him to sign on a trip to Europe before the end of the year.

This would fulfill Nixon's proclamation that 1973 will be "the year of Europe" and would represent an additional accomplishment for a foreign policy already embellished by major turns in U.S. relations with Moscow and Peking.

But the President's chief foreign policy strategist, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, has said that the trip will not be hurried to meet any "artificial deadlines."

And Gerald L. Warren, the deputy White House press secretary, suggested Tuesday that the President was essentially expressing a hope to visit Europe rather than predicting a date in his chat with an Italian couple outside a Washington restaurant.

Nixon was quoted as telling Mr. and Mrs. Giuseppe Di Marco that he plans to go to Europe "in about two or three months." But Warren told newsmen: "The President thinks he said, 'in a few months'."

In any event, both Kissinger and the White House have stressed the importance of the secretary's visit to London with two weeks for talks with several European foreign ministers. He may also go to Paris and Bonn.

Kissinger told a news conference last Wednesday that "The outcome of the deliberations will determine the timing of the President's trip."

Warren said, "no determination will be made until the secretary returns."

Six Murdered In Kentucky

FORT THOMAS, Ky. (AP)-Two fugitives shot and killed a minister and his two children, then executed three more persons in an 80-mile flight across Kentucky before their capture yesterday, police said.

Officials said the federal prison escapees were wearing the minister's clothing when arrested by Fort Thomas police who were on the lookout for a stolen auto.

The two were identified as Wilmer Scott, 35, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Willian Sloan, 24, Louisville. Both were charged with murder and moved to the state penitentiary at Eddyville, Ky., a maximum security facility.

They fled the Federal Building in Lexington Monday afternoon along with Roy Collins, 24, Lima, Ohio. Collins broke his leg and was captured immediately by U.S. marshals.

Sloan and Scott commandered the auto of Mrs. Robert Ewalt as she waited to pick up a daughter and another girl at a school directly behind the Federal Building, police said.

They said Mrs. Ewalt was forced to drive to her home where the abductors bound her and her other two children, aged 11 and 12, with telephone cord. After stealing a .22 caliber rifle, several kitchen knives and $6 to $8 in cash. The pair drove off in Mrs. Ewalt's car. No one was injured.

After the pair was captured at Fort Thomas, across the Ohio River from Cincinnati, they told police of the Lexington killings, officers said.

'Spaceman' Cast Aids Neck Injury

By DAVE BENNETT
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - For the next three months, Michael Pechorer will be walking around San Francisco streets looking like a spaceman, but doctors think he is lucky to be alive.

The 31-year-old attorney presently wears a complicated stainless steel device called a "hale cast" to support a broken neck suffered in an Aug. 3 automobile accident in Mexioc.

"This is considered The treatment for neck fractures," said Pochorer. "Its rarity is realy because neck fractures often are fatal or result in paralysis."

He said doctors told him "the odds of someone surviving this kind of accident are maybe one in a thousand."

The hale cast consists of a metal ring suspended about eight inches above his head and supported by two rods running down to the chest which is encased in a body cast. The hale itself is connected to Pechorer's head via slim rods and a metal headband screwed to the skull.

"The doctor says you are virtually certain of recovery as long as you stay in the cast. I suppose if you really jerked hard on it you could tear it loose," he said.

He said that once when he was walking along the street "some guy grabbed me - people think you are some kind of freak - some guy grabbed me by the bars." Pechorer said he was able to pull away.

While Pechorer survived the auto crash his wife and unborn child did not. He said they were driving near Tecate, Mexico, less than a mile from the border when the car went out of control.

The vehicle rolled over several times and his wife Karen, 27, who was severn-months pregnant, was thrown from the car.

"We were taken to a clinic in Tecate where I regained consciousness. I was covered with blood and dirt from head to foot. I knew my neck was broken," he recalled.

The cast already has caused some problems. "I'm 6 feet tall normally," said Pechorer, "but about 6-8 in this thing. One time I got hooked in a wire hanging off of an awning.

"It's like having blinders on, you can only look straight ahead," he said. "Housekeeping, washing dishes and that kind of thing are a chore. I can't bathe myself and not being able to take a shower is horrible."

Pechorer said he awaits the day when he can "just resume normal living and cope with the emotional problems. I'm in a limbo now, that's the way I feel."

Cold War On In Britain

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)-Britain ordered its naval vessels out of disputed fishing waters around Iceland yesterday, yielding to the island nation's threat of a diplomatic break.

Prime Minister Edward Heath announced Britain's decision to quit 12 hours before a deadline set by the Reykjavik government for the withdrawal of three Royal Navy frigates and three tugs.

He did so, he said, on the assumption Iceland will allow British travlers to go on fishing in the 50-mile zone that Reykjavik has claimed as its own fishing grounds.

"The Navy and the tugs will return if this assumption proves to be wrong," Heath wrote to Icelandic Prime Minister Olafur Johannesson.

At the same time he invited Johannesson to summit negotiations in London to get some sort of plan to permit British trawlermen to go on fishing in the zone, as they have been doing for two centuries.

He has in mind a catch limitation agreement that would enable the trawlers to bring back something like 130,000 tons of fish a year for the next two years or so. Iceland last year proposed an upper limit of 117,000 tons.

Johannesson accepted Heath's invitation and said he would come to London Oct. 15. In previous talks with the British, the leader of Iceland's coalition government has refused any commitment allowing British Trawlermen to go on working the fishing grounds.

The decision by the British government took some heat off the United States. The Americans and Icelanders are revising their 1951 defense pact that permits the United States to run an air-sea surveillance base at Keflavik.

So long as the British-Icelandic quarrel dragged on there was a danger its bitterness would spill over into the Keflavik situation and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Radio Free Europe

WASHINGTON (AP)-A $50.2 million authorization for Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty cleared Congress yesterday over objections they are inconsistent with U.S.-Soviet detente and shouldn't be financed by the U.S. government.

The authorization, already approved by the Senate, was passed by the House, 313 to 90. The two radios sent broadcasts into Communist countries. Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D-N.Y., questioned whether the broadcasts are consistent with U.S.-Soviet detente.

Skylab Astronauts Still Feel Weakness

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)-Skylab 2 astronauts said yesterday they were still experiencing feelings of weakness or "tired blood" from their 59½ days in space weightlessness, but the record space travelers said they were rapidly readapting to earth.

Astronauts Alan L. Bean, Jack R. Lousma and Owen K. Garriott held their first news conference since the end of their mission and said they have less energy and tire more quickly than they did before their space flight which ended last Tuesday.

"It's been a bigger strain coming back than I thought," said Bean, the mission commander. "I feel a little bit weaker than when I left. I feel like I've got tired blood."

Garriott said he and Lousma jogged a mile each on Monday, "but at a much slower rate than three months ago before the mission."

Lousma said it took him only hours to lose the feeling of heaviness ane light headedness he first experienced after returning to earth, but added, "I feel a little less energetic and I'm more tired."

Bean, however, said the astronauts notice a daily increase in their strength as their bodies readapt to gravity and said no serious problems are expected to linger.

"We are physically getting back to where we started," he said.

The Skylab 2 commander said they got into the proper routine of exercise, sleep and food after about 25 days in space and felt very well.

"We seemed to hit a groove and felt we could have stayed there indefinitely," said Bean. "The Skylab 3 crew should be able to go for an indeterminate length of time."

The Skylab 3 crew is set to begin a 56-day mission aboard the space station in November. Bean had high praise for the work of Garriott, who was only the third scientist-astronaut and the first solar physicist to fly into space.

He said Garriott viewed phenomena differently than he and Lousma, both of womn are pilot-astronauts, and contributed much to the mission's scientific success.

"I think the mission would have been 50 per cent less productive without Owen along," said Bean. "I'm really sold on these scientist-astronauts. There's no substitute for having a variety of types up there."

Bean said the three experienced occasional flareups of irritation, but "it was like a family argument."

We at times got a little sharp with one another. We fussed a bit at each other on occasion," he said. "You could see it coming. It would happen and then it would go away."

Senate Passes Foreign Aid Budget Below Nixon's Request

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate passed a $1.2 billion foreign economic aid authorization bill yesterday after refusing twice to make substantial cuts.

By a one-vote margin, the Senate turned down 47-46 an amendment by Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, to impose a $1.1 billion limit on authorizations for the fiscal year ending next June 30.

Rejected 67-23 was an amendment by Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., to cut the total authorization to $1 billion.

The 54 to 42 vote on final passage sends the bill to a conference with the House, which included $1.6 billion in economic aid in a combined $2.8 billion military-economic aid package.

The Senate bill includes $376 million, $256 million less than President Nixon's budget request, for reconstruction and humanitarian assistance in Indochina.

Adopted by voice vote were two amendments by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to emphasize a priority for humanitarian relief for war orphans and other civilian casualties and to earmark $10 million for the work of the International Red Cross in Cambodia.

Another Kennedy amendment, also adopted by voice vote, expressed the "sense of Congress" that President Nixon should deny Chile and any than humanitarian assistance until he finds that the new government there is protecting human rights under international agreements guaranteeing the granting of asylum, safe conduct and humane treatment or release of prisoners.

Kennedy told the Senate he is shocked by reports of executions, beatings and repression by the military junta in Chile that recently overthrew Marxist President Salvador Allende and silence on the part of the U.S. government.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., was successful with an amendment, adopted by voice vote, to cut $25 million for administrative expenses of the Agency for International Development.

The Senate adopted 68 to 25 another Church amendment to require approval by Congress for the expenditure of some $250 million this year in repayments of foreign aid development loans.

Church said his proposed $1.1 billion foreign aid ceiling, about $400 million under President Nixon's budget, was an attempt to hold the line on government spending without destroying the foreign aid program.

In other actions, the Senate:

-Adopted by voice vote an amendment by Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif., to ban any U.S. aid to Portugal that could be used by Portuguese military forces to maintain what he called "colonial rule" in Portuguese African territories.

-Approved an amendment by Sen. Jesse Heims, R-S.C., to forbid use of any aid money for abortions.

-Adopted an amendment by Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Ind.-Va., to forbid any settlement of India's $3 billion debt to the United States without congressional review and approval.

USDA Can't Confirm China Corn Rumors

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Agriculture Department said yesterday it can't confirm trade rumors that the People's Republic of China has bought an additional 120 million bushels of U.S. corn for delivery over the next year.

But Richard E. Bell, deputy assistant secretary for international affairs and commodity programs, said it was possible the sales to China have been made and that the fgures have not yet shown up in exporters' reports to the government.

"All I've heard is the trade rumors," Bell told a reporter.

The Nixon administration has been counting on more plentiful supplies of corn, the most important feed grain to help boost livestock production next winter and put more meat on consumer tables.

The possibility that China has purchased more U.S. corn surfaced in the grain trade this week, along with reports that Canada is negotiating a sale of more wheat to China - perhaps as much as 148 million bushels.

China resumed buying U.S. grain in 1972, after a lapse of more than 20 years.

According to export reports filed with the Commerce Department, China has bought at least 110 million bushels of wheat and 23.6 million bushels of U.S. corn for delivery in 1973-74.

More Price Hikes Seen

By R. Gregory Nokes
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)The Cost of Living Council has approved price increases that can mean higher costs to consumers for soap, detergents, paper products and tires beginning next week.

The increases were granted Tuesday to certain manufacturers who made formal requests for the hikes, giving the 30-day advance notice required under Phase 4 regulations. They are effective Oct. 8. Retailers are allowed to pass such price increases along to the consumer.

The increases approved for tires will be about 3.38 per cent over present retail prices. Major companies had asked for an increase of 6.5 per cent.

The companies in the paper industry will be allowed to increase prices on individual paper products an average of 4.59 per cent.

The companies in the soap and detergent industry will be allowed to increase prices an average of 9.32 per cent; although the council noted some individual prices may be up as much as 64 per cent.

Insurgents Triple Strength In Cambodia

By DENIS GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)-Government commanders on Phnom Penh's southern defensive lines said yesterday that Khmer insurgent strength there has tripled in two weeks.

The Cambodian command reported fighting at Prek Pramak, about eight miles south of the capital in a region heavily infiltrated by the Communist led Khmer insurgents.

On the western perimeter, government troops seeking to take Thmat Pong Hill have changed tactics, the command said. Field reports said they ran into heavy rebel resistance. Thmat Pong hill 18 miles west of Phnom Penh has been the object of a north-south pincer movement to secure western approaches to the capital.

The United States and the Phnom Penh government were formulating plans to distribute free American rice to government main force units in hopes of increasing troop effectiveness and morale. Complaints of inadequate food and pay and of late paydays have been voice by government troops.

The South Vietnamese government meanwhile charged that the North Vietnamese had massacred more than 200 persons at Le Minh ranger base. But other South Vietnamese military sources said their was no evidence of such a massacre.

In Vientiane, Laos, the Pathet Lao and Laotian government named a 14-man joint commission to implement a Sept. 14 peace agreement. The commission will oversee exchange of prisoners of war lists, arrival of Pathet Lao troops in Vientiane and Luang Prabang and refugee resettlement.

The North Vietnamese News Agency carried a Hanoi protest against "new provocative acts" by the United States warships and planes off the coast of North Vietnam on Sunday. It claimed six destroyers and the aircraft carrier Hancock sailed near the coast and jet fighters "flew very low over fishing beats" off Nghe An Province.

Gasoline Operators Consider Protest

Mass shutdowns, court action and passive resistance all were being explored yesterday by disgruntled service station operators as possible avenues to bring home their protest over gasoline price controls.

The head of the Nevada Service Station Association said dealers in his state would begin an indefinite shutdown today. He predicted that by Friday it will take motorists "an hour to get a gallon of gas."

Herb Nye, head of the group, said the Nevada action was part of a planned nationwide shutdown. But dealer association representatives in several other states said they had no definite plans to participate.

Organizers of two southern California dealers groups said some 3,000 station operators had agreed in principle to shut down for at least a week. They represent about one quarter of the region's stations.

Indianapolis dealers, who staged a 75-per-cent effective shutdown last week, said they would not participate in a new closing. "That route has been tried, tested and exhausted at this point as far as this area is concerned," said spokesman Richard Messer.

Motorists in Houston, Tex., were reported encourtering little difficulty gassing up in the second day of a projected three-day dealer shutdown. The dealer's association had predicted an 80 per cent shutdown of 1,900 Houston area service stations. A spot check of two locations of the city showed only one station in seven closed.

Charles Binsted, president of the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, said "from most of the people I've talked to in the East, they don't intend to participate in it a nation-wide shutdown at all.

Caribbean Murders Continue

CHRISTIANSTED, St. Croix, V.I. (AP)-The rash of murders plaguing the tiny Caribbean island of St. Croix flared up again with the slayings of two young women and an island resident, police said yesterday.

The latest murders were discovered as the U.S. lieutenant governors' convention was getting under way here.

The three deaths bring the murder toll of the last 13 months to at least 19 for St. Croix, part of the U.S. Virgin Islands 1,000 miles southeast of Miami.

St. Croix has a population of about 35,000 persons, mostly black. Most of the murder victims have been white.

After long debate, Virgin Island legislators agreed to spend money to bring the convention to the U.S. territory in an attempt to offset the island's growing crime image.

The bodies of the two young women were found late Monday night on a beach about two miles from the headquarters hotel of the lieutenant governors.

The women were identified as Betsy Reiding and Cheryl Barr, both schoolteachers in their 20s, from Massachusetts. Their home towns were not disclosed. They reportedly had lived in St. Croix for about one year.

The women had reportedly gone to a beach party Sunday night.

Their car was found parked about 30 feet away from the bodies. Witnesses said he had left the bar and entered his jeep in a parking lot when he was shot.

The Justice Department ordered the FBI into St. Croix following eight murders at the Fountain Valley Country Club in September 1972. The victims included two Miami, Fla., couples on vacation.

Five black island residents were convicted of the murders.

Two months after Fountain Valley, masked men broke into a St. Croix restaurant and shot two men, injuring a thrrd. Seven men were arrested but charges were dropped against five before trial.

The other two men were acquitted.

Lt. Gov. Martin J. Schreiber of Wisconsin, chairman of the political gathering, said the latest three killings "have cast a dark cloud over the conference."

Heavy security arrangements were evident at the luxurious Beach Hotel at Grapetree Bay, on the eastern end of the Caribbean island.

Early arriving lieutenant governors and their wives appeared unconcerned about their safety, and lounged around on the beach or by the hotel pool.

The key subjects to be debated by the Lieutenant governors are land use and power and energy. One official said the conferees also were concerned over "hangups in the flow of federal dollars authorized for local and state programs."

The island resident, Henry Barrie, was shot in the back and killed Monday night in front of a Christiansted bar, police said.

Administration Criticizes Rail Legislation

By DAVID C. MARTIN
AP Regional Service

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration has warned the House that legislation currently being considered to solve the Northeast rail crisis is "unacceptable."

In a letter to Rep. Harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., chairman of the House Commerce Committee, Transportation Secretary Claude E. Brinegar outlined a series of objections to a bill now before the committee.

The letter, dated Monday, was released by the committee yesterday.

The bill, sponsored by Reps. Dick Shoup, R-Mont., and Brock Adams, D-Wash., would set up a corporation backed by $2 billion in government guaranteed bonds to run the six ailing railroads in the Northeast.

The committee is working against an Oct. 12 deadline, the date a federal judge had indicated he will rule whether the Penn Central, the largest of the six, should be liquidated and rail service ended.

Brinegar's letter objected to the appropriation of federal funds before the size of the new Northeast rail system has been determined, a process which under the Shoup-Adams bill would take a year and a half.

"The appropriate time to consider the need for federal involvement to the financing of the solution to the Northeast railroad problem is after the system plan has been published and the involvement of the private sector has been determined," Brinegar wrote.

Brinegar also objected to the manner in which the proposed corporation would acquire the property of the bankrupt railroads. The Shoup-Adams bill would make the turnover of assets mandatory.

Brinegar said such a provision would allow the creditors of the bankrupt lines to claim payment for those assets "far in excess of their liquidation value."

An aide to Adams said the mandatory provision was necessary to prevent the matter from becoming tied up endlessly in the courts.

Brinegar also said the administration could not accept a proposal that would provide federal subsidies to keep trains running on money-losing branch lines which would otherwise be dropped from the system.

Urban Renewal Still Possible

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent said yesterday that implementation of a modified Park Plaza urban renewal project in downtown Boston is still a possibility if a new developer can be found.

At a news conference, Sargent said that in the final analysis, the problem leading to rejection by the state last week of the third Park Plaza plan was that "the developer walked away."

Earlier in the day, representatives of the building trade unions met with Sargent to urge him to reconsider conditions set by the state which were unacceptable to the developer.

Thomas Reardon, Sargent's press secretary, said the union representatives asked the governor to back off on conditions set by Community Affairs Commissioner Lewis Crampton prior to formal rejection of the third plan for the $266 million project.

Sargent, Reardon said, told them he wouldn't and they should direct their pressure at the Boston Redevelopment Authority and the developers, who wouldn't accept the conditions.

Reardons said that while the union representatives didn't threaten another march on the State House, similar to one held by construction workers in June 1972, they "kept alluding to the possibility" of another march.

They stressed that the Park Plaza project could help relieve unemployment problems, he said.

UMass Roundup

Academic Achievements Cited In Various Major Departments

Edith G. Walker, associate professor of nursing in the UMass School of Health Sciences, division of nursing, has been appointed project coordinator of a grant for improving nursing education in the maternal and child health fields.

The grant, from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, will fund a project cosponsored by the division of nursing and the New England Council on Higher Education for Nursing (NECHEN).

Two workshops, for faculty from college-sponsored nursing education programs all across New England, will be conducted at the Campus Center Oct. 9-12, and in April. Participants will be instructed in trends and new developments in the care ofpatients and children. Maternal and child health care specialists with experience in health care delivery will conduct several seminars during each workshop. Dr. Joan Large, associate professor of nursing at Temple University College of Allied Health Professions, will be the principal teacher.

Four members of the UMass history department have received major scholarly awards.

Assoc. Prof. Paul S. Boyer, author of "Purity in Print: Book Censorship in America," has been awarded a John Simon Guggenheim Fellowship for research on shifting patterns of urban morality in American cities from 1820 to 1940.

Asst. Prof. Stephen E. Pelz, has been appointed one of 10 National and Peace Fellows at the Hoover Institution of Stanford University for 1973-1974. He will study America's decisions for war from 1845 to 1950.

Assoc. Prof. Robert Griffith and Asst. Prof. Bruce Laurie have received grants from the National Endowment for Humanities, Prof. Griffith, author of "The Politics of Fear: Joseph R. McCarthy and the Senate," will study the role of Congress in the formation of foreign policy during the early post-World War II peiod. Prof. Laurie's research will be on the Philadelphia working class in the 19th century.

Four short stories which were originally published in "The Massachusetts Review" have been chosen to appear in "The Best American Short Stories of 1972" and in the "O Henry Collection."

Blair Fuller's 'Bakti's Hand' and John Clayton's 'Cambridge is sinking!! are in the "O Henry" volume. James Kenary's 'Going Home' and Clayton's Cambridge are in "Short Stories;" and Julius Lester's 'The Ram's Horn' is given honorable mention in "Short Stories."

Clayton is an associate professor in the English department, Lester is a visiting professor in the Afro-American Studies department, Kenary is a Vietnam veteran and an undergraduate student, and Fuller is editor of "The Paris Review."

"The Massachusettes Review" is published at UMass with the cooperation of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges.

Peggy Wolff, a graduate nursing student in the School of Health Sciences here will attend the First National Conference on Classification of Nursing Diagnosis, in St. Louis.

She is the only graduate student invited to attend from outside the University of St. Louis, which is sponsoring the conference in cooperation with Allied Health Professions the first week of October.

The invitation is a result of research she has done on the process of developing a nursing diagnoses. Ms. Wolff is a candidate for a master of science degree in nursing.

Assoc. Prof. Sheldon Goldman of the UMass political science department delivered a paper this month to the annual meeting of the American Political Science Association.

The paper was titled "Voting Behavior On The United States Courts of Appeals Revisited."

Prof. Goldman is co-author of two books on the Federal judicial system and author of a monograph on the Massachusetts House of Representative.

"Marriage Reduction and Fertility" is the latest book of Prof. David Yaukey of the sociology department.

To answer the question: "Are family planning programs alone adequate for reducing world fertility and thus curbing population growth?", the author investigates changing marriage patterns and their relationship to fertility rates. Publisher is D.C. Heath and Company of Lexington.

Prof. Yaukey is director of the Sociological and Demographic Institute here.

"The Scrawny Sonnets and other Narratives," has been written by Assoc. Prof. Robert Bagg of the English department and published by the University of Illinois Press.

Prof. Bagg was a finalist for the National Book Award for his first book of poems in 1961, "Madonna of the Cello."

Reclamation Of A Pond

Amherst's Only Swimming Hole

The Dry Look

DELETE

The pond is awaiting some fresh, and clean, water following its draining for dam reparation on August 29. The Department of Public Works declared the pond's masonary structure hazardous last fall, so the Amherst Conservation Commission drew up plans to renovate it.

Work at the project is currently stopped, but should continue if a waiver from the State Legislature arrives. The Wet Lands Legislation Act prohibits disturbing a stream without clearance at a public hearing.

Wendell Dodge, an adjunct professor of wildlife and chairperson of the Commission, is confident that the waiver will be processed by next week. Without this waiver, the project must wait 60 days.

The project is being federally financed through the Bureau of Conservation.

Fed by Cushman Brook on State Street in North Amherst, Puffer's is a former mill pond, but better known around UMass as the only swimming hole in town.

When completed, the pond will again be available for recreation. According to Dodge, it will be a "non managed recreation area"--that is, swimming won't be prohibited, but neither will lifeguards be stationed there.

Completion is tentatively scheduled for December 15, and, after that, a clean, clear, new Puffer's Pond should be ready for the Spring Semester. And for Ice Skaters, even earlier.

Fed. Health Centers Replaced

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The formation of a new federal agency to fight mental illness, drug abuse and alcoholism was announced by Caspar W. Weinberger, the secretary of health, education and welfare.

Weinberger also named Dr. Roger O. Egeberg, former dean of the school of medicine at the University of Southern California, to head the agency which will be called the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration.

Weinberger made the announcements in remarks prepared for delivery at a luncheon of the San Francisco Association on Mental Health at the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

"Within this agency there will be three coequal institutes: a National Institute on Drug Abuse, a National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and the National Institute of Mental Health," he said.

The agency will be separate from the National Institutes of Health which has performed many of the functions planned for the new organization," he said.

Egeberg is a special assistant in HEW for health policy. He is a former assistant secretary of HEW for health and scientific affairs.

Weinberger defended the Nixon administration's decision to phase out support for the Community Health Centers HEW has funded. The phaseout decision has caused controversy in the health care community across the country.

Calling the centers a "demonstration project that helped set in motion a major new trend," he said it was never slated for permanent funding.

"It was never intended to be a categorical aid program, and it should not be transformed into one simply because it exists," he said.

Local funds must be used to fund the 516 centers now in operation, he said.

Weinberger also announced HEW is drafting a National Health Insurance program which will include mental health care benefits and which, if enacted, would be another source of money for the centers.

Drug Raid

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)-Police launched a mass roundup of suspected narcotics pushers yesterday. Some 24 alleged dealers were arrested in a series of raids that began before dawn, and more arrests were predicted.

The suspects were charged with sale or distribution of heroin on arrest warrants issued after a Hampden County Grand Jury returned secret indictments against them.

Police said the arrests by state and local police were for sales made over the past three months to undercover state troopers. Money used to buy the narcotics came from state and local police and from the office of Hampden County District Atty. Matthew J. Ryan Jr.

A small amount of contraband was also seized. Police said investigators could seize only drugs in view since no search warrants were issued.

The raids were coordinated by Capt. Robert A. Meffin, head of the Crime Prevention Bureau, with Maj. Americao Sousa, state police adjutant from Boston.

Congress Ends Wild Cards

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

..WASHINGTON (AP)-Congress acted swiftly yesterday to attempt to end an interest rate war which has been blamed for draining money from the housing mortgage market.

Unless Congress acted this week, House Banking Chairman Wright Patman said, many savings and loan insittutions might be in trouble.

The House passed a resolution urging federal monetary authorities to put a ceiling on interest on the so-called "wild card" certificates of deposits which the Federal Reserve Board authorized in early summer. The Senate passed it Monday, and it now goes to the White House.

During House debate, Rep. Lawrence G. Williams, R-Pa., said some banks are offering up to 11 per cent interest on four-year certificates of deposit of as little as $1,000.

The Federal Reserve Board put no interest ceiling on the wild card deposits of less than $100,000. Deposits over $100,000 already are free of interest limitations.

Both savings and loan associations and banks were permitted to offer the wild card deposits. the thrift institutions said they had no competitive chance against the banks, whose resources and advertising budgets are larger.

Atoms Smash Cancer?

WASHINGTON (AP)-Using rays from a Navy atom smasher machine, doctors yesterday began threating cancer patients in perhaps the largest test yet of a novel way of attacking certain malignacies.

The patients were the first of about 200 from seven eastern states and the District of Columbia expected to receive treatment during the next 12 months.

The project, centered at the Naval Research Laboratory is only the third of its type in operation in the world.

The venture, supported by more than $1 million in funds from the national Cancer Institute, involves treatment of patients by means of "neutron therapy."

This is a type of radiation, made up of a beam of neutrons generated by an atom-smashing device called a cyclotron. It is a type of radiation which project scientists say "may increase the cure rate or control of many kinds of localized malignant tumors."

Fat Ain't So Bad

by FRANK CAREY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A nationally known physiologist said yesterday the insurance industry is unduly worrying the public with a "longstanding claim" that being overweight necessarily poses a major danger of heart attacks.

Dr. Ancel Keys, an emeritus professor of the University of Minnesota, stressed that "gross obesity" is dangerous, but he added:

"However, much of the propaganda about overweight goes far beyond scientific justification. There is no excuse to make people worry and feel guilty simply because they are a few pounds over 'desirable' weight or even over the average for their weight."

Addressing a conference on obesity sponsored by the National Institutes of Health, Dr. Keys said tables of "ideal" or "desirable" weight - published by the insurance industry and based on a person's height - are "not based on either proper data or anything approaching scientific analysis."

Moreover, he said, "the data on height and weight offered by the insurance industry are seriously defective as descriptions of the general population."

Smoking May Be Limited

By G. DAVID WALLACE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission said yesterday his staff is moving ahead, despite heavy criticism, on a study of whether cigarettes merit regulation as a hazardous substance.

"I would be opposed to a total ban," Richard O. Simpson said in a speech before the National Press Club.

but he added: "I see little discussion of a safer cigarette and what that could mean to the smoker. And surprisingly we see little discussion of the individual rights of the nonsmoker."

Simpson said in answer to a question that a safer cigarette could be considered one with lower tar and nicotine content.

Simpson emphasized that his views were his own, and the full five.member commission has yet to consider the issue formally.

Simpson had said earlier he expects a petition for formal action from Sen. Frank Moss, D-Utah. A petition has not been presented to the commission yet.

Simpson said his expressed willingness last August to consider action on cigarettes was widely misinterpreted as a vow to ban cigarettes outright.

Seven Injured In Fight

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)-A Boston man was arrested and at least seven persons were injured Monday night in a fight that broke out at a non-student political meeting on the Harvard University campus, police said.

Vincent Terrell, 28, was charged with possession of a firearm with an altered serial number and with unlawful possession of a firearm. He was treated for injuries at Cambridge City Hospital and was held pending arraignment.

A university police spokesman said the National Caucus of Labor Committee was holding a meeting on campus, and about 80 persons were present.

He said university police were called after receiving complaints that persons were being searched for weapons at the meeting by two self-appointed guards. The searches were halted on orders from the police.

Officials said a number of persons from another organization which was unidentified later came into the meeting, and a fight broke out between the two groups.

Haircuts

By STEVE TETREAULT

An overwhelming feeling of uneasiness struck as he crept into the room with its aura of antiseptics. He hestitated, and then climbed uncertainly into the chair. A long white cloak fastened several restraining straps and then covered his body, save his head, with a striped sheet. He was being forced to watch as the cloak pushed several buttons. A buzz filled the room. Terror struck, and he struggled to loosen his bonds. But it was too late! The cloak, sharp object in hand, was attacking his head!

Yes, its haircut time again. And for everyone (or at least most) this practice which results in the sudden alteration of the cranium means that its time to do some serious personality re-evaluation.

Psychologically, the whole haircut ritual is shattering. Long locks kept one company over the summer, through days at the beach and nights at the movies, are no longer. Hair not only added physical dimension, but also oodles of confidence, self-respect (self-love?). Now its gone. Sob.

Of course, this is narcissistic. Of course, the wise men will call this immaturity and argue that hair length (or looks in general, for that matter) has nothing to with the kind of person you should be. Its what's inside that counts, right? Right. But that's very idealistic. It just doesn't work that way.

These wise moralists fail to see that people will be self-conscious about anything they can find to be self-conscious about. Which explaines why personal care products are usually the biggest sellers on the market, commanding enormous ad budgets.

And society and Madison Avenue have subconsciously sold us the idea that moderate-long hair is in. Observe any advertisement which portrays men under 25. And, remarkably enough, after shelling out $8.50 for a styling, many of us have discovered that, sure enough, it does look pretty good.

Consequently, we mold ourselves to fit our hair. If the hair looks good, on comes the confidence, charm, sophistication. We turn suave, cool. We drop cute double entendres to the girl in line at the Commons.

Killing The Pests

"Alright, you little bastard, stay right there. Shit!! He got away!"

"Mr. President, there's a man named Robert Killbug here to see you."

"Good. Could you send him right in please?-Wait there, you little fucker. I'll get you yet!"

"Hello, Mr. President. My name is Robert Killbug."

"Quick! Shut the door before he gets away! I've been after that fly all day and I don't want to let him leave this room. Who knows - he might be a Commie spy."

"Well then, Mr. Nixon, I'm just the man you want to see. I'm an exterminator and I own the Killbug Extermination Agency. Our slogan is, 'You got 'em, we get 'em.'"

"Yes Mr. Killbug, I know. That's why I had you called in. You see, we have an insect problem in the White House."

"Well, Mr. Nixon, you called the right man. I've been doing a lot of these political places lately. As a matter of fact, just a couple of months ago, a fellow named Dean called me and asked me to do a thorough investigation on some bugs in the Democratic Headquarters at the uh. . .What's the name of that hotel?"

"Watergate."

"Yeah, that's it. Anyhow, I went down there and I couldn't find no bugs, so I told that to this Dean guy."

"Yes, I know. I told Mr. Dean to call you, but we'll keep that a secret, for now - alright?"

"Shit, yeah. For the money that guy Dean was paying me, I'd keep anything a secret."

"That's being a good citizen. Now what can we do about getting rid of these insects?"

"Well, Mr. Nixon, there's a whole bunch of ways you can get rid of the little pests. If you want, I could give you a little demonstration of each one."

"No, that's alright. Do whatever you feel is necessary. I just want these insects to give me a little peace - with honor, that is."

"Well I don't think there's too many honorable ways to kill things, but I'll do the best I can."

"Alright, but just don't tell me about it. I don't want to know."

"Thank you, Mr. President. I won't let any of those Commie spy flies get away. Good-bye Mr. Nixon."

"Good-bye. Alright, he's gone. Now I'll get you, you little bastard. Your not going to tell Kosygin about me. Dammit!! Missed again. Why don't you go bother Spiro or something. My God, he's been bugging me enough lately. Alright, this is the last straw - I'm not going to be the first president to let a fly get the best of him.

"There! I gotcha! I guess that shows you what I think of Commies. Who ever said that these bugs are gonna get me out of my office."

"Mr. President, the Pentagon just called to report that one of our top spy flies was swatted out of commission today by Mr. Kosygin."

"Dammit! I thought we'd finally be ahead in the fly race."

Concrete Ideas

Last spring, when I first applied to live off-campus I listed my reasoning as environmental. The area director asked me to elaborate.

"I'm allergic to concrete," I told him.

"Get out of my office," he told me.

That next week I was back in his office with a new angle to earn my freedom from cement city. This time the stooge accepted my bullshit story and I got the little blue card and moved out into the country. Anyway...

I hate concrete. I hate the way it feels, I hate the way it smells. I hate the way buildings are poured out of it. I hate the way pictures won't stay taped to it. And I just hate the way it looks.

I've said it before and I'll say it over and over and over again, although the "beauty" of concrete buildings is they don't have to be painted, someone somewhere forgot the fact that these same buildings have to be looked at also. Whoever designed the concrete slabs that adorn our campus should be tarred and feathered. Or at least pitied.

In case you haven't realized, Amherst is in the middle of some very nice farm country. It doesn't make sense to me that urban renewal is necessary. Even the tenements of East Boston have more character than the brand new buildings on campus. At least they're painted. I don't understand why anyone would want to make this area look like a little city. Granted, there are a lot of people here, but is that any reason for tearing up the countryside?

Part of living in this area is exactly that, living in the area. When you live somewhere, you should take on the characteristics of that area. Or, when in Rome do as the Romans...Alright, so many of us are city transplants, but the idea of being transplanted is to fit into the area in which you have been transplanted. This doesn't make sense, you might think. That's O.K. I never do. Anyway...

We're saved from further desecrations of the area for a while at least. Linda told me that no new buildings can be built until 1975. There's some sort of a rumor that the Fine Arts building may have problems being completed because of this new law, but I'm sure they'll figure out a way to finish it. So what do we do with the concrete sacrileges now that we've got them? Well, we can take a tip from the tenement areas. We could paint murals on them. I'd suggest putting posters on them, but tape won't stay taped on them, because concrete sweats. I guess paint is the only solution. It's funny, the only way to improve these buildings is the one way in which they weren't meant for. But that's par for the course around here. The designer should have taken a course in logic before he attempted these buildings.

So, improve the campus. Test out your artistic dreams. Throw a can of paint on the Campus Center or Whitmore. Bring some beauty back into Amherst.

Checks And Balances In Jeopardy

By DAVID EIBEL

The United States has long prided itself on the assumption that its system of government is the most expedient. Consitutional experts have spent long hours and thousands of words comparing the American system with the British and Canadian Parliamentary systems, claiming that the former is a superior system of governing and separating governmental powers.

Being a Canadian, it is obvious to me that in America's most severe crisis to date-the Watergate Affair and its aftermath-if the Americans had established the British system of government, much of the rumours and vindictiveness that is everywhere might be quickly expelled.

The British system of parliamentary government makes the prime minister, the leader of the country, much more receptive to the needs of the country. The prime minister must run for a seat in the parliament unlike the American President who is kept outside the direct sphere of representation.

Whenever the government loses the confidence of the people, even if it has a majority in parliament, it must out of a sense of dutiful representation call an election, to retain the confidence of the people. Because the government of the United States can remain in office for four years and cannot be removed, suspicion and rumour can act to undermine the strength of the ruling party and the President.

In Canada, if a Watergate had occured, the prime minister would have been forced a long time ago to call an election and attempt to clear his good name and that of his party. This is something that constitutional experts should realize: the parliamentary system would have resolved the Watergte issues long ago.

Men And Women Can Co-exist As Equals

To The Editor:

Timothy P. Walbridge seems to have an extremely confused perception of the aims and practices of women's liberation. In Tuesday's Collegian, he expressed some sentiments which demand response.

Firstly, by viewing women's liberation solely in terms of the phallus and its castration, he reaffirms man's age-old fears of woman as sexually-oriented destroyer. In many early societies, men and women were segregated because of men's fears of women's "toothed vaginas" and other dangerous aspects of their sexuality. One would have thought that we are intellectually beyond this stage, but apparently we are not, according to Mr. Walbridge, who characterizes women as "trying to leave us with nothing," which very nicely sums up his fear of castration.

The vast majority of feminists are not trying to take away men's self-respect, but are attempting to teach their sisters to develop some of the respect for themselves which has so long been denied them. Feminists are not asking you to grovel before them for a "date or piece," Mr. Walbridge; this is your projection of your own past behavior onto a situation which actually aims to do just the opposite, to free women (and men) from these debasing, role-defined games which have caused women (and men, too) to lose respect for themselves.

Secondly, as for the "nit-picking" about such innocuous things as upbringing, job opportunities, and discrimination: these are not randomly-selected issues with which women frivolously delight in harassing you. They are the very elements of our society which have made women feel like cheap commodities, rather than people worthy of dignity.

Apparently without realizing it, Mr. Walbridge made one admirable statement when he said, sarcastically, I take it, "Put them on the same plane. They say something you don't like...react like you would towards a man." That's it exactly! Women should not be treated like shallow, fragile, catered-to creatures; talk to them, react to them as people, not as genders.

Until more people, both men and women, stop reacting emtionally to women's liberation and begin to understand intellectually its true, positive implications for all people, we shall probably continue to hear such statements as, "You don't need them. They need you." Mr. Walbridge, we both need each other, but it is a need based on sharing, respect, and equality, not on fear and stereotype. Men and women can indeed co-exist as equals, but not until people like yourself cease viewing feminists as women endowed with the same supremacist types of attitudes you hold, and realize that what they are demanding is the respect which is long overdue themselves and all women.

We Can All Work Together

To The Editor:

In response to "Respect Yourself, Man!", I was undecided whether 1) you were obsessed with fantasies and paranoia that may have resulted from experiences no less infuriating and dehumanizing than that which women are subjected; or that you failed to realize the extent to which males are equally responsible for perpetrating and nurturing the rituals of games of courtship, dating, or getting a "piece", 3)or even worse that you are another victim of separationists ideology not realizing the revolutionary core of the real Feminists Movement and its similarity to other liberation movements.

From your tone it is clear that you've crystalized and catagorized the experience of being "fucked-over" (confusion, alienation, exploitation, subjugation, powerlessness) but, have stopped at this primary level by focusing on women as being the cause of your problems and frustrations.

My own personal feminist perspective did at one time focus on men as being "them", however it didn't take long to realize that men were only instruments of the exploitive, dehumanizing nature of our society under an inherently exploitive system. In order to dilute and defuse aggression it is a system survival mechanism to play groups of people off against each other. It is necessary that you visualize the context of Men's and Women's antipathy rather than striking out at the nearest "them" you meet.

Finally, I would like to say that all liberation movements must go through similar stages of development. Because of this I recognize the need for various struggles to be independent but, emphasize the importance of - having all movements united as a common goal. Although the Women's Movement has been struggling for decades, it is only recently that it has blossomed to any large scale. Like any movement each individual has her own painful and unmarked path of growth and sophistication that must be tread. What struggle do you know of that was not plagued by confusion, inconsistency, and attack? Get your head together Brother and we can all work together.

Cynthia M. Jacques

Confidence And Respect

To The Editor:

Re: Timothy Walbridge's letter of Oct. 2

Just where do you get off? First I get shit from Jill Johnston and her shit sexism, and now your crap. What give sweetie, did some sweet young thing, a mere female hurt your big male ego? My heart bleeds for you - drip, drip, drip. When the hell are you and your probably large following of ignominious dolts going to think of women as women instead of negative men. Why do you think women are ballbusting - chicks learn from age 4 the only way to get any friggin' attention seems to be to flirt, act coy, and put on a whole masquerade. It's your own damn fault. When you put up this great "superior" wall, naturally any women wants to knock it down. Who the hell wants to be lorded over? I'll be damned if feudalism comes back in vogue.

Hey misogynist, are you afraid of us, can't take the competition, but then I should have compassion and understanding, after all insecure paranoids such as yourself need ego-boosters and to feel pseudo-superiority even if it means standing on top of us to hold us down. God forbid we should show some skill or brains - that'd be too much for you to handle, you'd have to relate equally on a one to one relationship level.

You've got your respect definition all twisted, my good man. If you respect yourself, you have confidence (not conceit; enough, to be able to give of yourself and receive in that one to one confrontation. Confident people, people who truly respect themselves need no false fronts; they have no need for any great sense of superiority over others. They find true strength within themselves.

Compassion, understanding - shit, you don't even warrant pity. What you need is a good kick in the ass.

On the other hand, picture a trip to the barber and a sudden change in hair length (Christ, I can see my ears!) Confidence evaporated and charm disappears. The suave goes, and the cool turns cold. As for the girl at the Commons, well, if we stick our nose in the mashed potatoes, maybe she won't notice. The ego can't cope with the radical change.

And the villain is the barber, showing no mercy as curls fall to the steady rhythm of "click, click". Mirrors abound, and we are forced to witness our own destruction. This helplessness has bred the old American custom of blaming the barber (That bastard! Look at this! Its uneven! Too short on this side! Uneven all over!). On the whole, barbers are sadists.

Some people avoid the haircut dilemna entirely. One girl I know hadn't been to the barber in years. As a matter of fact, she had this notion that if she cut her hair, it wouldn't grow back. My roommate cuts his own hair, propping up a mirror, and snipping the loose ends with a pair of scissors. Not for me. The last time I tried cutting my own hair, one of the results was bleeding ear. I also had to wear a hat for two months.

But for those who go by the system, there is some solace. After one week, the memory of the ordeal fades, and after two weeks, the stuff starts growing back. And the circle goes ever onward.

Where You Belong

To The Editor:

In response to the letter written by Timothy P. Walbridge and printed in Tuesday MDC, I would like to say that I find it hard to believe there are still such blatant sexists around today especially on a university campus.

"Get back on top where you belong". Come off it Timothy. Just who says you belong there?

You make a valid point in that some women do hide behind the term Women's Lib to get what they want, but this is not the true goal of Women's Lib. Speaking from personal experience, most of the gripes you have are those which must be resolved on an individual level. If a guy is taking a girl out and she is letting him pay for everything, you have to ask why. Does he have access to more funds than she does? If the situation were reversed, would she pay? If this is not the case hopefully they can communicate enough to arrive at a solution they can both accept.

I have made it a point to "hold up my end of a relationship," whether by paying for my share or even picking up the whole tab, for quite sometime because it's a friend that I want - someone to share good times with - not a free ride. And if there are still some women around who "take advantage" lets hope they get it together soon. Meanwhile, maybe you should start looking for a woman who believes in Men's Lib as well as Women's Lib. We need each other and who dominates (if you think that is really important to determine) depends on each individual relationship.

The point is, Timothy, there are a great many ways in which men and women can exist as equals and find it very gratifying. It just takes time and openmindedness on both our parts to find them.

Cyclists: Ride On The Right Side

To The Editor:

Not more than ten minutes ago, while riding my bike, I narrowly escaped colliding with one of my fellow cyclists on campus. The cause was simple; she pulled out of a side street onto the wrong side of the street directly into my path. Ever since I was in grammar school, I can remember being told by my parents, my teachers, policemen and other various people to ride my bicycle on the right side of the street. Even more recently, with the coming of the "bike boom", articles have periodically appeared in local newspapers urging cyclists to ride on the right side of the street, with the traffic. Surely with all this information floating around, everyone has heard it at least once (probably many more times). Why then would anyone be riding on the left side of the street? Here are a few possible reasons:

1) We are constantly urged to walk on the left side of the street. Maybe there are some among us who can't tell the difference between walking and riding a bike. If this is so then I suggest they save everyone some trouble and walk.

2) Or perhaps there are some illustrious college students who still don't know the difference between left and right. I have a bit of advice for them; ride on the side that the cars are driving on (cars drive on the right side of the streeet).

3) Or most likely, some people who ride bicycles are just plain inconsiderate of their fellow cyclists and motorists. I would never dream of driving a car on the left side of the street, likewise I wouldn't ride my bike on the left side either.

But apparently there are those who don't care that you are supposed to ride bikes on the right side of the street, and don't care that when they do, it makes driving more difficult for cars, and riding more difficult for bicycles, and probably don't even care that they could get themselves killed doing it. If this is the case, then nothing I or anyone else can say will make them stop. But with the hope of reaching maybe one or two people, I will end with this plea: PLEASE, for the sake of the other people on the road and yourself, ride on the RIGHT side of the street. Let's act a little like the responsible adults we are supposed to be becoming.

I Want To Beat On Marty Kelley

To The Editor:

Marty Kelley talked about a stiff hit of Jamaican In Tuesday's contribution to his omnibus of ignorance. His reference to Jamaican dope was something I can't take issue with because Marty Kelley is the biggest dope to hit UMass sports journalism since Metawampe kicked a sow bladder between two birch trees near where the Student Union is now.

When I think of stiff hits and Jamaica I think of George Foreman stiff hitting Joe Frazier in Kingston last spring, and the more my mind wanders to those clouts the more I can feel myself laying a few on that hollow head, the Kelleydome. (Replete with as much living matter as astroturf.)

Kelley says that three little black dulprits took a ball from the UMass manager and brought it back to a Cambridge ghetto. To me that makes Kelley a racist motherfucker. His mind, too insist on ego satisfaction, never paused to think if Earl Brown or Johnny Jones was a Black culprit from some Elmira or New Britain ghetto. The only ghetto Kelley is familiar with is the one of stupidity that exists in his mind.

There is an old and cruel axiom about people who are chronic idiots...they were born that way. This is not Kelley's case. His case is simply that he has been running his mouth so continously that a new world was born and he was too busy talking to see the conception.

I would like to shut Marty Kelley up. And I would like to make a contribution to the future of quality sports journalism, hopefully so it never hits the bottom of the barrell as writers like Kelley would let it.

I want to beat on Marty Kelley, and if he can do sports like he thinks he can write them he will accept my challenge to box six rounds at the half-time of UMass' basketball opener with Harvard in December. And if the spectators like what they see maybe they'll donate some money to a scholarship for journalism majors who plan to be sports writers, that I would like to organize before I leave this place.

Entertainment Value

To The Editor:

According to a recent editorial Bobby Riggs is a demon who oppresses humanity, among other things. The writer also said that Riggs was making fun of serious athletes by not being a serious athlete.

Is it possible Margie Combs is out to make fun of serious editorialists? It seems she hasn't done her homework, so the following information maysurprise her. Bobby Riggs was not born into a well to do family and had to work, as a serious athlete, to become among the best tennis players of his time. Also Bobby Riggs was serious enough as a late starting golfer to become a good hustler at it.

Bobby Riggs realizes one important thing about public sports events: Sports events are only worth their entertainment value. His match with Court was good entertainment, but his match with King was great. From his prematch mouthing he developed tremendous interest in what could only be at best a mediocre match. He was fantastic. After the match he showed very good sportsmanship which proved that he really believed what he had said after his match with Court: "In my life the most important thing is to play tennis and win, but above all to play tennis." Riggs is a supersalesman who realizes the value of his product as entertainment.

His intentions may have been to sell the sport and while he could he picked up some money (I don't see anything evil about that!). Riggs' love affair with tennis is not just due to his ability to make money at the sport. Riggs is one of the best senior (45 and older) tennis players in the country (he is not the best). To get ranked as a senior you must play senior tournaments for which the participants rarely, if ever, get paid. They must pay entry fees.

Is it possible that Margie Combs is not really making fun of serious editorialists, but rather using editorials to incite interest?

Support Unity Slate, Fight Racism

To The Editor:

The Young Workers Liberation League urges students to support the "Unity Slate" for Student Senate. We recognize this as a positive step in the direction of building student unity and a true representation of students real interests in the Senate.

Traditionally, the Student Senate has failed to vigorously deal with the important issues which affect the students on this campus. Hopefully, the presence of theUnity Slate in The Student Senate will represent a change in that pattern of performance, and will force the Student Government to assert itself more in the student interest.

Particularly we would point out for support, the positions against racism and for affirmative action on the Unity Slate's platform. We see that with the inclusion of these proposals on the slate's platform, there will be another voice in the Senate, other than the representatives from New Africa House, which seems willing to stand up against the racism which permeates this campus.

We urge that the candidates onthe slate take this seriously, especially those who are finally elected. Recently there have been not only organized attacks on affirmative action and CCEBS, but there has also been an increase in personal expressions of racism on the part of white students. We feel that the future of real unity on this campus depends partly on whether the Unity Slate senators realize the importance of the struggle against racism.

Paul Mishler, Y.W.L.L.

Narrowminded

To The Editor:

God knows we must maintain our senses of humor on this campus. And certainly, in order to have a sense of humor, one must be able to laugh at oneself. So we can understand the caricature in Monday's Collegian and accept the joke.

However, the dim view of University women that was portrayed in Sue Roy's cartoon seems to us to be unjustifiable at best-and narrowminded as all hell, at worst.

Hopefully, the campus community does not view women in sororities or any other women on campus as the mindless dupes of makeup manufacturers. We can speak for ourselves in this light; and that in our opinion, Sue Roy's conception of sorority women has "gone moldy".

Old Craft Revived In Maine Shaker Village

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

NEW GLOUCESTER, Maine (AP)-In an abandoned Grange Hall surrounded by the Maine woods and hay fields, Thomas Moser is reviving a craft the Shakers brought to flower over a century ago.

By the time the morning sun rounds the horizon, Moser is bending over his workbench, shaping a rough plank of native pine into a delicate Shaker-style rocker, table or pegboard. He is a master craftsman of the graceful, plain style of furniture that represented the Shakers' golden age of design from the 1820s to Reconstruction.

"My commitment to what the Shakers did has nothing to do with their religion or celibate ways of life," said the former college professor. "I'm interested in the clean lines of their furniture fron an architectural standpoint."

The renewed interest in Shaker-made furniture, now prized as collector's items, and proximity to one of the last two thriving Shaker communities in America also influenced Moser to choose that style.

The Maine Shaker village is just a few miles from Moser's farm in the rolling hills of southern Androscoggin County. Many of the tourists who visit the Sabbathday Lake settlement find their way to Moser's showroom and often purchase richly stained pieces that range in price from $80 to $2,000.

It was two years ago that Moser-tall, gaunt, curly-haired and square-jawed-decided on a turnabout professionally.

He taught speech education at Bates College in nearby Lewiston, was a Universalist preacher, hosted a local current issues television program and had financial security.

He gave up all that to make a try at cabinetmaking-a chancey step to take at 38 with a wife and four young sons to support and a 200-acre farm to maintain.

"The insecurities of the middle-class man swayed me to make changes in my life," he said during an interview in his 1782 home.

"I had in my mind that I had a good thing going," Moser said. "I was a professor with 15 years experience, was called doctor, wore a white shirt and had a very comfortable and prestigious life.

"But then came my identity crisis. For the first time, I knew how I would end if I continued being a teacher, and I wasn't ready to accept that.

"I enjoyed the intellectual sparring with students, but other than that, there was no growth for me. I decided to give up the world of ideas for the world of things.

"Women's liberation was also seeping in the woodwork at my wife, Mary. She was getting restless and wanted to make some changes too."

Instead of going their seperate ways, the Mosers decided to take a chance on his skill with wood and her creativity with a small operating budget and advertising.

S.E. Asia Faith To Be Discussed

"Revolutionary Faiths-Christianity and Marxism in Southeast Asia" will be the topic for a lecture tomorrow at noon in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Speaker will be Leighton Wiant, who with his wife Dorothy has been a United Methodist missions person in Sarawak, Malaysia since 1958. Prior to that time Wiant was an agricultural missions person in the Phillippines.

The program will be convened at 12:15 and adjourn in time for 1:25 classes. Members of the university community are invited to bring a bag lunch with them.

At 4 p.m. Wiant will be showing slides of his missions experiences in Malaysia in Campus Center 911-15.

Students or other persons interested in information about missions experiences with any of the major Protestant denominations are invited to schedule afternoon appointments with Mr. Wiant. Appointments may be made by phoning the United Christian Foundation, 545-2661 or 545-2789, or coming to 319 Hampshire House.

for people who walk on this earth...
If you've walked barefoot on sand or soil you know how great it is. Your heels sink low and your feet embrace the earth. Then you put on your shoes, return to the city, and become another concrete fighter . . . but the concrete always wins. You yearn for the earth that lies buried beneath the city.
The Earth Shoe is the first shoe in history with the heel lower than the sole . . . this helps return you to nature though you are forced to live in a cement-coated world. The Earth Shoe's patented design gently guides you to a more erect and graceful walk, and reduces fatigue and the aches and pains caused by our hard-surfaced city.
For men and women in shoes, sandals and sabots.

Vatican City, Sept. 26 (AP - Pope Paul VI opens his arms in symbolic embrace from his portable throne as he enters the general audience assembly hall here today, between waving hands of a cheering crowd. Today's general audience was particularly significant, the Pontiff celebrating his 76th birthday.

Dental Experiment Performed On Baboons

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP)-Two dozen African baboons will have their front teeth removed and false ones implanted in an experiment aimed at cutting dental costs for humans. University of Florida College of Dentistry researchers say that if the tests are successful they could mark the end of costly crowns and bridges to replace lost teeth. The false teeth will be made from Chrome cobalt alloy, acrylic plastic and a new bioglass ceramic material developed by the university's College of Engineering.

"The baboons will receive all the care and attention during the operation that a human would have during oral surgery," a spokesman for the college said yesterday. "They will have four front teeth removed and replaced with implants made from synthetic materials."

The false teeth will be made from chrome cobalt alloy, acrylic plastic and a new bioglass ceramic material developed by the university's College of Engineering.

Dr. Larry Hench, head of the ceramic engineering division, says recent tests conducted on monkeys using the bioglass-ceramic material to replace bone, showed it to be sufficiently strong and incorporated into bone by a natural growth process to make a long-lasting replacement.

The teeth will be put in splints. The baboons, all females, will be kept in individual cages until their gums have healed.

Dr. Harold R. Stanley, professor and chairman of the College of Dentistry's Department of Oral Medicine, said baboons were chosen because their teeth closely resemble those of man.

"We selected female baboons because experience has shown that females are easier to work with and not as vicious as males of the same species," he added.

Stanley said that once the animals' gums have healed the baboons would be housed in large, open cages for about two years where they would be closely observed.

Six baboons are already installed in the university's primate center and another 18 are undergoing quarantine procedures. A spokesman said the animals were purchased from importing firms and experiments would start in about two months when all 24 had undergone preliminary tests.

The researchers said that previous experiments in implanting single artificial teeth have met with inconsistent, inconclusive and often temporary results.

The program is one of three new studies on tooth implants, contracted by the national Institutes of Dental Research. Researchers at Clemson University are implanting teeth in dogs and a team at Harvard University is fashioning teeth in a variety of shapes to see if new forms of tooth architecture may provide a more permanent implant.

Canadian Citizen To Answer Draft Charge

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP)-Gavin Naeve, 23, a naturalized Canadian citizen, entered a plea of innocent yesterday to a six-year-old U.S. charge that he failed to register for the draft.

Naeve and his family moved from the Brattleboro, Vt., area to a farm in North Hatley, Que., in 1967, when the young man was 10 days away from his 18th birthday and Selective Service registration.

He was indicted by a federal grand jury in Vermont in 1967, on the draft evasion charge.

Naeve, who became a Canadian citizen in 1971, was arrested by the FBI 10 days ago in New York City during a stopover between airline flights.

His family said they did not learn of the arrest until a sister received the young man's personal belongings from New York's West Street jail.

They also said they did not learn he was lodged in the Chittenden County Correctional Center in Burlington, Vt., until Monday, despite efforts by three attorneys to locate him.

The director of the American Civil Liberties Union in Vermont, David Harrison, said the organization was looking into the matter to determine if Naeve's civil rights have been violated in any way.

WMUA Presents...

WMUA will broadcast the second in a series of Gay radio programs this evening from 8:00-9:00 p.m. These programs are from Boston, via tape from a Gay radio show, "Gay Way". In three weeks the Student Homophile league in conjunction with WMUA, will originate its own programs from the University.

We hope to have many programs dealing with many aspects of Gay Life. Please remember that this show is from Boston, not UMass., and the telephone number you will hear will be that of WBUR, Boston, not WMUA, Amherst. If you have any questions during the program, feel free to call the Student Homophile League office, 545-0154, as the Gay Line will be open until 10 p.m.

Children Drown In Pool

BOSTON (AP)-After a five-hour search by police and neighbors, the bodies of two missing brothers were found in a West Roxbury apartment complex swimming pool near their home.

Shawn Beckwith, 2, and his brother Shayne, 3, apparently drowned in four feet of murky rainwater that had accumulated in the pool, police said.

The area was surrounded by a four-foot high, locked chain link fence. Police said it is not known how the toddlers got into the pool area.

Newspaper Letter Admits To Bombing

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A letter to a newspaper, purportedly from a group of radicals, pleads guilty to the bombing Friday of the International Telephone and Telegraph Building in New York City as an act "in support of the people of Chile."

Another letter also to the San Francisco Chronicle over the weekend made a cryptic reference to the bombing of the old federal building here Friday, but made no claim for the responsibility for that explosion. Both letters were revealed yesterday.

The letter on the ITT bombing was postmarked in New York and was signed by the "Weather Underground," supposedly a successor group to the Students for a Democratic Society faction known as the Weatherman.

The letter said the bombing was staged "to add our voice to the international expression of outrage and anger at the involvement of ITT and the U.S. government in the overthrow of socialist Chile."

It also says the U.S. used economic measures to weaken the Allende government.

The letter even included a Madison Avenue return address in New York City. The Chronicle said the building is occupied by advertising agencies.

The letter on the local bombing was from Berkeley. At the top of the one-page missive was stamped "Bomb Old SF Federal Bldg 9-28."

But the letter itself made no reference to the bombing.

Parking Workers To Meet

Groups of workers and students who've been involved with the parking issue on campus since the start of school are holding meetings in all of the different residential areas and in the student union for commuters. The purpose of the meetings is to discuss the meaning of the protest, and to answer any questions that students have. We feel this is a very important issue, and one that will come into the everyday sphere of students starting Oct. 9th. when the new parking plan is supposed to go into effect. Take note of when the meeting is taking place in your area, and attend.

Oct. 3rd. Wednesday 10:00 p.m. a. Orchard Hill-Dickinson Lounge; b. Sylvan Area-Brown House Lounge.

Oct. 4th Thursday 2:30 p.m. Commuters: student union Colonial Lounge.

Oct. 4th Thursday 10:00 p.m. a. Central Area-Brett House Lounge; b. Northeast Area-Thatcher House study room basement.

Oct. 9th Tuesday 10:00 p.m. Southwest Area-McKimmie House; Main lojnge-classroom no.1.

Elks Accept Minority Groups

CHICAGO (AP) - Members of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks have voted by a 4-1 majority to permit blacks and other minority groups to join the organization.

Robert A. Yothers of Seattle, grand exalted ruler of the nation's largest fraternal order, said yesterday that ratification means the word "white" will be deleted from the Elks' constitution and statutes as a condition for membership.

The vote, tabulated at the Elks national headquarters here, ratified a change approved by a 3-1 majority at the national convention in Chicago in July.

The vote was 1,184,675 in favor of the change and 309,276 against.

"Now that this issue has been resolved," Yothers said in a statement, "the Order of Elks can get back to concentrating its efforts on the many benevolent and charitable works for which it has been famous for more than 105 years."

There are 2,182 Elks lodges with membership totaling more than 1½ million.

Activist To Speak

Don Luce, veteran anti-war activist and director of the Indo-China Resource Center will speak tonight at 7:30 p.m., Gambell Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College. Bicycle Club Meets

The Bicycle Club meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in Campus Center Rooms 805-809 will have a slide show of last year's Cape Cod trip and a Martha's Vineyard Tour in addition to final planning for the Martha's Vineyard tour this weekend. As usual, discussion of touring and racing, and further planning for the workshops will be held. Those planning on going on the Oct. 14 Montague Plains day tour can get more information at this meeting.

Symbolic Speech Upheld In Colorado

By CARL HILLIARD
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP)-A Boulder youth who was arrested for wearing a portion of the American flag sewn to the seat of his blue jeans was expressing an opinion by symbolic speech, the Colorado Supreme Court ruled Monday.

It declared unconstitutional the state statute under which he was arrested.

The opinion, written by Justice Donald E. Kelley was unanimous.

The youth, David Patten Vaughan, was arrested under a state statute adopted by the legislature several years ago. In information filed by the district attorney, it was charged that Vaughan "did unlawfully by his acts mutilate, deface and defile a flag of the United States of America with intent to cast contempt thereupon."

In a trial before Boulder County District Judge Rex H. Scott, the court found that Vaughan was not making any speeches and spoke no "significant" words.

The sole reason for the arrest was the conduct of the defendant, the high court pointed out.

State Subsidizing Horsebreeding

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-Not many people seem to know it, but Massachusetts is subsidizing horsebreeding.

The state spent more than $78,000 in the last fiscal year on its two programs to "improve the breed." A spokesman says the state Department of Agriculture hopes to pay out $125,000 in the current fiscal year. Horsemen and state officials defend the subsidies, grown from almost nothing three years ago, as essential to protect the $33 million the state takes in each year from racing taxes.

"Without Massachusetts horses, we couldn't have had a winter meeting at Suffolk Downs," says Tommy Moran, an enthusiastic horseman now in charge of thoroughbred subsidies.

John Kirby of Weston, who got more money in thoroughbred subsidies than anybody else last year, thinks the state doesn't do enough.

Kirby is disturbed that more people don't know about the state's bounty, even though it has received extensive coverage in the trade and sporting press.

Subsidies are paid in two ways. Owners of standard-breds-harness racers-receive theirs from the track; owners of thoroughbreds receive theirs from the state.

The owner of a Massachusetts-bred horse gets from the state 20 per cent of the purse his horse wins in a parimutuel race. The owner of the stallion that sired fathered the winner gets 1 per cent, and bills now before the legislature would make this 5 per cent.

Kirby, who races 10 horses three times a month, says the subsidies have made a difference in his operation.

Paul Robeson Lecture Series To Begin Today

The Paul Robeson Series will begin today in Mahar Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. The lecture will be presented by Mr. Lamont Yeakey, Assistant Professor of History at City College, New York, and the topic will be "Paul Robeson and the Student Movement". Professor Yeakey is a Senior Research Scholar at the Black Economic Research Center in Harlem, New York, and he will be presenting a paper this month on the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History which was founded by Dr. Carter Woodson.

Professor Yeakey's lecture will be the first of the Paul Robeson Lecture Series, which will extend from October, 1973 to April, 1974. This series will afford the University community an opportunity to come in touch with the life and work of one of the most important creative personalities in the twentieth century.

The public is invited.

Rock Climbing Workshop

The UMass Outing Club will be holding an open Rock Climbing Workshop tonight at 7:00 in C.C., room 105. All persons interested in the more technical aspects of climbing and lead climbing are encouraged to attend. This is the second in the series of rock climbing techniques dealing with knot tying and equipment checks.

Philosophy Club Meets Tonight

There will be an informal organizational meeting of the Philosophy Club at 7:00 tonight in the basement lounge of Greenough House in Central Area. This year the club seeks to turn itself into some sort of effective organ for promoting free interchange between faculty, graduate students and undergrads in philosophy, as well as the University at large.

It is the belief of the club that two heads are better than one, and two hundred are better than two, so all interested heads are urged to attend. However, this first meeting is regretfully restricted to undergraduates in an attempt to prepare for the rest of the world. The subject of discussion will be problems relating to the study of philosophy at this University. Refreshments will be served.

Sexual Freedom Coming Tonight

Dr. Don Read of the Center for Human Sexual Concerns will conduct a workshop of sexual consciousness raising tomorrow evening from 7:30 to 9:30 in rooms 904-908 of the Campus Center.

The session will feature exercises emphasizing freedom of body expression and interpersonal nonverbal communication. Participation by all will be both welcome and encouraged.

The evening is sponsored by the Student Homophile League and everyone is welcome.

People In The News

LONDON (AP)-With 60,000 young rock fans tipped off that the American group called the Osmonds are due Oct. 21, authorities at Heathrow Airport have barred their special jet from landing there.

The reason is fear that the youngsters might riot and be maimed or killed, perhaps by pushing through plate glass at the airport.

The record company organizing the Osmonds' tour, and which gave out details of the arrival time, disagreed with having to bring the group in at an out-of-the-way airport. "By giving out the correct details you avoid youngsters hanging around airports for a week," said a company spokesman.

NEW YORK (AP)-Jacqueling Kennedy Onassis says free-lance photographer Ron Galella is crowding her again and she wants federal judges to make him keep further back.

The widow of President John F. Kennedy won a ruling in U.S. District Court in 1972 barring Galella from coming within 150 feet of her or her children. But last month the Court of Appeals trimmed the zone to 25 feet.

Asking for restoration of the 150-foot ban, Mrs. Onassis' lawyers referred to an incident in June in which actor Marlon Brando is alleged to have slugged Galella for picture-taking.

"It would be tragic if the only effective way to deal with Galella is the Brando formula, rather than resort to the judicial process," the lawyers said.

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon treated a group of tourists from his home town of Whittier, Calif., like visiting royalty Tuesday.

When he heard that 45 senior citizens from his native town were in the White House as part of a five-week bus tour, President Nixon asked them into the Oval Office. After reminiscing a while, the President invited them to have coffee with Mrs. Nixon in the Yellow Oval Room, where important guests relax before state dinners.

"Coming from Whittier, you all are going to be kings and queens," Nixon said

Judaic Studies Offers Courses

Nine courses, five of them for credit, are being offered starting next Tuesday in conjunction with the Department of Judaic Studies. Among those teaching these courses will be the newly appointed director of Hillel on this campus, Rabbi Aryeh Meir. Rabbi Meir will be joined by Rabbi Edelman and Rabbi Yechezkel Lebovic both of Springfield, and area philosopher Bob Zelman.

Any student interested in signing up for one of the five courses to be given for credit is asked to obtain an add sheet at the Whitmore Administration Building and register under JUDAIC STUDIES 385 by this Friday. After going to Whitmore, students should go to the Hillel office, room 302 in the Student Union building. The first class will begin next Tuesday October 9th, and will be held at the offices of Hillel.

There is a wide range of courses all the way from baking challah and making a yarmulke and tips for prospective travelers to Israel, to studying the ecstasy and discipline of the inner world of Hassidism.

The five courses for one credit each include: Ecstasy and Discipline, Monday 6:30 to 7:30; Introduction to Jewish Mysticism, Wednesday 6:30; "In the Beginning," Tuesday 6:30; Towards a Personal Theology, Thursday 6:30; and Philosophy of Martin Buber, Tuesday 7:30.

The other courses include: Jewish Women's Forum, Thursday at 8:30; Intro to Jewish Life, Wednesday at 7:30; "So you're going to Israel..." and Jewish Arts and Crafts. Thursday at 7:30.

Rabbi Aryeh Meir, the director of Hillel says that the purpose of the courses is "to fill the vacuum presently occupying Jewish heads, hearts, and souls."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES(March 21-April 19): This is not time for definite commitment. There are blocks, obstacles and jealous associates. Legal matters need clarification. Mate, partner is involved. See clearly--take stock. Aspirations are subject to change.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Travel plans might be affected by work assignment or medical appointment. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Study Aries message. Older individual may be intransigent. Be patient but know when to draw line.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You finish, reach more persons and deal directly with Aries, Libra persons. Money question is at "crunch" stage. You are due to get financial facts. If willing to perceive potential, news is good. Otherwise, you repeat lesson.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lie low. Finish task which resulted from past commitment. Practical issues dominate, including possible back tax situation. Leo, Aquarius persons are in picture. Be aware of legal-financial aspects.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Advice received from relatives could be less than sound. There are disagreements and tendency is to draw you into whirl of confusion. Be true to your own ideals. Refuse to be a bouncing ball for discontented persons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Experiment. Be yourself and have fun. One who advocates otherwise may be ill, jealous or a combination of both. Emotional setback ultimately proves for your own good. Know it and refuse to be discouraged.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Practical approach is now most constructive--substitute direct action for daydreams. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio persons could play important roles. Emphasis is on home, property, decisions from those who pull strings.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You do best now in behind-the-scenes capacity. Key is to find reasons instead of merely accepting what occurs. Be analytical. Your capabilities as a detective come to forefront. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): you may be called upon to make budget decision. Emotions fight to take over from logic. Family situation dominates. Strive for harmony--this comes about if willing to make creative, intelligent concession. Win rather than force your way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Conflict need not be cause for depression. Permit opposition to become challenge. Mate, partner may ask probing questions. See situation in practical light. State case in clear, concise manner. And stop apologizing!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What you do now has long-reaching results. Means weigh words, actions. Perceive potential. Detect subtle nuances. Take nothing for granted. Heed inner voice. Older person, who holds responsible position, wants you to succeed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Some wishes can be fulfilled--but you have to give up some things. Means you get nothing for nothing. Get rid of past if this makes you brood, creates atmosphere of gloom. You have life of your own to live. Know it and let others become aware of it.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you eat too much at times and you give too much and you live to the hilt and you love people and people often take advantage of you. November will be one of your most important months of 1973. Many born under Gemini and Sagittarius are drawn to you. You have delightful sense of humor. You are great when you laugh!

Artman's Medal Play Leads Golfers To 2nd

By MDC STAFF

DANBURY, Conn. -- Joe Artman's three-over par 75 paced the UMass golf team on Monday of this week to the runner-up slot in the Western Connecticut State Open Golf Tournament.

In this medal play tourney, which Salem State won, each team's composite score was taken from the best five of seven rounds. Artman's 75 led the field. He was one-under coming to the 15th which allowed him to survive a disasterous bogie, double-bogie, bogie, par finish.

UMass' team aggregate of 404 was only six off the pace as Jim Duane, Dave Kern, John Lusek and Bill Rubin combined with Artman to play what coach Fan Gaudette termed "extremely good golf on one of the roughest courses in the state."

Artman's round featured a late afternoon bout with nature as it took the power of artificial lighting from automobile headlights to enable him to complete his final hole.

This tournament was the final tune-up for Gaudette's linksters who host the annual ECAC Golf Tournament this Friday at Hickory Ridge Country Club in South Amherst.

"Flying Finn" Nurmi, Olympic Legend, Dies

HELSINKI (AP)-Paavo Nurmi, "The Flying Finn" whose long distance running exploits in the Gold Twenties made him a legend, died here Tuesday at the age of 76.

He was the iron man of his age, winning nine gold medals in the Olympic Games at distances ranging from 1,500 to 10,000 meters and even the cross country, an event no longer on the Olympic program.

He competed in three of the Games-1920, 1924 and 1928-and would have made it to a fourth had he not been disqualified just prior to the 1932 event at Los Angeles on charges of professionalism.

The charge and the ban embittered the Finnish star, who ran professionally for a brief period and then retired to the life of a businessman in his beloved homeland.

However, he remained a national hero. A statue of him was erected in front of the stadium which became the scene of the Olympics in 1952 and he was honored on that occasion by being allowed to light the Olympic flame.

He was equally popular throughout the world, particularly in America where he ran more than 55 races on a cross-country exhibition tour.

"Nurmi was the giant of long distance runners," said Dan Ferris, former executive head of the American Amateur Athletic Union and the man who arranged the Nurmi tour in the United States. "I will never forget the 1924 games. He won the 1,500, 5,000 and the cross country-a phenomenal feat."

Nurmi's secret was a complete dedication to athletics. During his active years he did little but run-tens of kilometers a day, without a smile on his face and with a stopwatch in his hand.

Sanders, Ney Win In Five College Tourney

By MDC STAFF

John Bates of Amherst College, Ronnie Sanders of UMass, and the mixed doubles team of Gary Ney and Ronnie Sanders won their respective events in a five College tennis tournament Saturday.

Bates, the number one singles man from Amherst squeaked out a 7-6, 7-6 decision over schoolmate Jarvis Cartin for the Men's Singles event.

The consistency of Sanders gave her a 6-4, 6-3 victory over teammate Karen Wesley for the women's singles events.

The team of Sanders and Gary Ney wiped out their opponents for an easy 6-1, 6-1 and the mixed doubles title.

OAKLAND (AP)-Manager Dick Williams joked with an Oakland A's clubhouse attendant over something the baseball brass has decided is no laughing matter. Williams explained why Tuesday pulling from his desk a letter written by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn on Sept. 17. It informed him that baseball rule 8.06, limiting the number of trips a manager or coach can make to the mound to consult with a pitcher, would remain in effect for the playoffs and World Series this year.

The rule has been waived for recent post-season competition, including the 1972 World Series-when Williams held more than 50 mound meetings with his pitchers.

Andy Dutkanicz

A Right Foot That Hangs Tough

By RICH SEVIERI

Andy Dutkanicz leaned against a locker, his taped right foot propped on a bench. That right foot is the main reason behind the consistent, and effective kicking game of UMass.

Kicking specialists are a unique breed. Andy joined their ranks as a sophomore at Shelton High, located west of New Haven.

"At Shelton," he explained, "I played linebacker and started punting and place kicking barefoot."

When asked why barefoot, he replied, "Oh just to get some ink and I played soccer that way."

On any given Fall weekday afternoon, Andy can be found on the practice field taking snaps from center Bruce Pinto, then booming 40 or 50 punts high into the Pioneer Valley sky.

The centers delivery of the ball for punting and place kicking is essential. Andy feels that Pinto has done an exceptional job this season.

What happened with that fumbled snap Saturday at Harvard Stadium, Andy?

"That was my fault, it's all up here," he says, pointing to his head. "You see three guys waiting to rush a hole and you lose your concentration." Apart from this one miscue, Andy's been doing some heavy concentrating this season.

Against Villanova he kept UMass close in the first half and pinned the Wildcats back to the wall in the second half.

On that day he averaged nearly 45 yards for eight punts, rocketing one for 65 yards, plus reaching the end zone on most of his kickoffs.

It isn't often that a kicking specialist is singled out by his coaches and teammates as one of the stars of the game. Dutkanicz considers this game the most rewarding and self-satisfying of his career.

"You see three guys waiting to rush a hole and you lose your concentration. . . ."

Becoming and feeling a part of the team is a tough task for a kicking specialist. He participates in few tackles, throws fewer blocks, and most of practice is spent seperate from the team.

"Its hard to feel part of the team," Andy points out, "You're on your own most of the time, If I fumble the snap, as in the Harvard game, it's all my fault. If I catch one right, or kick a field goal I'm a hero."

Dutkanicz sees the kicker as an integral part of the game. He mentions the pros, where the trend is toward conservative field goal offenses, and the importation of foreign born kicking specialists.

As a punter he strives for the 40 plus average, and the four second flight the coaches feel is necessary for adequate coverage.

His field goal attempts have been limited to a few out-of-range cannon shots last season and this years Holy Cross game.

The field goal attempt that would have won the Holy Cross game, a play coach Mac Pherson admittedly made the wrong decision, caught Andy unawares.

"I was suprised," he explains, "mentally unprepared. To have made it would have been a kickers dream come true, but everything was against me, the wind, the distance."

To senior Dutkanicz the step up to playing for a living is not unrealistic. "I'll play anywhere," he says, "any level," then waves his arm to encompass the locker room, "thats what almost every man here dreams about and works for."

The coaches comment sheet for the Harvard game is taped to the wall outside the UMies locker room. It's broken down into positions and various categories.

Harriers Nipped At Harvard

By SCOTT HAYES

Only an outstanding performance by Rick Rojas of Harvard and UMass' failure to close the gap between the number four and five spots on the team, prevented the Minutemen from defeating powerful Harvard for the first time in twenty years.

UMass split with Harvard and Providence in yesterdays tri-meet defeating the Friars 24-34 and bowing to Harvard 30-27. The harriers now are 2-1 on the season.

Rojas captured first in the three way meet and Tom Smith of Providence finished second. Bill Gillin was the top UMass finisher with a time of 26:37. In winning individual honors, Rojas also lowered his own course record by ten seconds, to 26:12. Freshman Mike O'Shea placed fourth for Providence.

Once again, Thomas Gillin, and Maguire ran in a pack. After two and one half miles, they held the second through fourth positions with Paul Segersten in twelfth. Then, Smith and O'Shea moved up on the UMass threesome, and Thomas, Gillin and Maguire were in fourth through sixth. Meanwhile, Segersten moved up, up to eleventh. At the four mile mark, UMass led Harvard by the score of 28-29.

Rojas took the lead early in the meet and never gave it up, even though Thomas, Gillin and Maguire were not far behind during the first three miles.

Gillin placed third and Randy Thomas ran a 26:54, good for fifth place. Tom Maguire and Paul Segersten, who came on strong towards the end of the race, finished eight and ninth respectively with times of 27:19 and 27:23. Phil Broughton was the fifth UMass runner to cross the finish line, with a time of 27:58.

The final outcome of the meet depended on the finishes of the fifth, sixth and seventh runners of Harvard and UMass. After the top four runners from both teams had completed the course, the score was knotted 18-18 and the Minutemen seemed to be in a good position to win the meet. Harvard, however captured the next four out of five places to insure victory.

The Crimson also swept the Junior Varsity meet. Harvard downed UMass 23-33, but the Minutemen were able to break even with a 27-29 squeaker over the Friars. John Scheer paced the JV's with a time of 16:19, good for second place. Scheer, a freshman, was last year's Vermont Cross Country champion.

The harriers travel to New York on Saturday to face St. John's and top-seeded Northeastern, who defeated Rhode Island 20-35 yesterday.

OUT IN FRONT-Tom Maguire, Randy Thomas, Paul Segersten, and Bill Gillin ran to a four-way tie for first in Saturday's victory over BC, but fell short in yesterday's split with Harvard and Providence.

He's Not A God

"Peil Pennington stinks!"

Unfortunately, many people on this campus are going around with that opinion of the UMass quarterback and I don't think it's a fair statement.

One reporter on our staff wanted to write a column in support of that statement. I said "alright", but I told him he'd have to go down and get the story from Peil himself. Too often a fan or a writer is satisfied to judge what is wrong on the field from his distant seat up in the stands.

Last year, Peil's fame spread all the way up into Montreal, where this aforementioned reporter lives. There, Pennington was a god, he said. Peil was a celebrity when he led an exciting giant-slaying UMass squad over a highly tauted Boston College team. This year, the god has fallen from his Mt. Olympus.

What most people don't realize is that Peil had a whole army of gods playing along side him last year in halfback Paul Metallo; split end Steve Schubert; offensive tackle Clarence Brooks; Dick Cummings, a solid blocking fullback; and cornerback John Healy, to name a few.

Peil Pennington is not a god this year. Sure, he stands a towering 6-5, but height doesn't stop the opposition from barrelling through the sieve of an offensive line and dumping him every other play.

That's one of the most obvious week points in the UMass attack. Offensive linemen are missing blocks and the other players are not covering up for them.

This was the strength of last year's offensive, and of any good offensive line: the players covered up when a teammate missed his man. They all knew each other's moves, they had played together for so long, and they knew immediately when something went wrong so they could help out. But, this year, they are playing as individuals and not as a team. Maybe they are playing with the attitude, "Don't blame me. I got my man so I did my job."

And Peil Pennington's strong arm can't hold the offense together either. Not if nobody can catch it on the other end of his pass.

In the first period of the Harvard game, Peil threw 9 times for 5 completions. Out of the four incomplete passes, three were dropped by the receiver's head to avoid the interception.

Don't think it doesn't affect the quarterback when his ends drop the ball like that. It's the same way when a baseball pitcher throws a perfect game for eight innings only to have the infielders start kicking the ball around for three errors in one inning. Obvious, this has a psychological effect on the pitcher: he has no support from his teammates, so what's the use in working his butt off if no one else is?

And then, when the defense starts to key on his receivers Pennington has to go to his running game. Looking back on the first four games of this season, it doesn't look like there is a heck of alot of support there either.

But this doesn't mean that Pennington hasn't done anything wrong all season. Sure, he gets frustrated out there on the field and his offensive plays at times resemble the first practice of a little league team, but you still can't blame him entirely for that chaos.

The best proof for this is that the front line NFL scouts are still coming to the UMass games. And if they haven't given up on Peil Pennington, I guess he isn't as bad as everyone tells me.

Seaven Won't Start Mets Playoff Opener

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP)-Their heads beginning to clear from the champagne party of the day and night before, the New York Mets awoke Tuesday facing the fact that their most reliable arm may not be as strong as they'd like it to be for baseball's National League playoffs.

That arm belongs to Tom Seaver and ordinarily, he'd be expected to start the NL playoffs Saturday at Cincinnati. But it will probably be Jon Matlack instead, because Seaver is nursing a tender shoulder.

Manager Yogi Berra said he wouldn't decide definitely until Thursday but he is currently leaning towards Matlack, who was 14-16 during the regular season.

"Tom has been bothered with the soreness for about his last four starts," said Berra. "I think we'll go with Matlack in the opener to give Tom an extra day of rest."

The Reds were expected to go with lefthander Don Gullett in the opener, moving their top winner, Jack Billingham, back to the second game.

Seaver has been taking Butazolidin pills to ease the ache in his shoulder. He worked six innings in Monday's clincher at Chicago but was hit hard and needed relief help from Tug McGraw for the victory.

"I guess maybe my arm and shoulder are tired," admitted the ace righthander. "Let's face it, I've pitched about two thousand innings in seven years. It has to take something out of you, especially if you're a power pitcher as I am."

Newwomen Fall To Mt. Holyoke

By NANCY M. THOMPSON

Mt. Holyoke dominated all six singles matches to defeat the UMass Women's Tennis team 6-2 yesterday afternoon at the Boyden Courts. UMass is now 1-1 for the season.

Sophomore Ann Foley, again holding the number one position for UMass, faced one of her toughest opponents of the season, Abbe Wise. Ms. Foley bowed in the first set 6-1 but made a remarkable come-back throughout the entire second set. Showing nice net volley play, she was topped by MHC 7-5. Ronnie Sanders moving up into the number two slot, lost to MHC's hard serving Penny Meiklejohn, 6-3, 6-2, in groeling baseline to baseline play.

Freshman Donna Siscavage, playing third singles, saw some fine competition in Mt. Holyoke's Kathy Emery. Despite the fact that Donna seemed to be playing much better tennis than earlier in the season, she was still out-played by MHC 6-3, 6-4. Caron Tsapatsaris, again attempting to play in the dark, drew to a well played 7-6, 6-7 halt because of darkness, against her opponent Lee Kinney. Carole Mottau, in the number five position lost her first set to MHC's Paula Kusniewski, 6-2 and the second set was called at 2-2 because of a knee injury to Ms. Mottau. Coming to the sixth singles place from her usual doubles spot was Karen Thomas, who lost her match to MHC's Meg Greene 6-4, and 7-6.

In doubles, the number one team of Muffy Trafton and Patty Heslam were defeated 6-2, 6-2 by Mount Holyoke's Nancy Ward and Debbie Weber. The numbers two and three doubles teams did find victory for the UMass team. Galen Good and Meg Parry worked their way through a long 7-5 and followed up in style with a fast 6-1 set against Kim Carpenter and Kathy Bryne. Donna Volpe and Karen Wesley endured three sets with their opponents, Sally Ashton and Andrea Mottai, to come back looking sharp with a 2-6, 6-2, 6-0, victory.

Do Working Students Get The Shaft?

By ERNIE KING

There is a myth of the UMass campus that goes, "Equal pay for equal work." This myth supposedly applies to everyone that works here. The difference in pay scales that exist between student and non-student part-time workers, however, shatters this myth.

On June 1, 1973 a memorandum from Robert A. Garstka, personnel director, to all Deans, Directors, Department Heads, and Principal Investigators, directed their attention to the fact that state employees had recently got a 3.3 per cent cost of living increase and that new rates had been set for non-student part-time workers.

The rates which were attached to the memorandum were in effect, "for all non-student hourly (time card) employees on the campus regardless of the sources of funds from which the employees are paid."

In an interview with Mr. James Coopee, Assistant Personnel Officer, the Collegian was told that this was because non-student workers received no fringe benefits such as holiday pay, sick leave, health insurance etc.

Mr. Coopeeulso told the Collegian that department heads are encouraged to hire students through placement and financial aide, rather than go off campus. This policy was to enable students who were in need of financial aide to get jobs on campus. If there were no students available, then they could go off campus.

The idea of hiring students who are in need of financial aide may seem like a noble one but with the difference in pay scales as exaggerated as it is, between students and non-student part time workers, UMass is turning student labor into scab labor.

The hourly rate based on a Full Time Equivalent of a 37½ hour week for a grade rating of two is $2.75 per hour. Grade two employees are employees who hold positions with little training required. Jobs such as junior clerks, janitors, grounds keepers, and dishwashers, all fall into the category of grade two. A student hired to do these same tasks on a part time basis, will receive $1.85 per hour. There is a difference here of 90 cents. Students do not receive sick pay, paid vacations or Whether they're selling chocolate covered raisins or singapore slings, working students deserve good pay. After all, how would we make it through each week without these life-saving commodities?

UMass Updates Continuing Education

By FRITS GEURTSEN

The Office of Continuing Education is proud to announce the arrival of a new child, University Conference Services. At the same time they regret to disclose the news of the passing of its parents, the continuing Education Conference Office and Campus Program Office.

The reason for the merger to form the brand new Conference Services was explained by Paul Bigelow, its director, in an interview with the Collegian.

"It is neither rational nor practical for two operations to do the same job in the same facility. Our aim is to see that everything is handled as economically and efficiently as possible for both the customer and the University."

To quote from the Bulletin of the Office of Continuing Education: the Conference Services "acts as a link between the academic and service agencies of the University. The Division operates on the belief that education is a lifelong process, and seeks to provide alternative learning formats to the traditional four-year program. The conference with its concentrated information provided in a short time span, is an ideal method of obtaining an education for the individual who has little time to spare for the pursuit of knowledge, but who feels the need to continue his or her education."

According to Bigelow, Conference Services handles all of the arrangements for any group wishing to hold a conference here. "We can provide anything from a simple room to a fully structured conference. However, we allow on campus only those programs which we feel have a definite educational value. This, of course, is rather difficult to determine at times.

Many people, mistakenly think that it is primarily businessmen who avail themselves of this service, but this is far from true, said Bigelow. He read off several upcoming conferences to prove his point. They ranged from a Square Dance organization to a conference on Maternal-Child Nursing to the American Association of University Professors. Bigelow went on to state "Even when we do have businessmen, their conferences don't deal strictly with the business that they're involved in. For instance, quite recently we had a bankers' conference which dealt not with mortgages or interest rates, but rather with sociology and community relations."

The conferences, on the average, last three days, but there are some that extend over several weeks. The amount of people who attend these conferences ranges from twenty to several thousands at a time. When asked what the maximum conference load that his staff could handle at one time was, Bigelow stated that it all depended on the size of the conferences, the amount of bedding available on campus, and the limitations on the size of meeting halls. At present the largest such facility is the Cage, which holds approximately five thousand people.

The Conference staff is comprised of fourteen full-time people, plus a pool of part-time student help. The staff is divided into three sections; the first, Marketing, which includes two people, deals with all sales, booking, and marketing that each conference entails. The second, Co-ordination, with four people, handles the conferences themselves, and the third, Office Support, four people plus the part-time pool, handles registrations and so forth. Mr. Bigelow, with the aid of an executive secretary directs it all.

As far as problems were concerned, Bigelow said, "I suppose our biggest problem-I prefer to look at it as a challenge-is the amount of co-operation that we are getting from the traditional avenues of education here at the University. I would like to see a great increase in this area. After all, it's the non-traditional student who carries the great bulk of expenses incurred by the University. I refer to alumnae, taxpayers, and so forth. The University is here to serve all of the residents of the state of Massachusetts-not only the traditional students."

One area that Bigelow was both pleased with and saw room for expansion was the interaction between the visiting conference people and the students. He said "The amount of interaction, unfortunately, has not been very high, but what there has been has been very well received by the conference people and students alike. I see the cultural events on campus as an excellent opportunity for any future interaction. It should be obvious to everyone that the conference people have a lot to learn from the students, and vice versa. Many of the conferences have also expressed a desire to meet with the faculty in some sort of meaningful exchange."

Bigelow felt that the financial aspects of the Conference Services would be of interest to all. To begin with, the Service is completely self-sustaining and uses neither tax nor student money. Also their extensive utilization of the Campus Center and occasional use of dormitories and dining commons keeps student expenses down in these areas. This was another aspect that Bigelow wanted to see expanded.

He said, "What we in the Conference Services, and indeed Continuing Education as a whole, are trying to accomplish is to maximize the resources that this University has to offer. For instance, the dorms are used only about 180 days out of the year. If we, by using those rooms the rest of the year, can lower living expenses on this campus for students, then I think we've helped everyone."

Concerning the future of Conference Services, Bigelow said, "We definitely have not peaked yet as far as what we can offer is concerned. Right now our business pretty much follows the academic calendar-with peaks in April and October and relative slumps during Christmas, Easter, and semester break. Also our weekly business goes from Sunday night to Friday afternoon. Our growth then must come in the non-peak times. The most promising time seems to be the summer, when there is an unlimited amount of bedspace to be used. However, since sixty percent of our programs are tied directly to various departments here at the University, our hands are tied a bit in the summer when a lot of the faculty is not here."

On The Inside:

- Hitchhiking

Hitching a ride can vary between a joy and a nightmare. Both sides of the story are explored on Page 2.

- Bussing

An alternative to the thumb. The campus bus service has been revamped. The story on Page 2 explains why over 7,000 people a day ride the buses.

The Perils Of Hitching Spoil It For Us All

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Amherst is a nice college town with friendly students and citizens. So why not hitch here?

Because, say campus police, not everyone who picks up hitchhikers has Samaritarian intentions. Besides being dangerous, hitchhiking is illegal and causes traffic hazards.

Michael Sullivan, of the Amherst Board of Selectmen, would like to see an expanded bus system to help eliminate local hitchhikers.

Until that happens, the Selectmen are trying to control the situation by establishing an experimental "pick up station" near Amherst College. The station is aimed at reducing the danger of accidents to the hiker and the driver.

Because hitchhiking is illegal in Massachusetts, the Selectmen have justified their action by using a play on words. They maintain that it is not hitchhiking when people are merely waiting at a pick-up station for rides. Anyone passing is free to pick someone up if he wishes to.

Sullivan said, "We'd rather have the students hitch than bring their cars into town. The traffic congestion downtown is impossible."

He added, "While we don't discourage thumbing, neither do we approve of it. We are trying to cope with it."

Police give hitchhikers tickets only at major intersections downtown to keep them away from such areas. When hikers and cars mix, accidents often result at these busy streets.

Although the campus police have taken a stand against hitchhiking, they realize that students have and will continue to thumb rides. They prefer to warn them about the dangers and consequences involved.

Sargent Robert Joyce of the campus police department issued these suggestions for self-protection:

1. Don't thumb alone.
2. At night, stand under a street light so you can see the person who is picking you up.
3. Don't get into a car where you're outnumbered.
4. Read and memorize the license plate number.
5. Make sure there's a door handle on the passenger's side in case you need to make a quick escape.
6. Don't carry weapons--they can very easily be used against you.

Sargent Joyce also urged students to ride buses, especially when they are not traveling very far. Short-distance hitching is discouraged.

Sgt. Joyce said, "More crimes are committed during short-distance rides than during long-distance hitches."

Most hitchhiking-related crimes have occurred in the five-college area among students hitching to other colleges to take courses.

Exactly how many assaults, thefts, and rapes are committed is not known to police, since most victims do not report them. So far this jelated rapes reported. Although there are no figures available to support his theory, Sgt. Joyce believes that there exists a very real correlation between unplanned rapes and thumbing.

The campus police urge victims of any hitchhiking-related the crimes to report them in. Any descriptions and details can help th police in stopping future crims. A student need not identify himself when he gives information.

To thumb or not to thumb? In interviews with various students on campus, opinion appeared to be divided on the issue. Most who opposed thumbing had experienced bad rides.

"I was down in Florida last March thumbing around with a buddy of mine. We were picked up by two other guys who pointed knives at us, robbed us, and dropped us off in the middle of nowhere," said one unidentified student. "I'll never hitch again."

Those who approved of thumbing had always gotten good rides with friendly, helpful people.

"It's the fastest, cheapest, friendliest way to go!" said one girl, as she stuck out her thumb for her next free ride.

"Hitchin a ride. . ." as the old song goes, is no joke. To some people its their only way to get around Amherst, not to mention the world.

University Professors Criticize Appointment Of Dean Allen

The MSP-AAUP today urged President Wood to rescind the appointment of Dwight Allen as Academic Advisor to the president. Dwight Allen is currently serving as Dean of the School of Education.

The MSP-AAUP in a telegram to President Wood called for the submission of Dean Allen's name along with those of faculty members to the Faculty Senate to advise and consent. Furthermore, the MSP-AAUP questioned whether Dean Allen's academic views were not in sharp contrast to those of the majority of faculty on the Amherst campus.

The telegram called for an end to unilateral decison making and urged the president to consult with Faculty on Matters of Academic Governance.

"Superloop" Allows For More Frequent, Wider Bus Service

By AVIS YUNI

The Student Senate Transit Service (SSTS) has initiated a new Superloop route this semester to allow for more frequent service. It has also initiated two-way radios in the buses, a 6 a.m. shuttle, and a 13 Lot Express, Jeff McCormick, Assistant Student Manager of the SSTS and Autopool, told the Collegian recently.

The SSTS has combined all the individual routes of last year into two no-fare main routes, explained McCormick. One, the North Amherst-Stadium-Campus Shuttle route covers Tufton and North Villages, Southwest, Engineering, Lots 13, 26, and 31, etc.

Essentially all the routes between Belchertown Road and Sunderland have now been combined in the Superloop, McCormick said. All the individual routes covering Sunderland, Orchard Hill, Southwest, and Belchertown Road (Rolling Green) are still there as separate units but they are combined within one large Superloop which can be picked up at any point.

The beginning-end point of each leg of the loop leads into the next one, and the sign on the bus changes as it starts each new leg.

McCormick said the Superloop is designed so that at peak times on both main routes, between 7:30-9:30 a.m. and 3:30-5:30 p.m. service will be provided on campus every ten minutes.

At other times, on class days,there will be service every 20 or 30 minutes until 11 p.m. The route requires more driving for the bus driver but gives students the option of taking more than one bus.

The Superloop idea originated during the summer and was decided upon by the student management and the Urban Mass Transportation Association (UMTA) which funded the federal grant. It takes 110 minutes for one entire Superloop to be completed.

To allow the SSTS to shift buses around to keep the system moving as much on time as possible, the buses and SSTS headquarters now have a two-way radio system.

When a driver changes a leg on the Superloop he-she must call into the SSTS office which will inform him if he's running fast or slow. With the radios, McCormick explained, the SSTS can keep a constant check on the buses and warn the drivers of tragic conditions, break-downs, overloads, etc.

Fourteen buses are now in operation during peak periods, and eight or nine during the other times. On the Superloop eleven buses run at the peak times and six during the rest. Four buses are constantly running on the North Amherst-Campus Shuttle route as of October 1st when one was added to the original three.

The SSTS expanded its service this summer, McCormick said, by obtaining three more large transit coaches under the federal grant. The Student Senate also acquired two more school buses to be used for special trips.

Each day from 6-7:15 a.m., the SSTS provides the 6 a.m. shuttle for employees of UMass. Started two weeks ago it runs from outlying parking lots to service areas on campus. Usually it is used exclusively by dining commons employees.

A new 13 Lot Express was started on September 26th to bring people from the center of campus directly to 13 Lot without going through the Southwest route.

Running via the Physical Plant, it is an afternoon route leaving from the Campus Center Circle approximately every ten minutes from 2:30-5:30.

A special trip service for campus groups is operated by the SSTS. In general, SATF funded groups may obtain buses with the money paid, used to cover operating costs.

McCormick said that the service transports Northampton Volunteers and Boltwood to Belchertown, JOE, science clubs, athletic teams and clubs, Hispanic language groups, picnics, etc.

An auto pool is also maintained by the SSTS, McCormick said. This maintains and dispatches vehicles for such things as bringing the Collegian copy to Ware to be printed.

Over 7,000 people a day are using the bus service stated McCormick, so it's running more full this year than last. Upwards of 100 employees-all students and all part-time, operate the system of about 23 buses.

The bus system has expanded greatly through the UMTA grant, McCormick explained.

holiday pay. Both non-student and student part-time employees are paid from the same financial sources. Neither student nor non-student workers are protected by the union nor do they have collective bargaining powers.

When questioned about the discrepancy in pay rates between student and non-student part-time workers, Mr. Richard Dent, Director of Financial Aid, replied that, "Part of the problem is, how do you spread the money? With a limited amount of money, a twenty per cent increase in pay would be twenty less students hired."

Dent further explained that non-student part-time workers can be expected to adhere to an hourly schedule while the student part-time workers' schedule must remain flexible in order that he or she meet their academic requirements.

According to Dent, the problem is historical. Sometime back around 1967 the work study programs came into effect. Students employed by these programs were paid what was then the minimum wage of $1.25. The pay rate has increased since then only when the minimum wage has been increased. There is no mandate written into the work study program to provide that students receive wages to those of full time or non-student part-time employees but the pay differential for a student job, has to be related to the job description.

Financial Aid will be conducting a study of student pay rates sometime in October.

Resource Center May Be The Place To Go

By KAREN GORDON

If you are a commuter, graduate student or married student and you have a problem, the new non-resident Student Resource Center may be the place to go. The Center which is headed by Dr. Helen Hill and which just opned this semester, is designed to serve the needs of the communitng population. It will begin by coordinating existing services such as the Health Center and the Career Placement and Counseling Office in order to make them more useful to commuters. Eventually the center plans to develop its own programs, such as a social center for married students and their spouses.

Dr. Helen Hill, the new director of the center feels that the most important thing is to make the center responsive to the needs of the students. She will be involved in research on the commuter population to determine their needs and what they want out of the center. There will be an advisory board consisting of students, faculty and administration. They will help run the center.

Since this project is very new and since Dr. Hill has just arrived, the programs are still in the planning stages. The center is also awaiting the election of the commuter assembly which it plans to work with closely. The office is presently located in 229 Whitmore. Dr. Hill plans eventually to move to a location which is more in the mainstream of traffic, since she hopes more students will drop in informally to talk abbout their problems.

Dr. Hill is from the West Virginia Institute of Technology where she was Associate Dean of Students and an Associate Professor of Education. She holds a doctorate in Higher Education and Student Personnel and has held several major positions at colleges throughout the country.

New Communication Program Offered

By ALISON SIMCOX

The Communication Skills Center in Bartlett Hall has initiated a program this fall to help students with specific communication problems. Some of the servces offered are:

- term paper assistance
- tutorial service
- bilingual program-pronunciation and translational problems
- independent study
- reading comprehension
- grammar structural errors
- listening comprehension
- note-taking and outline development

Ms. Shirley DeShields, a staff member for the program, explained its focus and purpose.

Behavioral objectives are being examined to develop criteria for acceptable and non-acceptable performance with an emphasis on serving the needs of the individual student.

Many students with communicative deficiencies have become super-sensitized to the mechanics of the English language and tend to ignore the content of a paper or the purpose of a course.

The programs offered relieve the instructor as well as the student. They deal with grammatical errors, leaving the instructor to deal with the content and the student free from penalization from structural errors.

The bilingual program has been set up to deal with students whose progress has often been impeded by the language problem.

Skills Activity Modules (SAM) are packets which attempt to isolate skill areas. Each includes objectives, suggestion of activities for the development of a skill; for example note-taking, library use, and a criterion reference test to check progress.

Ms. DeShields expressed a hope for incoming funds to obtain audio-visual equipment. The entire program, which is makeshift at present, needs more lab facilities.

Faculty as well as students, which number about 40, make use of the lab. The lab is in room 310 Bartlett and is usually open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Judge Scott Reveals More Shady Decisions

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)-Judge Margaret Scott testified under oath yesterday that another judge, Franklin Flaschner of the Newton District Court, tried to influence her decision on a case in late 1971.

Speaking before the Massachusetts Executive Council in the third day of hearings on a petition to remove Judge Jerome P. Troy as presiding justice of the Dorchester District Court, Mrs. Scott said she never reported the incident to the Supreme Judicial Court because the judicial code of ethics at that time did not require it.

The judicial code was changed in 1972 after an incident in which Superior Court Judge Vincent Brogna allegedly continued a case at the request of Judge Edward J. DeSaulnier Jr. Brogna was censured and DeSaulnier was disbarred by the Supreme Judicial Court. DeSaulnier later resigned from the bench at the request of Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

According to Mrs. Scott, who also sits in the Dorchester Court, the case involved Kevin Cummings, a leader of a group called The People First, TPF, which had been working for some time to have Troy removed from the bench.

Cummings was serving a suspended sentence from a case which had been tried by Troy, and was scheduled in late 1971 for a probation surrender hearing which could have returned him to jail because of violation of the conditions of the suspended sentence.

"Flaschner called me to his office and told me the hearing should not be held at that time," Mrs. Scott said. "He told me there had been a lot of trouble at the Dorchester court," referring to the efforts by TPF and affidavits that had been brought to him by law students stating that Troy was denying defendant rights.

Asked by the council whether she thought Flaschner overstepped his bounds in asking her not to hold the hearing, Mrs. Scott refused to answer, but did say, "I hate to say these things-but I don't want to see an honorable like Judge Troy go down for no good cause."

ROTC Pleased With Enrollment

By MIKE KNEELAND

The Commanding Officers of the Army and Air Force ROTC units on campus say they are pleased with this year's enrollment.

"We're not interested in pressuring any students into our unit," said Army Colonel Bulloch. "We were expecting a lesser enrollment than we got."

Col. Bulloch said there are 22 freshman in this year's class compared to 47 freshman last year. "We're very pleased with the attitudes of the students," he said.

Colonel Fisher said there are 60 freshman taking Air Force ROTC this year. There were no freshman in his unit last year since the future of ROTC on campus was not a certainty.

"We're doing pretty well," he said. "We've had some more adds than drops."

Both military officers said they have not been harassed by any students this year. They said many of the students stop and talk informally with them.

Neither ROTC unit is attracting many veterans. Col. Fisher said many veterans are too old to qualify for a ROTC scholarship.

Since academic credit has been restored to the ROTC units, the officers say it is unlikely that their units wll be disestablished.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif., has spent most of the past two weeks thinking about food.

That's what happens, he told a news conference yesterday when you have to eat on $1.25 a day-as many Americans do.

Tunney began Sept. 21 a two-week stint of spending only $1.25 a day for food. The figure was suggested by an elderly witness at hearings conducted by Tunney in California on high food prices.

Witnesses said that's how much many retired persons have to spend on food.

"I learned that I don't like it," Tunney said. "You spend almost all your time thinking about food."

Tunney, who is 6 feet, 2 inches tall and weighed 180 pounds when he began his experiment, has lost about 6 pounds since, he said.

Flow Of Russian Jews Continues Despite Austrian Edict

By ROON LEWALD
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP)-Schoenau transit camp went on processing Soviet Jews emigrating to Israel Wednesday as Austrian officials pondered "technical problems" involved in their decision to close the center.

There was no word on when it will close, but sources said the government was unlikely to do anything concrete until alternative arrangements are made for the Jews to move through Austria.

What those arrangements will be was anybody's guess, officials said.

About 100 Soviet Jews arrived in Vienna Wednesday aboard the Chopin Express, hijacked last Friday by two Arab terrorists who later released three captive Jews and one Austrian in return for Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's pledge to close the camp about 70 miles south of Vienna.

Austrian police guards armed with machine guns patrolled nearby platforms as the emigrants were welcomed with the Hebrew greeting "shalom" by a waiting Jewish Agency official. The emigrants were taken by bus to Schoenau Castle amid strict security precautions.

Jewish Agency officials do not disclose the number of arrivals and departures at the camp but they have placed the average at 40-120 a day.

Normal procedure is for emigrants to remain there as briefly as possible and Wednesday's arrivals were expected to leave for Israel on an El Al jetliner in 24 hours.

President Nixon at a news conference in Washington urged Kreisky to reverse his decision, adding: "We simply cannot have governments, large or small, give in to blackmail by terrorist organizations."

Israeli Premier Golda Meir's government met in Jerusalem to consider the Schoenau situation. It issued an appeal for a reversal of Kreisky's pledge.

During an unsuccessful plea to Kreisky in Vienna on Tuesday, Mrs. Meir appeared unimpressed with an Austrian proposal to place the camp under the auspices of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

TEL AVIV -- PROTESTING AUSTRIAN ACTION--Young Israelis protest Sunday outside the Austrian embassy in Tel Aviv after the Austrian government said it would close facilities in Austria for the movement of Soviet Jews to Israel. The Austrian decision followed an incident in which two Arabs hijacked a train and took hostages including Soviet Jews in transit to Israel. The sign reading "1938" refers to the year in which Austria surrendered to Hitler.

Watergate Marches On

Segretti Admits To Pranks

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Donald H. Segretti Wednesday catalogued his inventory of tricks against 1972 Democratic presidential candidates, apologized and said they have no place in election campaigns.

"I don't call any of the things I did at that time pranks," Segretti told the Senate Watergate committee. "I don't think there should be pranks or dirty tricks or whatever you call it in the political system."

Segretti, a 32-year-old lawyer from Los Angeles, said he was recruited for his activities by Dwight L. Chapin, then President Nixon's appointments secretary. Segretti said also he kept in frequent contact with Chapin.

He said he had agents in a half dozen states and personally employed diverse tactics like phony letters containing faked charges, planting a stink bomb in campaign headquarters, inserting classified advertisements under ficticious names and distributing signs, bumper stickers and pamphlets under the names of non-existent committees.

At one point he said he paid 11 persons and later agreed the figure was 28. He said his people operated in Florida, New Hampshire, California, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Washington, D.C.

Were you aware it is unlawful to send salacious and libelous letters?" asked Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii.

"I'm certainly aware of it now," said Segretti, who earlier this week pleaded guilty to three misdemeanor counts stemming from a false mailing.

Segretti said he told then-presidential counsel John W. Dean III about his activities last October when the Washington Post was preparing to publish a number of details. After the story was published, the White House dismissed comment on the allegations.

Segretti said the original federal Watergate prosecutors asked him no questions about how he was paid when he appeared before the grand jury, although they had discussed it briefly beforehand. A juror brought up the question, Segretti said.

He corroborated testimony that he was paid $45,000 in salary and expenses by Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's personal lawyer, after being hired by Chapin and Gordon Strachan, another White House aide. He had been friends with the two men while attending the University of Southern California.

Segretti was the second witness in the "dirty tricks" phase of the Watergate hearings. Committee staffers said the next witnesses will be Robert M. Benz and Douglas Kelly, two Segretti agents in Florida.

CBS carried Wednesday's hearings live after the other two commercial networks dropped out of rotating coverage. But CBS said it did not plan to carry the Thursday session.

Segretti said as far as he knows President Nixon was ignorant of his activities, even though he kept appointments secretary Chapin informed every step of the way.

He agreed with the assessment that his entire sabotage operation-extensive as it was-"had the weight of a feather" in its effect on the election outcome.

While he conducted his activities from the last half of 1971 until the Democratic National Convention in 1972, Segretti used aliases. Once, in New Hampshire, he didn't and he said he was pulled out of the state.

"Who thought up the dirty tricks?" he was asked.

"I think to a major extent I did," said Segretti.

Not long after Segretti finished a 10-page prepared statement that ticked off a long list of hoaxes, the committee itself was hoaxed. A telephone caller's report of a bomb in the hearing room caused Chairman Sam. J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C. to break off the morning session. No bomb was found.

Segretti denied having anything to do with the so-called "Canuck letter," an apparent dirty trick that was a factor in the political undoing of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie. But Segretti said most of his activities went toward helping derail the Maine Senator's candidacy.

Peking Wary Of U.S.-U.S.S.R. Manuverings

By JOHN RODERICK
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP)-Three months after an American liaison office opened in Peking and despite continued people-to-people exchanges, the improvement in U.S.-Chinese relations appears to have slowed. The reason seems to be growing Chinese anxiety over moves by the United States and the Soviet Union to draw closer together, particularly over Western Europe.

This theme was first sounded by Premier Chou En-lai on Aug. 24 in his report to the 10th Communist party congress in which he saw a Western plot to free the Russians in Europe for adventures against China.

That line of thinking has been repeated in a series of editorials and was raised again in the speech Tuesday of Deputy Foreign Minister Chiao Kuan-hua before the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

Peking's references to U.S.-China relations, which formerly were described in warm terms, have been muted since the party congress. Chou dismissed them in a single sentence, saying they "have been improved somewhat."

Chou used the past tense in his long address, observing that China "started to improve her relations with the United States" on the basis of peaceful coexistence.

Allying Chinese fears presumably will be one of the major objectives of U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger when he goes to Peking later this month.

Agnew Jury Briefed By Judge; Nixon Comments On Proceedings

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon acknowledged that bribery and kickback allegations against Vice President Spiro T. Agnew are "serious and not frivolous" but declared yesterday that the vice president should be presumed innocent.

Noting the "rather white-hot atmosphere" swirling around Agnew, Nixon said he hopes Agnew "will not be tried and convicted in the press and on television by leaks and innuendoes."

And he said he had never asked the vice president to resign.

The President defended Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Peterson, the chief Agnew target in the controversy over news leaks on a Baltimore grand jury investigation of Agnew.

"If I did not support Mr. Peterson's handling of the investigation," Nixon said, "he would have been removed at this time."

Nixon ranged over other foreign and domestic issues in the half-hour news conference, his third in five weeks, as he said:

-Austrian chancellor Bruno Kreisky should reconsider his decision closing special transit facilities for Jews leaving the Soviet Union because "We simply cannot have governments, small or large, give in to international blackmail by terrorist groups."

-Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will visit Peking Oct. 26-29 to pursue trade and other issues of mutual concern. Kissinger also will visit Japan while in the Far East.

-He will travel to Europe himself "in three or four months" and also to Japan before the end of next year with the precise timing of the trips dependent both on foreign consultations and on "my responsibilities on the domestic front."

-Three declarations of principle, rather than one, are being negotiated for signing during his visits to Europe and Japan. One is intended to update the Atlantic Alliance, another deals specifically with economic issues and the third is a more general declaration to "breathe new life and new purpose and new spirit" into relations with U.S. allies.

-On the political scene, he won't endorse any Republican contender to succeed him in the White House until "they have been tried in the field of battle" in the presidential primaries.

-He wouldn't discuss possible changes in his economic game plan and declined to take sides in a debate over whether tha nation's unemployment goal should be four per cent or five per cent.

The President was smiling and appeared relaxed when he appeared in the crowded White House briefing room on less than an hour's notice. Unlike his previous two news conferences on Sept. 5 and Aug. 22 which were televised live, Wednesday's session was filmed and taped for later broadcast.

Agnew questions dominated the news conference. The President, asked whether he thought a vice president should resign if indicted, said Agnew's response-that he won't resign-"is an altogether proper one."

The vice president, Nixon added, "is elected by all the people. He holds that office in his own right and the decision as to whether he should resign is for him to make."

"I have never asked him to resign," the President said in response to another question. "I have always told him...this matter is one for him to decide."

He said that Agnew "has denied to me privately on three occasions" that he is guilty of the allegations leveled against him. And he said he is "certainly not" doing any contingency planning in the event Agnew leaves office.

Nixon noted that the allegations "do not relate in any way to his activities as vice president..." Then he continued:

"...I would hope that in this rather white-hot atmosphere which...has developed since the vice president's case came to public attention, that he will not be tried and convicted in the press and on television by leaks and innuendoes and the rest.

Judge Hoffman Discredits News Leaks

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

BALTIMORE (AP)-The Baltimore federal grand jury investigating Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was warned by a judge Wednesday to disregard news stories involving the inquiry because they "frequently are wholly or partially inaccurate."

U.S. District Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman, specially assigned to handle the Agnew probe, summoned the jury to an extraordinary public hearing after meeting privately for an hour and a half with lawyers for Agnew and the Justice Department.

At the same time, supporting Agnews efforts to find the sources of news leaks, Hoffman gave the vice president's lawyers broad authority to subpeona Justice Department officials, newsmen and anyone else they feel could help them get this information.

The judge's unusual order, noting there appeared "sufficient cause," said Agnew's counsel "may take the deposition of such persons as they deem appropriate and necessary upon at least 48 hours' notice to the Department of Justice in each instance."

Hoffman also directed clerks of district courts anywhere in the United States to "issue such subpoenas as may be required."

The depositions are to be sealed and not made part of any public file, Hoffman said, in enjoining Agnew and the government from disclosing the names of those subpoenaed or discussing their testimony.

He lectured jurors for 18 minutes on their responsibilities in investigating crimes against the United States no matter who it involves, cautioned them to keep their work secret even after it is completed, and directed them to disregard personal political views in the interest of justice.

Hoffman, a Virginia judge brought into the case after all nine federal judges in Maryland disqualified themselves because of friendship with Agnew, said news reporters "are integral and necessary parts of our lives" who sometimes stray from the truth.

Agnew has denounced news leaks about the investigation blaming the Justice Department sources, and has labeled "damned lies" published allegations that he conspired to extort bribes from contractors, sometimes in the guise of political campaign contributions.

In a speech last week, the vice president singled out Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Peterson as the source of damaging leaks. He alleged that the Justice Department official was embarassed by failure in Watergate and was trying to make Agnew a scapegoat to restore his own reputation.

President Nixon defended Peterson Wednesday, saying "if I did not approve Mr. Petersen's handling of the investigation he would be removed at this time."

Nixon added he had been briefed on the probe and the allegations against Agnew "are serious and not frivolous."

Tower Buckles; Five Killed

ROWLEY, IOWA (AP) - Five men were killed when the 2,000-foot broadcasting tower of Cedar Rapids station KCRG buckled and fell yesterday.

Thomas McNeil, administrator at People's Memorial Hospital in Independence, seven miles from here in northeast Iowa, said he was told by ambulance drivers that two others suffered fractures. He added there were probably "four or five others" who were injured.

One witness said several of the victims were on the tower when it fell and were thrown into nearby fields and ditches.

McNeil said workers from the broadcasting station and others from a construction firm were at the site of the transmitter, erected in 1967 and one of the first of the 2,000-foot variety in the state.

Chilling Crime Mimics Movie Scene

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Two days after a television movie depicted teenagers in Boston setting derelicts afire, six youths forced a young woman to douse herself with gasoline and burned her to death.

Evelyn Wagler, 24, who moved here from Chicago just five days ago, was accosted by the youths Tuesday night as she carried a can of gasoline to her stalled car, police said.

Before she died several hours later, she told police she was beaten by the gang when she first refused their order to pour the gasoline on herself.

Dazed by the attack, she said she got up and when she poured the gas one of the youths threw a match at her and she was engulfed in flames. She suffered second the third degree burns over her entire body.

Police had conflicting statements concerning a motive to the slaying.

Police Commissioner Robert J. DiGrazia told a news conference there was no apparent motive. However, the Boston Herald American quoted other police sources as saying Mrs. Wagler told officers that the youths ordered her to leave the area "because we don't want any whites here."

Mrs. Wagler is white. She told police her assailants were black. Roxbury is a predominantly black section of Boston.

After she was set afire, Mrs. Wagler rolled on the ground in a futile attempt to put out the flames. She then ran 400 yards and into a liquor store.

"Her clothes were all afire and just falling off her to the ground in bits and pieces," said Fred Courtney, a clerk at the store. "She wasn't hollering or crying, she just came in and asked me to 'please call an ambulance.'

"Then she turned and walked out, as calmly as she walked in," he said. "Two of the customers ran after her and started ripping her clothes off."

Courtney said Mrs. Wagler was burned so badly it was impossible to make out her features.

"Her hair was on fire and her face was black," he said.

"It was amazing she could even talk. Her clothes were smoldering, her skin was peeling. God, that poor girl."

Mrs. Wagler's car had run out of gas earlier Tuesday four blocks from where she lived with five other young women, all of whom police said knew each other and had done social work in Boston and Chicago ghetto areas.

About 9 p.m., police said, she left the apartment and went to a nearby station where she got a two-gallon can of gas. The attack then came as she walked to her car.

"We feel there were witnesses," said Police Deputy Supt. Leroy Chase, but none have come forward.

Homicide chief Jerome P. McCallum said the lack of witnesses was hard to believe since the attack occurred at a "respectable hour on a well lighted avenue. . ."

He said Mrs. Wagler, who is separated from her husband "came here to seek work and live with friends."

Police also were disturbed with the showing last Sunday night of a television movie entitled "Fuzz," in which two Boston teenagers set fire to derelicts after dousing them with gasoline.

"It's disturbing," DiGrazia said, "that there was a movie shown on TV Sunday night that featured a criminal supposedly operating in Boston who threw gasoline on his victims and then lighted them on fire.

Roxbury Incident Prompts Legislative Outcry

BOSTON (AP) - Two state legislators from the Roxbury area have called for increased police protection in the wake of "a recent wave of violent crime" in their districts.

Reps. Royal L. Bolling Sr. and Bolling Jr. said they had personally received anonymous threatening phone calls this week, following the latter's participation in a Sunday march to protest the crimes.

Bolling Sr. called Tuesday night's murder of a woman who was set afire "the ultimate in cruel and senseless crime upon innocent persons."

Bolling said the incidents of violence threatened to make Blue Hill Avenue "a desert wasteland" as merchants grow increasingly fearful.

Ultimately the people who suffer are those who live and shop in the area, said Bolling Jr. They are paying the costs of increased protection and security that merchants are investing in.

Bolling Sr. said the next step would be to request a meeting with Boston Mayor Kevin White and Police Commissioner William DiGrazia to discuss the possiblity of beefing up police patrols in the area or putting on paid civilian patrols.

He added that a list of some 150 blacks eligible for appointment as police officers has been available for the past three months during which time Boston has not requested any new police.

"By the time Boston decides to call those on the eligible list," he said, "the suburban areas may have already taken many of them."

We Told You So... Expect Higher Gas Prices

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Consumers were put on notice yesterday to expect another round of gasoline price increases at the gas pump "in due course."

Director John T. Dunlop said the Cost of Living Council is committed to granting such an increase to retail gasoline dealers to reflect price hikes at the wholesale level announced in the last few days.

The council Friday approved increases ranging from one to 2.5 cents per gallon in retail gasoline prices. Since then, three major oil companies have announced new increases in their wholesale prices, which the dealers are prohibited from passing along automatically to motorists.

Council officials also disclosed that price increases are pending on about 1,460 different products as proposed by major firms under the Phase 4 anti-inflation guidelines.

The council Tuesday approved increases for soaps, detergents, a wide variety of paper products and auto tires, although the tire increase was only about half of what major rubber companies had asked.

Council officials said they have acted on about 700 price increase proposals to date. The proposals sought an over-all average increase of about 3.8 per cent in prices, and the council approved increases averaging about 2.5 per cent.

Another council official said the bulk of the wholesale price increases may be about over.

"The Shape Of Things"

By JERRY BUCK
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — From a male chauvinist point of view, you could say that "The Shape of Things" is an improvement to the shape of television.

"The Shape of Things" is television's first all-female show. Not just in front of the camera. But the writers, the directors, the producer, the choreographer and the musical director are women.

Of course, continuing the chauvinist view, behind every successful woman stands a man. In this case it's George Schlatter, the executive producer.

The musical comedy special, set for Friday, Oct. 19, on CBS, stars Phyllis Diller, Lee Grant, Valerie Harper, Lynn Redgrage, Joan Rivers and Brenda Vaccaro. Bobby Riggs appears in the role of "token male."

Schlatter contends he is not calling the shots. Carolyn Raskin, the producer and codirector, and Miss Grant, who also codirects, agree.

Miss Raskin, who worked with Schlatter on "Laugh-In," gives him the credit for creating and selling the show.

Casting your ballot is like . . . getting into Fd. Sci. 101.

This DOES Compute!

To coin a too oft-used phrase, "This is a computerized world." Chances are, if you are a math or science student, you have become well aquainted with the computerized world of the University.

Besides the well-known Oscar located in the bowels of Whitmore, the University operates another computer center in the Graduate Research Center. It's office name is the University Computing Center. It's operation is independent of the one located in Whitmore, but there is a committee which is now studying the possibility of combining efforts to better serve the University community.

This 5 million array of machinery is used for a number of purposes, the principle two being education and research. While 40 per cent of the computer's tax usage comes from course and project related sources, close to 50 per cent of the computer's time is used by professors, students, and others in research.

The University owns only a portion of the computing equipment, while seventy percent of the machinery is rented at a cost of $38,000 a month. The U.C.C. charges a rate of $5 per hour for the use of one of 150 terminals which are scattered across campus.

When sitting at the teletype machine, it is hard to believe that there are humans behind it all. Dr. Wogrin, U.C.C. Director, and his vast staff are all very cooperative. Not only was this reporter given the .50 cents tour of the computing center, but was also shown statistics and treated with genuine concern.

The computer center needs to be

Faculty Group Asks Wood To Rescind Allen Decision

AMHERST, Mass. AP - UMass faculty group urged president Robert Wood yesterday to rescind his appointment of education school dean Dwight Allen as his top academic advisor.

In a telegram to Wood, the Faculty Union Coalition questioned whether Allen's academic views are in accord with those of a majority of the UMass faculty.

Wood announced the appointment of Allen, head of the School of Education since 1968. The coalition also asked Wood to submit Allen's name and those of other possible appointees to the post for Faculty Senate approval.

State Views Judge's Role

BOSTON (AP) - The Senate enacted and sent to Gov. Francis W. Sargent yesterday three measures, including one that would allow a judge wider latitude in examining the prejudices of a prospective juror.

Also receiving speedy enactment, just a day after final passage in the Senate, was a measure to allow certain banks to open savings accounts on which final passage in the Senate, was a measure to allow certain banks to open savings accounts on which checks could be drawn.

Receiving reenactment, after being returned by the governor, was a measure that would permit open burning for one month a year under certain controls.

The bill was sent to the governer for a second time, after incorporating some but not all of the controls proposed by Sargent.

A bill to allow state employees to take half their accumulated sick leave pay upon retirement, and another to allow appeals judges to participate in the judges' pension plan, received final approval.

Initial approval was given to a measure furthering testing, treatment and care of children who are susceptible to sickle cell anemia.

Receiving final approval and sent to the House was a bill that would facilitate a study of an infant death syndrome known as "crib death."

Maine Labor Leader Attacks Restrictions

PORTLAND, Maine (AP)-Maine's top labor leader charged Wednesday that the state's stringent environmental laws have ignored the economic needs of the workingman.

"The quality of the human condition is as much a part of one's environment as the state of the soil, air and water," said Benjamin J. Dorsky, president of the Maine State Federated Labor Council.

In his opening address to 200 delegates attending the council's ninth annual convention, Dorsky said the Maine Board of Environmental Protection. BEP has failed to achieve a proper balance between the economy and the environemnt.

Labor leaders attending the convention have expressed dissatisfaction with Maine's 1970 landmark Site Selection Law, giving the BEP a virtual veto over industrial development proposals which may be an adverse impact on the environment.

The criticism has been particularly strong among building trades leaders who say the law has inhibited new construction throughout the state, thus preventing construction employes from working full-time.

In the past, representatives of both the council and the building trades have appeared at BEP hearings to testify in favor of proposed oil refineries at Searsport and Eastport.

The labor council, which is the Maine affiliate of the AFL-CIO, is expected to call for an amendment to the Site Selection Law which would require the BEP to consider economic factors, such as local unemployment, along with environmental ones.

Dorsky laid the groundwork for such a proposal by saying that the BEP "must not forget that there are people living on the land--people who need sustenance and people who need earning power."

He also urged that organized labor be represented on the BEP to insure that the interests of the economy and the environmental are balanced.

Turnpike Must Meet Environmental Standards

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - Further widening of the Maine Turnpike will require approval of the Board of Environmental Protection, Atty. Gen. Jon A. Lund ruled Wednesday.

He said a six-mile stretch of the turnpike that's already being widened at the southern end of the toll road below Portland isn't subject to retroactive review of the board.

But future widening must meet requirements of the 1970 Site Selection Law, according to Lund's 13-page opinion. That statute gives the board authority to block any development that might substantially harm the environment.

Lund also said "there is substantial doubt as to whether the Maine Turnpike Authority may spend toll revenues on the development."

Frank Howe, executive director of the authority, wasn't available for comment but had indicated some time ago that a court ruling might be sought if Lund said the Site Selection Law applied to the turnpike.

The Natural Resources Council, Maine's largest environmental group, initiated the inquiry into the applicability of the Site Selection Law to the turnpike widening several months ago.

At that time, the authority hired Portland attorney Roger Putnam to research the law and advise them as to his findings. Putnam concluded that the widening project was exempt from the Site Selection Law. The authority plans to widen the expressway from York to Scarborough - a total of 36 miles - in six-mile sections.

The authority plans to widen the expressway from York to Scarborough-a total of 36 miles-in six-mile sections. Construction of the first six miles started in 1971, and all work is expected to be completed by 1980. Funds for the work comes entirely from tolls collected from turnpike users.

Lund said the turnpike expansion comes under the Site Selection Law because it is a development which exceeds 20 acres of 60,000 square feet and is a "state" prject within the meaning of the law.

The first six-mile section of widening doesn't come under the law, he said, because work had begun and contractual commitments made prior to the time the statute applied to "state" projects, May 9, 1972.

The attorney general pointed out that the turnpike authority was created in 1941 to "maintain, operate and repair" the expressway and that tolls were to be set aside to pay off bonds issued to build the 102-mile turnpike.

UMass Approves Budget Request

BOSTON (AP)-Trustees of the University of Massachusetts have approved a 1975 maintenance budget request of $99.8 million, an increase of about two per cent over last year's request.

President Robert Wood described the request, approved by the trustees Wednesday as "a stable budget which gives top priority to achieving more efficiency in our operations and increasing the effectiveness of our educational programs."

Wood said future budgets for the university will no longer increase at the rate of those of the past decade.

"The university has almost arrived at a status of investment and resouces comparable to many private institutions of higher learning in Massachusetts," he said.

The trustees met in the Administration Building at the new UMass Boston campus at Columbia Point. The meeting was the first the trustees have held on the new campus.

Employment Hits High

BOSTON (AP)-Nonagricultural employment in New England reached an all-time high of 4,742,400 in August, the U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Statistics announced Wednesday.

The gain was more than 25,000 from July and up 114,000 from August 1972, Wendell D. MacDonald of the regional office said.

Manufacturing firms added nearly 28,000 workers. The increase in jobs since 1972 resulted from an increase of 50,000 manufacturing jobs and 64,000 in nonmanufacturing industries, the bureau said.

Seasonal factors in nonmanufacturing resulted in a loss of 4,200. The industries suffering chief employment losses were leather, food, printing and the federal government.

For the Starving Student Only

A $530.00 KLH BSR SYSTEM

for $399.50

If you are starving for great sounds, but most of the bread you have is the kind you eat, than read on.

THE SPEAKERS:

KLH Model 6 is probably the most widely accepted high performance speaker ever made. Using a 12" acoustic suspension driver for powerful lows and a 1¾" dome Tweeter for wide dispersion highs. The Model 6 can easily reproduce the extremes of the frequency range at very low distortion.

THE RECEIVER:

KLH Model 55 FM Stereo Receiver has all the power you will need to fill your room with lots of clean music. The performance of the FM tuner is super. Of course, the 55 has all sorts of other nice things going for it, like a center tuning meter, speaker switching, tape inputs, etc., etc.

THE CHANGER:

BSR 610 AWX is one of BSR's best changers. It has a 3½ lb. cast turntable and Synchronous motor for speed accuracy, low mass tone arm with damped cueing fitted with a Shure M93E elliptical cartridge. We also include a dust cover and real walnut base.

Stop in our new shop at 98 N. Pleasant St. in Amherst or 219 Main St. in Northampton and see how much stereo $399.50 will get you at Tripod Audio.

Harvard Goes Republican

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) Watergate has not deterred Harvard students from flocking to student political clubs affiliated with the major parties-clubs almost dead three and four years ago. And the Republicans probably will outnumber the Democrats.

"We thought Watergate would hurt us but it hasn't, not a bit," said Wallace Scwartz of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., president of the Harvard Young Republican Club.

Scwartz expects 350 members this year, up from 225 last year and sharply up from 35 in 1969, the year 186 students were arrested after occupying University Hall, and administration building.

The president of the Harvard Democratic Club, Peter Keretsky of Brookline, said he expects 200 or so members. Both clubs still have not completed this year's canvassing.

The Democrats were closer to extinction that the Republicans. Last year, Keretsky said, the Democratic Club could not have had more that two or three members.

Other students, however, were active in clubs organized on behalf of candidates.

"The Democratic Club died, really, after the invasion of Cambodia, though it had been noribund since the University Hall bust a year earlier," said Keretsky.

Keretsky was soliciting on behalf of the Chess Club at registration, next to the Republicans. He overheard many students ask if there was a Democratic Club. He and friends "interested in government" decided to start or revive one.

We found it was still on the books in the Dean's Office even though it couldn't have had more than two or three members last year.

A Hamburger Mess

By MARGIE COMBS

Police moved in with tear gas and trash bags yesterday in vain efforts to squash a violent clash occurring near the corner of Rt. 9 and University Drive.

They had been expecting the uprising for some time and were not prepared for it.

The incident was spurred by a new MacDonald courtesy busdriver, who took a very foolish wrong turn and ended up in the Hardee's parking lot.

What a mess. By the time the cops brought the screaming families under control, the bus was covered with chile and smashed french fires, and some zealous soul had written "Down with Clowns" all over the sides and back door in ketchup. A few 12-year-olds were temporarily drowned by squirting carbonated soda, but were taken on down to MacDonalds and pronounced starving on arrival. The manager let them loose in the kitchen to grab whatever they wanted.

The remains of the Mac courtesy bus, and its loyal occupants limped on down the road, and parked amid cheers from the home-front. The fuzz even allowed the bus to drive over the curb, and across the grass to avoid the jammed traffic at the entrance.

Luckily, the MacDonald courtesy ambulance was on hand due to a number of gory accidents in the parking lot, and zoomed him to the UMass infirmary. To everyone's relief the busdriver was fine after having his stomach pumped free of a stray Hardees Huskee. Later, he graciously accepted a quarter-pounder with cheese to fill up again.

To cover the bus repairs, the manager agreed to raise the prices of the Big Macs and hot apple pies. The customers are eagerly anticipating a whole fleet of buses, since the prices haven't gone down yet. In the meantime, Hardee's has posted several huskies at each corner of the Hardees' parking lot, in case that goofy driver slips up again.

Things have calmed down in the last 24 hours, but ugly rumors are beginning to fly. The latest concerns the ghastly possibility of a Burger King moving into the Mountain Farms Mall.

It smells like a few hamburgers are yet to be burnt!

Peace In Our Time?

Twentieth Century Liberalism has followed an unswerving collision course with disaster. Give a Liberal the power to implement his lofty ideals, and he will inevitably proceed to sabotage them, and place the blame on all those horrible reactionaries who didn't cooperate fully. All that talk about peace and democracy never seem to amount to much.

The notion of "Detente", of peaceful negotiations with the Communist powers, is another concept with just such a potential for backfire. Certainly, nobody in his or her right mind could possibly enter the world arena as a champion of World War III. And nobody looks forward to being labelled a 'Cold War relic.' Backyard construction of Fallout Shelters is a thing of the past. Everybody is for a "relaxing of tensions." You'd think that the new symbol of international peace would be an Anacin tablet. Even Richard Nixon, the old commie-hunter, has jumped on the bandwagon.

It is difficult to see through the rhetoric, the lavish state visits, and the Nobel Price acceptance speeches. But the stark, naked truth about "Detente" is that it is being conducted on a one-way street: we give, they take.

The Soviet Commissars are coming shopping in the land of the greedy exploiting capitalists. So are their counterparts in Red China. The nature of the transactions give us a substantial amount of evidence as to their benefit for the American people.

The land of the great collective farming paradise has yet to come up with the abundance that has been heralded since 1917. Crop failures are conveniently attributed to sabotage, bad weather, or the "Kulaks." But never fear, Ivan. Uncle Sam to the rescue! The Russians get the wheat they couldn't produce under Communism, and the American people get shortages and higher prices.

The same goes for computers, which are desperately needed in the Soviet Union, to help make some sense out of the maze of totalitarian bureaucracy, if such a task can be accomplished. But in return for American technology, the American people are given little more than Russian caviar and Polish Hams..

The greatest insult of all, however, is the pretense of "cultural exchanges." Such a policy, according to the Liberals, will open communications between the people of both countries in hopes of promoting better understanding of the respective cultures, and ultimately, the respective thought processes of American and Soviet cultures. But in reality, the entire program is another one-way hoax. Americans are being bombarded with Russian Circuses, ballerinas, well luxuried and obedient poets, and overglorified slick magazines. But the Russian and other Soviet controlled populations continue to live under a perpetual deep freeze with regards to information from the West. Censorship has never been relaxed. The State continues to feed its people a monopolized barrage of propaganda, the content of which can hardly be said to promote a better understanding of the American way of life. Writers and artists and dissidents are rarely sent to the firing squads these days, which is interpreted by the Liberals as a "thaw" in the ice of totalitarianism, but the population of 'mental' hospitals and Siberian 'exile' camps continue to abound with 'heretics.'

There are those especially the Communists, who are unalterably opposed to any attempts by the Americans to place the issue of Soviet totalitarianism on the peace table. The Communists, of course, feel that Detente should not stand in the way of their repressive aparatus. And many Liberals, such as Senator Fulbright, and non liberals, such as Henry Kissinger and American businessmen, feel that it's none of our business what goes on in the Soviet Union. We should, according to them, give the Communists what they want, with no strings attached. In the interest of World Peace.

But it is our business! If, in our pursuit of "peace," we provide the Soviet government we a means to consolidate its control of the minds of its subjects, we are not only hurting the chance for democracy in the Soviet Union, but we are also hurting the chances for peace in the world. Peace requires a genuine effort on the part of all people concerned. The future leaders of the Soviet Union are those very young people who are being denied anything but the official government view of the United States, a view which depicts Americans as being Imperalist, Fascist, Racists, and War Mongers. The American people, who are being called on to provide food, technical assistance, and other important values for the Soviet Union, have a perfect right to demand an end to totalitarianism as part of the package deal. This is not any idealistic meddling. This is a requirement of peace. But the Liberals, and their fellow travelers, such as President Nixon and Henry Kissinger, fail to perceive this. And because of this, we may just be on another collision course with disaster.

Father, Son And Lucky Host

Perhaps the greatest problem facing organized religion in the United States today is financial. The monetary chrunch has become so severe that it would not be surprising to see a "For Sale Skibiski Realtors" sign in front of Saint Patrick's Cathedral. Churches have tried bazaars, bingo, beano, raffles, bake sales, building funds and four or five collections a service, yet nothing seems to work. I suggest that there are a few very simple activities that will raise substantial funds for these organizations without contaminating their theologies.

Lucky Host. This idea can be best utilized by Catholic and Protestant denominations. It's scope could rival the state lottery in both prizes and contestants. Before the service parishioners or contestants will put a quarter in a basket at the entrance of the Church. At communion time one host would be marked with a colored dot; whoever got the marked host at the communion rail would win half the quarter. The color of the lucky host could vary with the parish. In an Irish neighborhood the host would green; in a hard-hat area it would be red, white and blue. A variation of this game can be played in synogogues with skull caps.

One of the major drawbacks of this scheme is that money can be collected only once during the service. This is almost sacreligious, and perhaps one of the reasons it is not used.

Continuous Collections. The hidden hope of every religious administrator is to have continuous collections. In fact, it is rumored that one of the secret agreements of the Vatican Council was to try this. Continuous collections have been tried before but the amount of money donated seemed to decrease with the number of times the baskets are passed. Now, there can be continuous collections and the money will flow in. The collection baskets must be reconstructed so that only one person can donate a quarter a a time; then they would be passed throughout the entire service. Whoever donated the last quarter when the organ music stops will win a percentage of the funds in the basket. This game is ideal because it does not interfere with the service; require any major construction and more than one basket can be passed at a time.

Spin the Star of David. The major drawback to this monetary windfall is voiced by conservatives who go to church to listen to the prayers. Spin the Star would require some construction in the local houses of worship. The floors of the temples will be refinished with red and black linoleum tiles; numbered from one to thirty-six and a zero and double zero. Instead of spinning a roulette wheel a crucifix or Star of David above the altar or arch will suffice. The rabbi or minister's spouse or a nun on roller skates would collect the losings and award the winners. Roller skates are necessary because some houses of worship are enormous and without this increased mobility the tempo of the game would be broken. The only serious drawback to this frivolity is that it undermines any attempt at worship.

Special weekends could be arranged to increase participation. Rosha-sha-na-na would be an oldies festival and Yom Kipper could be a fish fry. St. Patrick's day is festive enough without any changes.

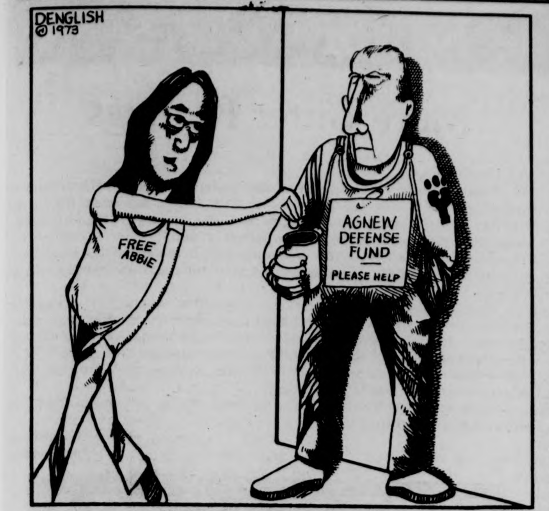
Letters To The Editor



"Right On, Man!"

A Prejudiced Fool

To The Editor:

While convincing another fantastic meal to digest and skimming through Tuesday's issue of the Collegian, my stomach and eyes were assaulted by another disgusting letter to the editor typifying why America has for so many years wallowed on its pools of ignorant discrimination and prejudice.

Timothy P. Walbridge claims in his letter "Women don't want to be on top of man. In the final analysis they want to be dominated not domineering." "In any relationship someone dominates" "They're (women) ball busters man, Watch Out!" Walbridge claims that men who "buy some of" female liberation do not respect themselves, they are not really "men." Well, Walbrain, as a man I often find it hard to accept some of what female liberations say, but I have enough pride and self-respect not to consider this an assault on my ego and vital parts. You I'm sure react in this same manner to Black Nationalism and pride. An attempt for a people that have been domineered and on the bottom for too long to reach an awareness of themselves. I have seen and heard the same reaction you have had to female liberation used on Third World people striving for an awareness and its disgusting. Your attitude towards women will only serve to make the situation between women and men worse. You are unself-respecting and a prejudiced fool and I hope this letter has served to warn some readers against idiots like you.

Let Them Eat Lettuce

To The Editor:

Once again our brilliant student senators have passed a choice piece of legislation. Yes, my fellow UMies, Big Brother Apostola and his 1984 coalition have decided to control our eating habits.

No longer do we have our endowed rights of freedom of selection. "Give us lettuce or give us death," or as Marie Shapoltsky of Hymies East Coast Deli said, "Let them eat lettuce."

We suggest a student choice of "To eat lettuce, or not to eat lettuce? that is the question."

Once more, oh great leaders, may we eat hamburgers, or must we eat Roumain Pastrami forever?

Chits Didn't Work

To The Editor:

Regarding the plan for the implimenting of option 3 in the dining commons, a friend of mine, a senior now, told me of a similar plan that he remembers from his freshman year.

The controversy at that time was the lack of meat at breakfast. Everyone had a 15 meal plan (there was no 10 meal plan) so almost everyone ate (or at least tried to) breakfast. To take up the added cost a chit program not unlike the one which is now beginning was started.

It lasted about two weeks, about three chits were sold.

The results of this last experiment put aside I have personally found so many holes in the program that it will ultimately serve only as another device by which Food Services will declare a tax loss.

Know Any Bawdy Songs?

To The Editor:

I am currently doing a study on bawdy songs on campus and am in need of some volunteers (willing or otherwise). If anyone (staff, faculty or student), knows any bawdy (i.e. erotic, dirty, profane, obscene, nasty, heretical) songs or lyrics I would like to record and-or talk about them. This is strictly for research, and I promise that none of the tapes will find their way to the Harvard Square underground market.

So, anyone who knows any songs, I implore, beg, and entreat to please call me after 7:00 p.m. at 1-369-4640, or write me P. O. Box 247, Conway, Ma. 01341, or leave a message with Professor George Carey of the English Dept., 474 Bartlett Hall, 545-0330.

I promise (in deference to the recent Supreme Court ruling), that no amount of torture will make me reveal the names of my informants. Thanx.

Respect Comes From Without

To The Editor:

Having read the rebuttals to the letter of Mr. Timothy Walbridge (Oct. 2 MDC) and noting that the only people who apprently took umbrage with his position were women, I am prompted to add my response to his singular philosophy.

I was inclined, at first reading, to treat the entire matter of wounded male dignity as a joke, and anyone who would write nearly 600 words as a joke certainly deserves his alugh. But as I read on, it was bourne in upon me that Mr. Walbridge is, I fear, totally in earnest.

I happen to dislike zealots of any kind. I have no patience with a zealot, and, indeed, my dislike of zealots may well be overzealous. Therefore, when Mr. Walbridge edges toward fanaticism in his exhortation to me to "get back on top where (I) belong, "I am somewhat annoyed. He would have me believe that if I suffer the female to trample, Amazonian, over what remains of my rights, life is lost, and my "phallus" will turn to Silly-Putty.

Mr. Walbridge warns that women will not stop with mere equaity, that they will demand superiority. Following his reasoning to it's logical conclusion, the only recourse for the poor, downtrodden male is to deny, and prevent equality. Mr. Walbridge would have made an excellent Carolina plantation owner.

Fear not! says the excellent Mr. Walbridge, for women, silly creatures, don't even want equality. In fact, they enjoy being dominated, which, I'm sure, came as good news to them. Or, as George Baer said of the immigrant mine workers, "They don't suffer. Why, they can't even speak English."

I did get some enjoyment out of the letter from the intrepid Mr. Walbridge. For instance, it amuses me to imagine this outraged individual, fire in his eyes, glaring balefully at "males groveling before a bunch of females. ." and looking, for all the world, like Moses on Mt. Sinai, seeing the Hebrew children prostrate before the Golden Calf. And all for "a smile, a date, or (as he so quaintly puts it) a piece."

Still, it is difficult to reconcile some parts of his letter with others.

At one point, Mr. Walbridge gives me the interesting news that I, and my compatriots, do not need women, which was certainly disappointing news to me, and, I hope, to any friends that I flatter myself exist among women of my acquaintance. Certainly, no one likes to be told that her friend doesn't need her.

But in the next sentence, Mr. Walbridge turns around and proclaims that, while men don't need women, (a fair opening argument if he were going on to extol the merits of Gay Liberation) women need men (which is surely final as regards Lesbianism).

Mr. Walbridge also errs, I fear, in his contention that, if women truly desire Liberation, they should pay for their own meals, drinks, and open their own doors. I am not here to put forward the case for Womens Liberation; that is in the province of those much more able. Still it seems to me that the solution must surely go a little deeper than Mr. Walbridge would suggest.

Mr. Walbridge, it seems, is in the grips of a mentality which does not admit the possibility of compromise. It is purely US or THEM, which strikes a familiar chord.

Mr. Walbridge made one statement to which I could possibly acquiesce. "In any relationship someone dominates." Very good, Mr. Walbridge. That may be true. But why must it be the man in every case? Again, no compromise, no possibility that, in some individual case a woman could conceivably have a more forceful, capable intellect which would make her logically dominant over a bumbling incompetent. No, be he nothing but an amorphous mass, he is a man, and is therefore God's annointed. What nonsense.

So we come finally to the plea, or demand, of Mr. Walbridge. Respect Yourself! (Man)

Self-respect could justifiably be labelled the Curse of Humanity, for it naturally exalts oneself, and tends to decrease the possibility of care and concern for others. It may be very well to have a fine opinion of oneself, but to what end? It is like paying money to yourself. No matter how you look at your account books, you aren't any better off than before.
